That fall, he went to the infirmary for an examination. He was then told, to his shock, that the university doctors would not let him play baseball. The doctors' opinion was that baseball, particularly where Healy was a catcher, is still a contact sport and the risk of injury to his kidney was too great.

"This I didn't buy," said Healy, and he was determined to fight the decision.

Healy's medical situation was sent out to doctors around the country for opinions on the possibility of him playing ball. The opinions were not received until January, and most stated unequivocably that Healy should not be allowed to play baseball.

Still, Healy did not give up. "The thing that really kept me going was that my parents were behind me all the way," he said. He went to vice-chancellor Robert Gage, was turned down, but arranged another meeting which included John, his parents, baseball coach Dick Bergquist, and a university attorney.

John and his parents were finally able to convince Gage to let him play. John signed a waiver clearing the university of any responsibility, and baseball again became a part of John Healy's life.

The special pad was developed by Head Trainer Vic Keedy. Healy straps it around his waist and it protects his lower back without interfering with his baseball play. He refuses to allow it to bother him, saying he never even worries about hurting his kidney while playing ball.

Other injuries have hampered Healy's baseball career, however. Besides being a legitimate pro football prospect, Healy was regarded, at least by Coach Bergquist, as a good baseball prospect. "He hits well, moves extremely well for a catcher, and throws pretty well," said the coach. Indeed, it is rare to find a catcher with anywhere near the quickness to be a football safety. However, injuries have kept him away from catching so much that he has been very often relegated to the role of designated hitter.

The personable Healy is perhaps regarded as highly for his personal qualities as well as athletic ability. "He's the kind of guy every coach would want for a co-captain," said Bergquist. "He's a leader, though perhaps more of a quiet leader, and a great human being."

So John Healy will graduate this year, a history major, and hopefully move into a teaching and coaching position. He will discard the protective pad, and nobody will ever be able to tell he has any special problem.

House Speaker Bartley criticizes moratorium

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

House Speaker David Bartley (D-Holyoke), for years one of the strongest supporters of UMass budgets, Saturday criticized student plans for a boycott of class tomorrow and Wednesday.

"That's a nice way to spend spring and miss two days of classes," Bartley said by phone in a Collegian interview. "I am disappointed that the only solution they could see to their disappointment with executive action was to cop out,' ' he added.

The UMass-Amherst graduate said students should write letters to their home town legislators if they want to protest a ten per cent budget cut for higher education proposed by the Dukakis administration. And he quoted Shakespeare saying that the protests are "much to do over nothing" until a budget is actually put before the Legislature.

"Of course sitting down and writing a letter takes some time," he said. "It's easy to cut classes and march around with a sign." He also said he would be willing to meet with students to talk about the cuts.

He said students should realize that when the state is experiencing ten per cent unemployment, people are not going to sympathize with students who are getting "about a $2,500 scholarship" from the state to attend UMass.

"The public reaction against students is going to be about nine to one," he said. "They're living in a dream world."

Students at UMass-Amherst say they will picket the State House Wednesday because they say the Legislature will consider bills to increase tuition. Such bills have been filed for years, but have never passed.

"I think it would be delightful if they would look into the issues of the budget...but if they want to learn how to lobby, I'd be glad to teach a course in it," he said, advising students who object to budget cuts to "talk to home town legislators — and I can't emphasize enough the word home."

More than 10,000 vote

Students back moratorium

By STEVE DECOSTA

By a margin of nearly 5-1, UMass students last week voted in favor of a two-day moratorium of classes.

More than 10,000 persons, or nearly 50 per cent of the eligible voters, participated in the two-day, campus-wide referendum.

The final count showed 8,870 persons in favor of the referendum and 1,831 opposed. There were five abstentions.

The referendum was sponsored by the Student Action Committee (SAC) and was designed to guage student reaction to proposed budget cuts and tuition and fee increases.

Since the SAC has no affiliation with the Student Government Association, the vote is not binding on the university community, according to Student Attorney General Cindy Iris.

"It's not binding but how can you make people strike or not strike," said SAC spokesman Marc Zimmerman. "This is usually the way things happen, where a strike is called and picket lines are set up, but we hope to stay away from that."

The approved resolution calls for a Tuesday and Wednesday "moratorium on classes during which we demonstrate our opposition to proposed budget cuts, tuition increases, and fee hikes." Monday was to be set aside for classroom "political discussions about the past week's events."

In addition, campus-wide teach-ins and a massive telephone and letter-writing campaign to legislators and parents were to be conducted. A demonstration at the State House in Boston is also planned.

"We really stressed in the committee that this wasn't a strike just to be a strike," Zimmerman said. "I like to think this is the beginning and not the end. I hope we can get people involved in what's going on."

"The vote showed support," Zimmerman continued. "But then it's an issue that's going to affect every student on campus."

The 50 per cent turnout was lauded by the SAC as one the best ever at UMass.

In comparison, a strike vote in April, 1972 drew fewer than 6,000 responses.

The SAC estimated that 80 per cent of all dormitory residents cast ballots in the referendum, while 25 per cent of the eligible commuters voted.

"I don't think I've heard of an election where that many commuters voted," Zimmerman said.

Several are hesitant

Most administrators feel salary cuts are acceptable

By MIKE IZDEPSKI
Staff Reporter

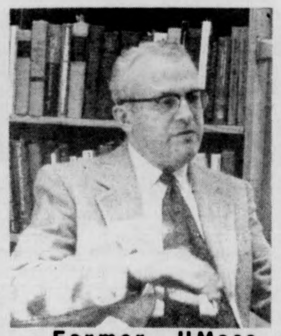
Most University administrators here feel that they could accept a cut in their salaries, if such a cut would help increase the legislature's awareness of the UMass budget issue and prevent faculty layoffs.

In weekend telephone conversations the Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor and the deans of the various University departments were asked what they thought about President Robert C. Wood's decision to voluntarily cut his salary by six per cent, and if, under any circumstances, they could see themselves taking the same step.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said he had considered the step, but doubted that it would have any effect. Bromery added that any voluntary cuts administrative officials might agree to would have to be made on an entirely individual basis.

He said: "This measure (a voluntary cut) isn't that great a sacrifice for some. My own salary is relatively low compared with the President's."

The Chancellor noted, a cut could make his salary less attractive thus forcing him to look for a better paid position. He added, however, that if campus administrators were only waiting for him to make the first move before following suit, he would gladly "jump on the bandwagon" and cut his salary.



Former UMass President, John Lederle considers taking a cut as a "gesture of good will".

Bromery said he felt any cuts, voluntary or mandatory, might create a backlash driving competent administrators and faculty members away from UMass to higher paying schools.

Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage called Wood's measure "thoughtful and sensitive", but warned that the move was only meant to be a symbolic gesture. He said: "Even if all administrative officials took a 6 per cent salary cut, it would never cover the cutbacks being proposed."

Gage noted that "only four per cent of the University's total payroll went into administrative salaries. He also pointed out how vaguely the word "administrator" was currently being used. He said "there are 50 health service jobs receiving administrative money, but can you really call doctors administrators? Undoubtedly any salary cuts in this area would result in less and poorer services."

The Vice-Chancellor, unlike the Chancellor, felt that any decision on voluntary cutbacks should be part of a campus strategy. Gage said if the majority of campus administrators thought a voluntary salary cut would "put the legislature on the spot", he would take the cut.

Professor John Lederle, former UMass President and member of the political science department here said he would volunteer to take a cut as a "gesture of goodwill". Lederle stressed that he was not suggesting that others should necessarily follow his move.

He pointed out that younger members with families probably could not afford to make such a step.

Of the academic and administrative deans three could not be reached and two refused to give any comment.

Dean Alfange, Dean of Social and Behavioral Sciences said "it depends on the financial stringency. If the majority of the faculty agrees, I would go along with a pay cut. In any case, it would be better than laying people off."

Seymour Shapiro, acting Dean of Natural Sciences and Math, said: "I don't want to comment on President Wood's speech but as of now I am not planning to take a pay cut." He added that he would accept a cut only if people were to be fired.

George Odiorne, Dean of the School of Business Administration said: "We should wait and see what the legislature does, before we take any measures." He added, if the campus administration were to take a salary cut, he would follow.

Problems cited in Five College Cooperation

By MIKE FAY
Staff Reporter

Five College Cooperation (CFCC) slowly getting off the ground in 1962 has come to full strength today, but officials say there are problems and the program should be re-examined.

"It is possible that at some point down the road we'll probably have to establish some sort of gate system," said Amherst College President John W. Ward.

According to officials, some FCC problems and successes, in 1975 are:

—More than one-half of all Five College Calendar Events are scheduled and held on the University campus.

—FCC enrollment figures are "vague." And students refused enrollment in FCC courses are not counted in FCC enrollment statistics. In fact, the number of students refused enrollment is not known.

—Curtailment of physical facilities use by Five College students visiting member campuses is on the upswing.

—Open Access use of library facilities began in the Fall of 1972. Branch and departmental libraries of the colleges are not open to Five College students. The new University library opened in the Fall of 1972.

—This year, one-third of all book withdrawals from the Amherst College library were made by visiting Five College students. UMass and Hampshire College students account for the bulk of these withdrawals.

—North Burn, Five College Coordinator, is leaving his post June 1. No replacement for Burn has been made yet.

A short history of FCC is summarized in the 1969 FCC report entitled, "Five College Cooperation: Directions for the Future." Since 1969, no subsequent FCC report has been made.

Chapter 8 of the 1969 report contains FCC's stated "Rationale and Method" for "Cooperative Planning and Use of Facilities and Services."

The report said, "If and when closer cooperation can be effected in curriculum planning, cooperative possibilities in planning or using physical facilities will follow more readily."

Asked if he thought the time had come for a new Five College Report Gluckstern said, "I really do. It is probably time to examine the elements of cooperation. But how it will be done will really depend on the expectations and desires of the new Five College Coordinator."

Exploring Five College Cooperation, the Collegian visited Five College Inc., on the Amherst campus, and found enrollment figures tallied in courses taken, instead of by student participation.

In an effort to determine UMass enrollment in FCC, the Collegian spoke to Associate Five College Coordinator, Jackie Pritzen. She said, "We keep statistics in courses taken because we don't get those statistics, (student participation), from the University. I don't think the University's computer is set up to do that. My educated guess is 80 to 85 per cent, (UMass students), take one course only."

Pritzen added, "Amherst is set up to tell the number of students and how many courses each student takes."

At the University, the Five College office at CASIAC, and the Scheduling Office were visited. Neither office had the student participation data.

But Shirley Puchalski, who no longer works for the Registrar's Office, kept these figures on her own initiative, she said.

This semester, 470 UMass students took 488 courses at the Four Colleges, according to Clara Hawes, who keeps the tally now.

And Tom Chamberlain of the Scheduling Office said, "Off the top of my head, an adjusted figure would be about 1100 students from the Four Colleges take about 1200 courses at UMass."

Ruth Bryan of Smith College said, "Smith students register for Five College courses on their own campus." She said a Five College pre-registration form is used by Smith students to sign up for courses.

UMass students must show up in person for pre-registration. Personnel at the Five College CASIAC Office said UMass students must go directly to the professor, and sign up for courses in person. This naturally requires a visit off campus.

Michelle Silbey, a UMass student, said she is taking a course at Mount Holyoke this semester. On registering for the course, she said, "You have to early, very early. The courses are very, very popular."

Silbey recommends going to pre-registration the first day, because of the popular demand for some classes. In the course she took this semester, a learning disability course, Silbey said, "They only allowed ten non-Holyokers."

The Five College Student Coordinating Board, (FCSCB), provides assistance to UMass students interested in taking FCC courses.

Last semester FCSCB set up booths on all five campuses to offer pre-registration aid. FCSCB will do so again this year. But it is not clear if FCSCB will provide UMass students with a one-stop FCC registration desk.

In addition, physical facilities use has been curtailed lately. One

Fifteen Greeks honored for frat-sorority improvements

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Fifteen fraternity-sorority members were honored recently at a second annual recognition banquet at "Tri Sigma" for their "contribution to the improvement of the Greek area at UMass," according to John Tata, Greek Council president.

Stephen E. Mills, former Greek Council president and past president of Beta Kappa Phi, was elected Greek Man of the Year. Missy Ahearn, academic affairs chairperson of the Greek Council, was elected Greek Woman of the Year.

Mills was elected for "promoting a good image to the (Greek) area, and for being there when we needed him," Sue Lynch said before presenting Mills the award.

Ahearn, a Kappa Alpha Theta member, was elected because she "worked exceptionally hard for the area," Paul Sweeney said, member Phi Sigma Kappa.

For his "strong" leadership in his fraternity, Jeff Fisher, president of Theta Chi, was elected Fraternity President of the Year. Preventing the collapse of her sorority and arresting the diminishing morale, Jeanne Crowe of Tri Sigma, was elected Sorority President of the Year.

Thirteen Greeks, one per cent of the Greek population at UMass, received a National Honor Fraternity-Sorority award for service to the Greek area. The Gamma Gamma Award is "like Who's Who among Greeks across the country," Ed Bowe, director of the Greek area, said. This award is given to juniors and seniors only and it's "rare when a junior gets the award," Bowe said.

Nevertheless, two juniors, Craig Ghidotti of Beta Kappa Phi and John Stevens of Phi Sigma Kappa, received the Gamma Gamma Award.

The seniors chosen to receive the same award were Carlene Murphy, Alpha Chi Omega, Sue Lynch, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Ann Donahue, Eileen Smith and Cindy Waldren of Lampda Delta Phi, Sweeney and Bob Palumbo of Phi Sigma Kappa, Cindy Gorham, Sigma Kappa, Tricia Horgan, Sigma Sigma Sigma, Mills and Ahearn.

Three sororities and one fraternity were awarded individual house awards. Lampda Delta Phi and Tri Sigma, both sororities, were given the Most Improved Chapter Award by the Greek Office for their "increasing membership, participation in the area and high scholarship," Bowe said.

An Academic Achievement Award was given to Lampda Delta Phi and fraternity Tau Epsilon Phi.

About 80 people attended the banquet, many of whom were Greek presidents and representatives. Mills was the master-of-ceremonies. Representing the administration, Fraternity Manager Joe Sexton and Bill Loder of the Registrars Office attended.

Residents cite damage to dorm

Patriots may be barred from Emerson House

By SUSAN GENSER
Staff Reporter

The New England Patriots, tentatively scheduled to live in Emerson House this summer, may not take up residence — if students living in the dorm have their way.

A petition signed by two-thirds of the residents has been circulating against having the Patriots living in the dorm.

The residents made their demands known at a meeting last week attended by university officials. The main reason cited for the request were damages done in the past.

In the past, damages have been done to rooms, and walls and furniture have been written on said residents. Basement window cranks were removed, and residents felt this was dangerous because these windows are so close to the ground, "and anyone could just walk in," said Jane Carroll, basement floor counselor. Student property placed in the storage room for the summer was used and damaged they claimed.

Much of the blame for the damage lies with the university, according to Kenneth Dean, Acting Director of the Office of Residential Life (O.R.L.), "because of a breakdown in communications." The Patriots have a contract with the university to pay for damages incurred and there is to be direct reimbursement from the university to the dorm for said damages.

This has not been carried out, "because O.R.L. was unaware that the problems existed," according to Dean.

Emerson is a Southwest all-woman low-rise, and the Patriots have stayed there for the last three summers. This summer they are tentatively scheduled for occupancy from July 19 to August 22. Their contract with the university provides them with a suitable number of rooms, special modifications allowing rooms to accommodate air conditioning, special phones, use of the Head of Residence's apartment, access to Boyden and playing fields, use of the dining commons, and parking facilities.

The Patriots bring in revenue to the university,

Over the next two seeks, Dean and the ORL will be looking for alternative space for the Patriots. The new dorm must be approximately the same size as Emerson, with easy access to the dining commons and playing fields. Another meeting is scheduled in Emerson on Thursday, May 15, to discuss progress in finding alternative housing.

The possibility still exists that the Patriots will be housed in Emerson this summer, but the residents feel that at least they will receive better treatment from the university.

"I think people should remember that we are students here, and the university was created for us, not the Patriots. The University is neglecting us, and we are being penalized, because we care about our dorm," resident Jane Carroll said.

especially in the area of food services. According to Arthur Warren, Acting Director of Food Services, "the revenue is needed to hold costs down in the dining commons throughout the year."

Emerson custodian Charles Starkus feels the Patriots are also "one of the best summer groups I've ever seen." Starkus who has been at the university for seven years, and works year round, feels the Patriots are a "very clean group."

A letter dated March 14 was sent to Richard Green, Master Director of Southwest, from Emerson House Council President Kimberly Popkin, stating the residents' concerns.

The first summer housing schedule was released by Summer Conference Housing on April 11, scheduling the Patriots to Emerson. The Southwest Assembly passed a resolution April 15, "to support the residents of Emerson House in their efforts to have the N.E. Patriots housed in a dorm other than Emerson."

Are School of Ed records open?

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

A spokesman for UMass President Robert C. Wood said Friday that School of Education records are now open to the public, but officials here were not sure if the records will be released.

UMass-Amherst Attorney Sidney Myers is expected to announce today if the press and public will be able to inspect the records, according to a spokesman here.

Myers was unavailable for comment last night.

The opening of the records came after a week of conflicting reports over who had jurisdiction of the records.

However, the records pertaining to investigations by law enforcement officials will not be released until the investigation is completed. The FBI have been investigating misuse of funds at the School for three months.

Susan Reilly, an aide to Wood, said the treasurer's office is working on an "orderly procedure" to allow the public to see the records.

In addition, an outside auditing firm hired by the University last month will now be able to review the records and make a report on the spending of the grant money be School of Ed administrators.

The records detail the expenditure some $15 million worth of grant funds over a five year period.

The return of the custody of records to UMass are a result of the following events:

—a Superior Court Judge ruled that UMass must allow a Collegian reporter to see the records. A suit was filed seeking access to the records after the reporter was denied access. The University claimed that custody of the records rested with a grand jury investigating misuse of money at the School.

—following the court decision a U.S. Attorney in Boston ordered the FBI to physically remove the records from the Amherst campus.

—the grand jury, who had issued two subpoenaes, voted to release most of the records back to the university.

The confusion over the custody of the records appears to be a conflict between who has authority, federal or state authorities, when a grand jury issues a subpoena.

Federal and UMass officials have feared that if the records go public before indictments are handed down, the records may be stolen, according to informed sources.

U.S.E. prepares for coming labor hearing

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Staff Reporter

Members of the Union of Student Employees' executive board (USE) met last night in preparation for an informal hearing with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission in Boston Thursday. A "recognitional picket" is planned for tomorrow outside the Campus Center complex.

"Recognition is our primary objective right now," said USE chairperson Michael Bardsley. He claimed that tomorrow's demonstration is not intended as a strike, nor as an encouragement to boycott the complex or interfere with deliveries. He described the purpose of the picketing as a demonstration of support for the USE's recognition as the exclusive bargaining representative of all students and hourly employees of the Campus Center.

A written demand for recognition was submitted to Campus Center director John Corker on April 18. The USE based their demand on the strength of the authorization cards signed by the majority of the work force, now filed with the Labor Relations Commission. A written response from Corker is forthcoming.

Thursday's meeting in Boston will be an open forum in which both the USE and the Campus Center management will air their positions. Both parties will then have a chance to meet with legal counsel before convening.

SAC plans 'infiltration'

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

The Student Action Committee will "infiltrate" large lecture halls today to "initiate political discussion" about the moratorium, spokesperson Mary Muirhead aid last night.

A SAC sponsored meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium will attempt to carry on the classroom discussions and broaden these to include "student power and unionization, educational inequality and the present fiscal crisis in Massachusetts," according to a statement released by the SAC.

Tomorrow is the first day of planned class boycotts, and SAC representatives will hold teach-ins in dormitories throughout the campus.

Additional teach-ins for commuters will be held in the Campus Center.

The time and location of these will be announced in tomorrow's Collegian.

A phonothon allowing students to lobby their state representatives begins today and will continue on Tuesday.

WATS line phones will be available in the Student Union Building in the following offices:

- Student Senate Council Chambers, rm. 423;
- Student Organizing Project rm. 428;
- University State Communications Committee rm. 413A.

A bonfire along the campus pond tomorrow at 9:30 p.m. with live musical entertainment will conclude the first day of the moratorium.

A car caravan will leave from Haigis Mall Wednesday morning for a rally on the steps of the State House at 11:30 a.m., organizers say.

Sign-up sheets for the caravan and limited space on buses will be posted in dining commons and the concourse level of the Campus Center tomorrow, the add.

The rally to protest budget cuts will have speakers from UMass-Boston as well as SAC members: Cheryl Flashman, Milton Kerstein, Ellen Gavin and David Millikin.

Representative James Collins (D-Amherst), a UMass graudate, is also expected to address the rally.

TOC Inc. claims operation is non-profit

This is the final of a two part series on the Top of the Campus Inc.

By SAMUEL HASSAN
Staff Reporter

The TOC Inc. holds the alcoholic beverage license for the Campus Center and is a non-profit private corporation operating to perform a service, not to make a profit according to TOC treasurer and CC business manager Craig Stuart.

A gross margin of revenues from alcoholic beverages is paid back into the Food Services Department where it goes into overhead such as payroll, insurance, entertainment and the CC debt, according to Stuart.

The TOC Inc. does pay an alcoholic beverage tax, but being a non-profit corporation, "we have an IRS (Internal Revenue Service) exemption and don't pay federal income tax," Stuart said. "We don't have to pay property tax either. The University pays it," he said.

As treasurer of the TOC, Stuart said he is the most active member on the board of directors. "I do the accounting for the entire CC, and the TOC Inc. is just one part of it. I think a student would find it very difficult being TOC treasurer," he said.

All eleven TOC board of directors' positions are up for re-election on Wednesday May 7, in room 904-908 CC at 6 p.m.

Any of the 13,200 TOC members are eligible to occupy the one year positions and vote in the elections.

Membership to the TOC is limited to students, faculty, alumni, administrators, and employees of the University. A fifty cent per semester membership fee covers the cost of printing TOC cards and stickers, according to Peter Gluckler of the UMass News Bureau.

Amherst Selectman Michael Sullivan resigned from the TOC board of directors last fall citing a potential conflict of interest as reason for the action. The Board of Selectmen issues the alcoholic beverage license to the TOC Inc. Sullivan was chairman of the board of selectman when he resigned.

The eleven TOC board of directors meet two or three times a year and have no operational responsibilities according to treasurer Stuart. "W hold the license and hire someone to do it for us, basically the food services department," he said.

Tony Tartaglia, clerk of the TOC Inc. said that the CC board of governors are more into management policy, and that they are the proper vehicle for effecting change. Tartaglia added that, "It's questionable whether the management listens to the board of governors anyway."

Vietnam congress elects 'Big' Minh president

Withdrawal of US will be requested

Compiled from Wires

SAIGON — South Vietnam's congress unanimously elected Gen. Duong Van "Big" Minh as president yesterday in an 11th-hour attempt to turn imminent military defeat into a negotiated peace. Political sources said Minh would immediately ask for an American withdrawal from Vietnam.

Meeting between the first two rocket attacks on Saigon in more than three years, the national assembly voted 134-0 for Minh — hero of the 1963 coup that overthrew President Ngo Dinh Diem — to succeed President Tran Van Huong and gave him authority to sue for peace with the Communists.

Political sources said Minh would take power today and would ask for a U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam so he could arrange a coalition with the Viet Cong.

It was unclear whether Minh intended to ask all Americans to leave, or whether the U.S. embassy would remain open with a token staff.

Three hours after the assembly's action, Communist forces launched their second rocket attack of the day on the city — four rounds of what appeared to be 122mm missiles that landed on the government's naval compound, in the downtown area and in the Saigon River.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces captured Ba Ria, 35 miles southeast of Saigon and the capital of Phuoc Tuy province, and expanded the chain of 150,000 men, tanks, artillery and rockets they are forging around Saigon.

Ba Ria was the 23rd of South Vietnam's 44 provinces to fall to the Communists.

The loss of Ba Ria also posed a threat to Vung Tau, the last deepwater port still in government hands. Ba Ria is on Highway 15, a major link between Saigon and Vung Tau.

Other Communist forces closing in on the government's major air base at Bien Hoa, 14 miles northeast of Saigon, opened fire with mortars and rockets on the crowds of refugees trapped between the base and the capital.

In Washington, Assistant Secretary of State Robert McCloskey conceded U.S. policy in Indochina has failed and said the United States had stepped up its diplomatic efforts to obtain a ceasefire and a "controlled outcome" of the war in Vietnam.

McCloskey did not deny that the diplomatic efforts involve China and the Soviet Union.

In Paris, the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government issued a communique calling for abolition of the Saigon administration as a prerequisite for peace. But it made no mention of the election of Minh, who himself is considered a neutralist.

Minh, 59, was one of the leaders of the 1963 coup that overthrew the late President Ngo Dinh Diem. Following Diem's ouster, Minh served as chief of state for three months until he was overthrown in still another coup. Associates charged at the time that he was ousted by the Americans for favoring a neutralist solution to the war.

The Communists, while rejecting other South Vietnamese leaders, have never said they would refuse to negotiate with Minh. Asked by UPI Sunday whether they would talk with Minh, Viet Cong press officer Phuong Nam said only that "anyone who loves peace... would be acceptable."

Minh's election came only hours after Communist forces sent five rockets thundering into Saigon — the first shelling of the capital since December, 1971.

A South Vietnamese soldier in Long Thanh threatens to swing his weapon at some refugees who are trying to move through barricades on the road to Saigon. The refugees' papers were being checked to see if any Communists had infiltrated their ranks.

Indochina developments

Viet leaders to flee

TAIPEI [UPI] — Informed sources said yesterday Taiwanese officials were readying accommodations for more political refugees from South Vietnam, including former Vice President Air Marshal Nguyen Cao Ky.

Sources close to the South Vietnamese Embassy told UPI accommodations are being prepared in surburban Taipei for government and military leaders fleeing the Communist advance on Saigon.

There was speculation Thieu had brought a "huge quantity" of gold into the country.

Refugees panic

LONG BINH, South Vietnam [UPI] — Hordes of refugees panicked by advancing Communist forces fled south under shellfire along Highway 1 yesterday into Saigon, which itself had been rocketed a few hours earlier.

Mortar shells fired from a nearby village exploded around the refugees — and some fleeing soldiers mixed among them — as they raced across the bridge over the Dong Nai River, 12 miles northeast of the capital.

Congress to OK aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Final Congressional approval is expected this week for conditional use of U.S. combat troops in evacuating Americans and South Vietnamese from Saigon.

The Senate already has approved the compromise bill, which includes authorization of $177 million to pay evacuation costs and $150 million for Vietnamese refugee relief.

US to shut down last Vietnam military office after 25 years

SAIGON [UPI] — The United States will close its Defense Attache Office today, ending a quarter century of American military advisory efforts in South Vietnam.

The U.S. Mission told senior government officers yesterday that the compound which once housed the U.S. Military Assistance Command, Vietnam, would shut down exactly 19 years after Americans started the first training of the South Vietnamese Army.

Official American spokesmen here said they had not heard of the decision to close the attache office, known as "Pentagon East."

The first U.S. military mission to South Vietnam arrived on July 15, 1950. Americans began training South Vietnamese soldiers on April 28, 1956.

Several hundred persons waited in the evacuation staging area in the DAO compound Sunday morning for flights out of Tan Son Nhut to Guam and other points.

What was once a large bowling alley, however, was empty. Each day for the past week or so hundreds of people had gathered inside and waited. A team of workers from DAO had cleaned up the litter and the building appeared almost ready for bowlers.

Another large building nearby, a club called "Dodge City," also had been emptied of evacuees. It, too, had been tidied up and only about a dozen people were inside.

At the entrance to the staging area, U.S. Marines and soldiers working with civilian and military police were making thorough checks of all persons entering the area.

The checks created a large backlog of people and vehicles in the area. Outside the main entrance to the base there was another sizable crowd estimated at more than 1,000.

Inside the staging area, Vietnamese military police were taking photographs of many of those awaiting evacuation flights.

At Tan Son Nhut air base, South Vietnamese civilian and military police swept through a camp of refugees awaiting evacuation flights and arrested a number of military deserters, fleeing government officials and youths old enough to be drafted.

Those arrested were persons termed "affidavit passengers" by U.S. evacuation officials. That meant the only document they needed to get aboard an evacuation aircraft was an affidavit from an American citizen guaranteeing financial support and responsibility for them once they arrive in the United States.

When the security sweep began in the pre-dawn hours, some of the evacuees fled, scaling an 8-foot mesh wire fence topped by three feet of barbed wire. After the sweep, shoes and pieces of clothing that had caught on the barbed wire fluttered in a light breeze.

Harrington fears death of GOP

State senate chief eyes party rebirth

BOSTON [AP] — The Republican Party is likely to disappear from the Massachusetts Senate unless it undergoes a grass roots rebirth, says Senate President Kevin B. Harrington.

Republicans fill only seven of the 40 Senate seats, and five of these Harrington said, are barely hanging on in predominantly Democratic districts.

"It's tough when you've got to get more votes from their people than from your own to carry an issue," said Senate Minority Leader John F. Parker of Taunton, "and it's even tougher when you can't get a lot of your own guys to go along with you."

Those Republicans in Democratic districts, Harrington said, are Parker, John H. Fitzpatrick of Stockbridge, Ronald C. MacKenzie of Burlington, Robert A. Hall of Lunenburg and John F. Aylmer of Barnstable.

The two strongest Republican senators are David H. Locke of Wellesley and William L. Saltonstall of Manchester, Harrington said in a recent talk with Senate GOP aides.

Parker, who has been in the Senate 22 years, said in an interview that the most the minority can hope to do is call attention to a bad bill by debating it, even though he cannot prevent its passage.

He said that during last year's session, 80 per cent of the Senate's roll calls were initiated by Republicans, and that he himself debated up to 140 separate bills.

"We may be tiresome and boring many days, but we have a burdensome role," he said. "God knows I don't like standing up and banging away all the time. But what would happen to this Senate if there was no voice raised in opposition to indifference, to partisanship, to hypocrisy?"

Parker said the Republicans sometimes can win in the Senate with "some unlikely coalitions — sometimes with those flakes over there (the liberals), and sometimes with the hard hats."

But Parker is well aware that no attempt at coalition can stop Harrington when he really wants to get a bill through.

"Hell, he could roll over me every day with his 33 votes. He could say, 'John Parker doesn't exist," Parker said. "But we're both professional enough to know that if a terrible personal animosity develops, nobody is going to win.

Brown takeover ends with pact

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Brown University students began preparing yesterday for their final exams following an agreement between minority students and administrators that ended a two day building takeover by the students.

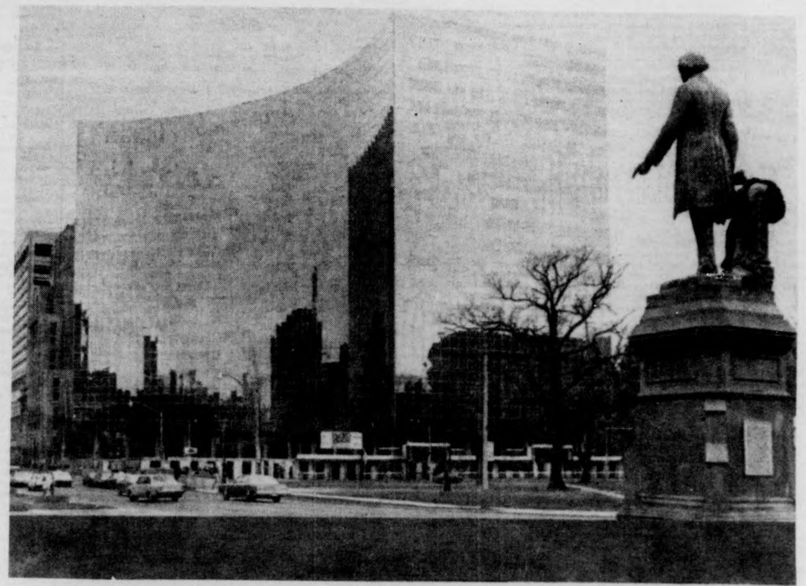
Both sides expressed satisfaction with the compromise agreement on the Ivy League school budget policies that ended the peaceful occupation of the main administration building.

At a Saturday news conference, President Donald F. Hornig said Brown University could make "no guarantees" it will achieve the negotiating goals on increases in minority students and faculty.

A student spokesman acknowledged the agreement was similar to one reached in 1968, but not fulfilled. "We hope the administration did not negotiate in bad faith again," he said.

The Third World Coalition seized the administration building Thursday morning without violence and left just as peacefully late Friday night.

The minority action followed a four day class boycott the week previous by two thirds of Brown's undergraduates which was unsuccessful in efforts to change budget priorities.



This 20-story building in Toronto is faced with a mirror-like glass which retains the body heat of its 7000 occupants, as well as that of the sun, lighting equipment. The statue on the right is of Canada's first Prime Minister, Sir John A. MacDonald.

US still paying for Civil War over 100 years after surrender

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Veterans Administration expects to spend almost half a million dollars this year on the aftermath of the War Between the States — supporting 417 widows and children of Civil War veterans.

It was 110 years ago this month that Gen. Robert E. Lee handed over his sword and surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia. But the federal government is still sending out benefit checks and is likely to keep sending them out for another few decades.

Benefits to dependents of Vietnam era veterans will probably be paid beyond the year 2100.

A VA spokesman said yesterday there are still 205 widows of Civil War veterans ranging in age from 60 to 118. There are also 212 children ages 50 to 98 who qualify because of physical or mental disabilities.

About two-thirds of the survivors are from the Union side, the VA said. Rebels did not originally qualify for benefits, but Congress made them eligible in 1958. Walter W. Williams, the only Confederate veteran still alive at that time, died two years later at the age of 117 in Houston, Tex.

The oldest surviving Civil War widow is Angela Davolos Moran of Polanco, Mexico, a suburb of Mexico City, who receives a monthly check of $134 and will celebrate her 119th birthday in three weeks. In 1888, a week before her 32nd birthday, she married Henry Moran, a 45 year-old railroader working in Mexico.

Moran had been among the first volunteers to respond to Abraham Lincoln's call. But after less than three months as a private in the 12th New York State Militia Volunteers, he was shot in the groin while chasing confederates across a bridge at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., in June 1861, and was released from the service.

Some of the other Civil War widows are products of May-December marriages. Mrs. Mary Miller of Grove City, Ohio, was 31 in 1915 when she married Quincy Miller, a 68 year-old veteran.

Last year the government spent $525,503 on these widows and children. With deaths, that is expected to fall below $500,000 this year.

The oldest surviving Confederate widow is Lulu Lewis, 105, of Ola, Ark.

America's wars historically have cost less money than the veterans' benefits and debt interest that have followed them. In the case of the Civil War, the post-war bills — not including monuments — amounted to almost four times the cost of the war itself.

Portugal unaltered

LISBON [UPI] — Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves said in an interview published yesterday that the results of Portugal's first free elections in 50 years will not alter the government or blunt its drive to build a left-wing socialist state.

More than 90 per cent of the country's registered voters went to the polls Friday to give the Socialists and liberal Popular Democrats a major victory in elections to choose a constituent assembly that will draft a new constitution.

The Communists, a major influence in the government, finished a distant third. "The constituent assembly is one thing, the provisional government and the continuation and development of the revolution are another," Goncalves told the newspaper O Seculo.

Bartley is running

HOLYOKE [UPI] — David M. Bartley, the former teacher who rapidly rose to the leadership of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, has confirmed he has applied for the presidency of Holyoke Community College.

"Yes, I've made application for the post," he said Saturday. "I've always been interested in education, and my interest in that particular school is well known."

Navy maneuvers

MOSCOW [UPI] — The official news agency Tass yesterday reported the successful completion of a worldwide Soviet naval exercise which Pentagon analysts said was the biggest in Red Navy history, involving 200 ships and six oceans.

"Soviet naval exercises held on the high seas are over," Tass said.

"The naval forces involved demonstrated high combat efficiency. After practicing their tasks, they have returned to their bases."

Civilization falls

NEWTON [AP] — New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson blames the "decline of our great ... American civilization" on the handling of the Korean and Vietnam wars.

He told a conference of political conservative groups Saturday that the civilization's decline began in 1950.

"When President Harry Truman refused to permit our troops to cross the Yalu River, he committed America to her first disastrous, no-win war. He thus signaled to the Communists of the world our irresolution and hesitancy to come to grips courageously with adversaries sworn to bury America," the Republican governor said.

He also said that if Barry Goldwater had been elected in 1964, "the Viet Cong would have been driven from Vietnam and the war there brought to its successful end long ago."

COMPUTER GRAPHICS AND SPATIAL ANALYSIS Spring Semester
Office: 309 School of Business
Office Hours: To be arranged.
Organization: Lecture and Workshop.
Aim: To teach students the fundamentals of computer graphic analysis of regional data. The course includes the use of SYMAP, SYMVU, map overlay techniques, spatial regression, and a series of special techniques for analyzing spatial data. Students are given a series of problems which they must solve and present in a portfolio. Each student must also have a semester project which will be criticized by classmates and the teacher.
Readings: SYMAP Manual, SYMVU Manual, and articles on reserve.
Pre-requisites: None
Requirements: A portfolio and final project and paper.

BA 780 C. Moore
RESEARCH METHODS Fall Semester
Office: 309 School of Business
Office Hours: To Be Arranged
Organization: Lecture
Aim: To teach students various management science skills and how they relate to urban and regional research and analysis. Major topics include: sampling, analyses of variance, regression, experimental design, and computer programming.
Readings: Sample Survey Methods and Techniques, Hansen et. al.; Applied Linear Statistical Models, Neter and Wasserman, and a variety of outside readings which are on reserve.
Requirements: A series of problems which students must solve using the techniques taught and the computer.
Pre-requisites: At least Basic Statistics and Linear Algebra.

SYSTEMS APPROACH TO URBAN PROBLEMS Spring Semester
Office: 309 School of Business
Office Hours: To be arranged
Organization: Seminar
Aim: To teach students how to plan, design and implement management information systems in the public sector and in municipal governments in particular. The course will focus on Administrative Control Systems, Command and Central Systems, Planning Systems, and Evaluation Systems. The emphasis will be on prescriptive planning techniques and will be related to the budgeting process. Applications in housing, transportation, policy, new town development, and other areas will be examined. The class will, as a group, undertake a real world project and design an information system from scratch.
Readings: Textbooks, government documents, and articles on reserve.
Requirements: None
Pre-requisites: Some courses which have given you a basic understanding of urban and regional problems and a basic computer course.

BA 782 C. Moore
ECONOMICS OF URBAN MANAGEMENT Fall Semester
Office: 309 School of Business
Office Hours: To be arranged.
Organization: Seminar
Aim: To teach students the application of economic theory to urban and regional management problems. The course will focus on major techniques of regional economic analysis and students will be involved in doing an extensive economic base analysis of a real community using a variety of techniques.
Readings: Urban Economics and Public Policy, James Heilbrun, 1974; The Economic Base of American Cities, Edward Ullman, et.a., 1973; Input-Output Analysis, William Miernyk, 1965; and a variety of journal articles which are on reserve in the library.
Requirements: A mid-term and final exam, group presentations of the economic base project.
Pre-requisites: At least six hours of undergraduate economic theory or GB 650.
Added Notes: This is a required course of all MSBA majors in Urban and Regional Management.

BA 783 C. Moore
URBAN BUDGETING AND PUBLIC FINANCE Fall Semester
Office: 309 School of Business
Office Hours: To be arranged.
Organization: Seminar.
Aim: To acquaint students first with the basic theory of public finance and then to apply it to the particular problems of Capital Programming, Program Budgeting, Urban and Regional Taxation problems, and other issues. In addition, the course teaches some basic budgeting skills for public management.
Readings: Public Expenditure, Miner and Burkhead, 1972; and a number of journal articles and monographs which are on reserve in the Library.
Requirements: A mid-term and final exam, a class presentation, and a paper.
Pre-requisites: At least six hours of undergraduate economics or GB 650.

ENGINEERING

ENGINEERING 103 Module S. Middleman
BIOMEDICAL ENGINEERING
Office: 158F Goessmann
Office Hours: To be arranged
Organization: Lecture
Aim: Discuss role of chemical engineer in design of artificial organs and other biomedical devices.
Readings: undetermined at this point.

ENGINEERING 103 Module R. Lenz
THE USE AND ABUSE OF PLASTICS
Office: 159D Goessmann
Office Hours: To be arranged
Organization: Lecture, laboratory experiments, films
Aim: If any segment of our economy still shows growth, it is the polymers industry (some people say "plastics" but we will also consider fibers, film, rubber, and specialty polymers). The purpose of this module is to provide an introduction to polymers, illustrating how they are made, and their application, through a series of films, lectures, and laboratory experiments. With this understanding, we can measure the growth of the industry, including career opportunities, and examine the impact of plastics on society, e.g. their effect on the quality of life, waste disposal problems, design of plastics products, etc.
Readings: Assigned text - "Synthetic Polymers", F. W. Billmeyer, Jr., Anchor Books, paperback ($1.95).

ENGINEERING 103, Module CH.E. 7 (1 cr.)
WHAT DO CHEMICAL ENGINEERS DO?
Office: 159 Goessmann
Office Hours: M-F 8-5
Organization: Lectures, discussions, visits to labs.
Aim: To describe and discuss what chemical engineering is all about and the extremely diverse array of excellent career opportunities which a CH.E. degree offers, so that students can better assess their potential interest in chemical engineering.

Readings: Varied. Occasional literature articles relevant to the focal topic of the day.
Requirements: Attendance and participation in discussion, Occasional readings. No exam.
Pre-requisites: Interest in learning what a career in chemical engineering is like, opportunities, challenges, etc.
Added Notes: One of several elective modules, each running 4 weeks for 1 credit, in Eng. 103.

(NOTE: At the deadline for submission of course descriptions, the Department of Linguistics still had not completed the hiring of faculty for September 1975. This description should cover all sections of the course. Questions should be directed to Mr. Freeman, 233 South College, 5-0889, MW 10-12, Tu 1:30-3:30)

Organization: Three lectures per week
Lecture 1: MWF 10:10
Lecture 2: MWF 11:15
Lecture 3:TuTh 11:15-12:30
Lecture 4:TuTh 9:30-10:45

Aim: To present the principles of transformational-generative linguistic theory, and to teach students to analyze language within this framework. This course will concentrate on the area of syntax: the principles by which sentences are formed by combining smaller units (words and phrases). Discussion will center on English, although some other languages will be mentioned. A brief overview of phonology (sound patterns of language) will be presented during the final two weeks of the course.

Readings (TENTATIVE): Heny and Akmajian, Introduction to the Principles of Transformational Syntax, M.I.T. Press, and Noam Chomsky, Language and Mind, Harcourt, Brace.

Requirements (TENTATIVE): One mid-term, weekly problem sets, a final examination (probably take-home).

Linguistics 101

Man and his language

Man and His Language
Mr. Freeman
Office: 233 South College
Hours: MW 10-12; Tu 1:30-3:30
Organization: 2 lectures and 1 discussion per week
Lecture 1: MW 1:25
Discussion sections: Friday, 9:05, 10:10, 11:15, 12:20, 1:25

Aim: To examine, through lecture, discussions, and reading, the following question: to what extent can the faculty of language be said to be the most deeply human activity of which man is capable? The course will attempt to give some account of the knowledge which we have when we say we "know" a language. It will examine language in use: the language of law, of advertising, of science, of journalism. It will examine the use of language as an artistic medium in poetry and in fiction. It will examine the development and history of our own language, and the state of English in our time. Finally, it will examine how social attitudes and structures are embedded in our language.

Readings: Fromkin and Rodman, An Introduction to Language (Holt, Rinehart & Winston). Elgin, What is Linguistics? (Prentice-Hall).

UMass budget: 'Who gets what, when and why'

'Although programs are important, it is people who make up the bulk of expenses on campus.'

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

A famous political scientist once said that politics was the art of "who gets what, when and why." It is a good description of the UMass budget in a year of austerity.

Just one aspect of next year's budget request facing Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' meat cleaver is people. Under the UMass request there would be 437 new positions authorized. One-hundred at UMass-Boston, 218 at the Worcester medical school and 78 in Amherst.

The chart at right shows where those 78 positions would go, and the salaries which would be authorized for them under the budget. Figures will change if the budget is cut as anticipated. (Source is the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies on campus.)

Although programs are important, it is people who make up the bulk of expenses on campus. Over fifty-five million dollars of the $80.8 the Amherst campus has requested for next year will go to pay the salaries of 1,476 faculty and 2,233 other employees.

Budget expenses are compiled in terms of state accounts such as salaries (01,02), student and consultants' payroll (03), utilities (08), maintenance (12) and the like.

Expenses are also compiled in terms of "program areas", using standards developed by UMass budget director Warren W. Gulko and adopted by many universities nationwide.

All expenses, under this method, are divided so that they appear as "academic programs", "academic support", "student service", "institutional support", and "physical plant operations."

Expenses for the Amherst campus are divided among the five areas totalling up to the requested $80.8 million.

— Academic programs receive a 6.8 per cent boost over this year, to a total of $44.2 million. The boost is 11.4 per cent system-wide.

— Institutional support receives a 4.8 per cent boost to an $8.4 million total. The boost is 13.2 per cent system-wide.

— Physical Plant operations receives a 24.4 per cent boost on campus to $15.9 million, and a 24.4 per cent boost overall for the three system campuses at Boston and Worcester in addition to Amherst.

— Academic support, the acknowledged area of concentration for next year, would be up 19.1 per cent at Amherst and 32 per cent system-wide, to a campus total of $.68 million.

President Robert C. Wood has said this increase is necessary to get faculty away from doing busy work by giving them more staff to help. He has also said the increase results because next fall will be the first year of operation of a full hospital at UMass-Worcester.

The smallest increase system-wide and next-to-smallest increase campus-wide is in the program area called "student service", which includes much of the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs office and such things as placement and the residential life staff.

— Student service would increase 6.9 per cent on campus and 9.5 per cent system-wide, to a campus total of $4.2 million. Included in this category are over half the funds for the Student Affairs office and financial aid.

Linguistics 385 - seminar

Linguistics 385
Undergraduate Seminar
Organization: seminar format
T. Roeper

Aim: We will consider philosophical principles and implications that surround controversies in the field. For instance, we will read background material that defines important distinctions: rationalism and empiricism in scientific methodology; the role of intuition in the construction of a psychological model; the question of abstractness and innate schemata; and the requirement of explanatory adequacy. In addition we will consider the problem of how to characterize interfaces between levels in linguistics and cognitive domains in psychology.

Readings: the central text will be On Noam Chomsky ed. G. Harmon

Requirements: Each student will be expected to make a class presentation or write a short paper in addition to a term paper.

Pre-requisites: A background in transformational grammar. Students with a background in philosophy may be admitted with permission of the instructor.

AND NOW FOR SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT.

Seventh Ed Spring Marathon well attended despite budget cuts

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

The seventh annual School of Education Spring Marathon held here last week was "very well attended" despite a severe budget cut, said this year's co-ordinator Cindi Olken.

The Marathon is a potpourri of events dealing with issues in the field of education and American society in general. Co-ordinator Olken sees it as an "open forum", providing a "means of communication" for those who wish to pose their ideas.

In the past the Marathon went five days, running from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. This year, reduced to a $1300 budget from $5000 last year, the Marathon took place in three days and ran to only 5 p.m.

One way in which the Marathon had to limit spending was in its mail campaign. In other years they sent out 10,000 schedules. This year, according to Olken, the Marathon could afford only 4400.

Over 200 events, with up to 20 ongoing at once, attracted people from all parts of the U.S. and Canada.

Workshops ranged from such diverse interests as Vietnam, sexism in education, sports, and the new Massachusetts Chapter 766 laws.

Calls for education for better use of leisure

Recreation authority speaks in CC

"It is necessary that we educate the American public to better use their leisure time, as well as the leisure facilities available to them," said Robert Freedman, noted authority in the field of recreation, addressing approximately 110 people at the First Annual UMass Recreation Society Banquet held Saturday, at the Campus Center.

The Recreation Society is the undergraduate club for majors in the Leisure Studies and Services Department. At the banquet, it was announced that Amy Grese, of 147 Woodside Street, Amherst, had won the Raleigh Grand Prix 10 speed bike being raffled off by the Society.

According to Freedman, "Politics and society have created crisis management in recreation departments, due to operational budgets that have not kept pace, Civil Service inadequacies, and an antiquated personnel system."

Freedman, Deputy Director of Parks and Recreation for the Boston Metropolitan District Commission, graduated from the UMass Leisure Studies and Services department in 1962. He received his Masters Degree in Recreation Administration from New York University in 1967.

"Politicians look upon any recreation department as an easy mark to place people in jobs. Out of 2,000 people holding jobs, 3 have professional training," he said.

According to Freedman," the recreation profession must establish program priorities, change the Civil Service so that the qualification of minimum training will be a prerequisite for job candidates and there will be more flexibility to hire neighborhood residents, utilizing more in-service training programs, and formalize voluntary certification programs for recreation professionals in municipal departments and agencies."

"To improve the quality of recreation," he said, "departments must also contend with the increasing problems of vandalism which is more rampant and indiscriminate than ever, overuse of facilities and a sagging economy which has not kept pace."

Staff forum on moratorium

All University staff, faculty, and employees are being urged to attend a special forum to discuss the student moratorium issues. The meeting to be held Tuesday at 4:00 in Campus Center 101 will provide a rap-up of moratorium actions and issues.

Members of the staff and faculty as well as representatives of the Student Action Committee (SAC) will provide the information and analysis. The floor will be opened to discussion and proposals. This is an opportunity for all members of the University Community — especially those who work here — to understand the issues and discuss their response and possible support actions.

Nummo News First Black newspaper in UMass history

> "The Press is so powerful in its image-making role it can make a criminal look like he's the victim and make the victim look like he's the criminal. This is the Press, and irresponsible press. If you aren't careful, the newspapers will have you hating the people who are being oppressed and loving the people who are doing the oppressing."
> Malcolm X

The Black Press in America is estimated at being 250-300 publications, of which 90-95 per cent are collective members of the National Newspaper Publishers Association. Weekly Black newspapers make up about 90 per cent of all publications. Three to five are published bi-weekly, and two are nationally recognized daily black papers.

Black publications have always been a burning torch, dating back as far as 1827 when the "Freedom's Journal" was first published in New York City by John B. Russwarm. Following that publication, at least 40-50 other Black owned newspapers surfaced. Among them were the leading voices of: "Right of All", Samuel Cornish; "African Sentinel," John Stewart; "Mirror of Liberty," David Ruggles; "The Rising Sun", William Brown; "The North Star", Frederick Douglass; "The Herald of Freedom," Peter Clark; and the "N.A.A.C.P. Crisis", W.E.B. DuBois. These are only a few examples of self-expression through the ownership of the Black Press.

The responsibility of the Black Press to the community is to provide news and information relevant to the cultures and life styles of African peoples held captive in America and abroad. Usage of the Black Press must represent the majority and minority sentiments of the race. The Black Press serves the community as an Ambassador, a negotiator, an interpreter, and a watch-tower, observing the population by night and by day.

In the Spring of 1974, a group of Brothers and Sisters, seized the offices of the Collegian newspaper, demanding freedom of expression and access to the campus press; that historical event marked the beginning of a long protractive struggle which resulted in the construction of an effective newspaper medium here in Amherst.

> The Black Press serves the community as an Ambassador, a negotiator, an interpreter, and a watch-tower...

The Black News Service accepted the challenge of serving the Black community with relevant information. We did this by developing a voluntary operation of collective work through reporting and collecting the facts about event and happenings that affect Brothers and Sisters.

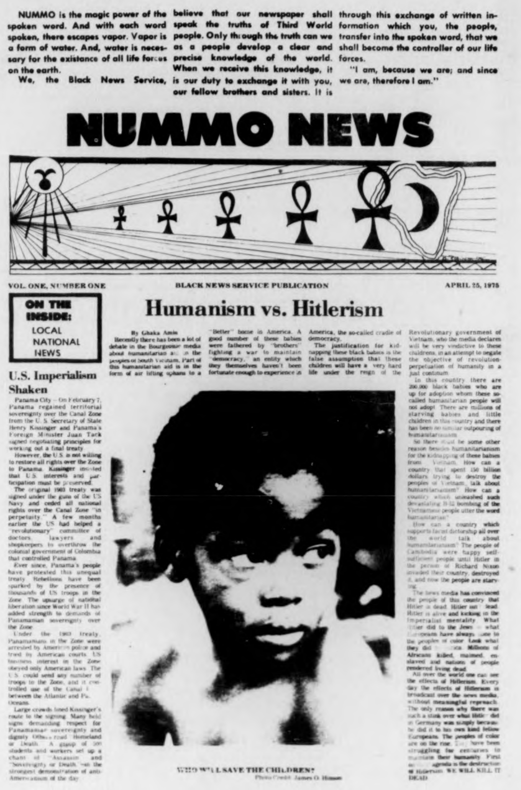
Our work grew intense, as we puched onward, continuously toward our goals. Often disheartened by the timid reluctance of Black student support, we suffered the hardship of overwork and increased stress; our pains grew from the lack of full staff assistance.

The Black News Service marched on. Determined in our commitment to produce a relevant printed Black Media outlet, whereby Black students, etc., can talk to the people; we didn't let any obstacle obstruct the path of success.

Friday, April 25, marks the historic date of the birth of the youngest Black newspaper in America, Nummo Newspaper; a Black run news media, designed for the enjoyment and information of the Black community. The staff recognizes that the most effective means of touching the masses of Black and Third World people is through the Black Press. We want to stand tall, and speak out against the forced dehumanization and deprivation of the Black race. We want our people to have a medium for constructive change, and self-determination.

Nummo Newspaper can be picked up at Room 115, New Africa House or phone, 545-0794 for information concerning drop off locations.

We the staff of Nummo Newspaper, congratulate the Black community for their support towards the development of this publication.



NUMMO is the magic power of the spoken word. And with each word spoken, there escapes vapor. Vapor is a form of water. And, water is necessary for the existance of all life forces on the earth.

We, the Black News Service, believe that our newspaper shall speak the truths of Third World people. Only through the truth can we as a people develop a clear and precise knowledge of the world. When we receive this knowledge, it is our duty to exchange it with you, our fellow brothers and sisters. It is through this exchange of written information which you, the people, transfer into the spoken word, that we shall become the controller of our life forces.

"I am, because we are; and since we are, therefore I am."

Community Announcements

The Black News Service invites all members to attend an important organizational meeting Wed., April 30, 1975 at 7:00 p.m. in room 114 New Africa House. As you know, the Black News Service is now publishing a weekly newspaper covering and summarizing the most important news events that occur. We need your help in order to produce the best — nothing less will do.

Today from 2:00 p.m.-6:00 p.m. on WMUA Radio, Universal Rhythms, a product of the Black Mass Communication Project will sponsor a community discussion on the topic, Pan-Africanism Today. The entire Third World Community is invited to tune in and exchange relevant knowledge and questions concerning this topic.

YOU'RE WEARING CONTACTS. WE CAN MAKE THE WEARING EASIER.

A lot easier.

You know that taking care of your contact lenses can be a real hassle.

You have to use a solution for wetting. Another one for soaking. Still another one for cleaning. And maybe even another one for cushioning.

But now there's Total® The all-in-one contact lens solution that wets, soaks, cleans and cushions.

It's a lot easier than having to use 4 different solutions.

There are two good ways to buy Total®— the 2 oz. size and the 4 oz. size. Total® 2 oz. has a free, mirrored lens storage case, and the new economy 4 oz. size saves you 25%.

Total® is available at the campus bookstore or your local drugstore.

And we're so sure you'll like Total® that we'll give you your second bottle free. Just send a Total® boxtop with your name, address and college name to:

In wake of UMass budget crunch

What's happening to student services?

What's happening to student service in the budget crunch? Analysis of budget documents provide partial answers. Let's take a look.

"Student service" salaries amount to about five per cent of the total state funds being spent at UMass-Amherst this year, analysis of budget documents shows.

But much of the costs of what budget documents terms student service programs are born by federal, private and non-state funds not included in the $72 million the campus will spend by June 1.

By comparison, salaries in "academic program" areas, like faculty and departmental staff — amount to about fift per cent of this year's appropriation.

Other salaries for physical plant employees, administrators and service personnel working outside the dormitories and dining commons amount to about twenty-three per cent of the total anticipated $72 million expenditures.

Of 78 new positions requested in next year's fiscal 1976 budget, two would be for student service. Both positions are in the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs office and are the first state-funded positions there in years, sources say.

But a top source in Student Affairs says twenty-seven new positions were needed, fifteen were requested from the Chancellor's office, and only the two came through in final documents.

Other administrative sources say this is because the Student Affairs office has plenty of people but isn't able to use them effectively. And they say the office has grown — largely through the addition of staff who are paid for from federal or other non-state funds.

Collegian Analysis

There are 138 employees classified as "student service" workers who are paid out of state funds. This compares with 2,473 faculty and departmental staff on state salaries and 785 physical plant employees.

At the same time, 895 "student service" employees are paid out of federal, private or special funds, compared with 598 faculty and departmental staff and 317 physical plant employees.

Most of the non-state funded positions are in federal research grants or employees of campus units which meet expenses with fees — like the dorms, the dining commons, the campus center, the fine arts council, varsity sports, the computing center and WFCR.

Such positions would not be directly affected by a state budget cut.

The positions that would be affected are 3,050 people whose salaries are paid by state funds. The above figures show only about one in eight student service employees under state funds.

The biggest chunk of state-funded student service salaries are in the Office of Residential Life, where this year, state payroll is expected to total $930 thousand. Student Affairs is the second biggest payroll that could be hit by state budget cuts — $395 thousand in state service related jobs, documents show.

The next biggest student service payroll on state money is the Office of Counselling and Career Guidance under the title Student Development Center. That payroll is $279 thousand.

In all, state-funded salaries in student service come to some $2 million, and total expenses including salaries are $2.7 million.

The schduling office, special undergraduate academic programs (like BDIC, UYA, UWW), and day care centers, admissions office and police department — are not listed as student service programs but many would concede that they benefit students directly.

Together, they include another $2.2 million in state-funded positions and total expenses including salaries of some $2.5 million this year.

student, who wishes to remain anonymous, tried to check out books at the Amherst College library. He was told he could not check out books because he was a UMass undergraduate. The student has made this irregularity known to Betty Brace, UMass library Circulation Head.

Brace said, "To be frank, it won't surprise me to see Amherst continue this policy, (limited access), because one-third of all Amherst library book withdrawals come from Five College students."

George Wright, of public services in the UMass library added, "Amherst is bearing the real burden on this (Open Access library use).

Both Brace and Wright point out that the bulk of book withdrawals from Amherst are made by UMass and Hampshire College students.

Amherst College also accepts more FCC students than it sends out. This fact was pointed out by many officials.

Amherst students take 693 courses off campus, while students visiting Amherst take 979 courses.

Hampshire College was called a "sore point" in FCC by a number of officials interviewed. But these officials refused to be quoted.

Hampshire College recently announced the closing of its swimming pool to Five College students, but a check of other campuses revealed a similar trend, with all institutions restricting the use of athletic facilities to its own students.

An exception to this rule is Mount Holyoke. Jessie Lie, a Five College official at Mount Holyoke said, "As for Kendall Gym, we've been extremely helpful, particularly to Hampshire College."

Exchange-A-Meal is an FCC plan that allows a student from one institution to eat in the dining commons of another institution. But, there are restrictions.

Lunch may be had for free, if the visiting student has proof that he participates in a meal plan at his home institution.

This effectively restricts students living off campus from using the dining facilities of a member institution, when visiting for academic, or extraneous reasons.

As well, students not subscribing to a meal plan are restricted from using the dining commons when visiting a member campus.

To eat dinner or breakfast at another college, a visiting student needs a justifiable academic reason, and the reason is subject to approval by the Food Services Office.

Identification cards are required at all times, and students visiting member campuses should be prepared. Arrangements should be made ahead of time. But the system appears to be flexible.

Debbie Edwards, a UMass student, was recently stranded one night at Smith College. She said that after checking with a few counselors, she was allowed to eat in one of the Smith dorms, which all have dining commons.

One enormous benefit the University accrues from participation in Five College Cooperation was pointed out by Amherst College president and by UMass Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Robert L. Gluckstern.

Both men commented on the University's ability to attract top-flight professors, because of the intellectual offerings afforded by Five College Cooperation.

Gluckstern was asked if he thought Five College Cooperation could stand more publicizing. He said, "I'm a little anxious about that. After all, we (UMass) do have 23,000 students. We would swamp the Four Colleges. Some publicizing would help though. I'm not the type to hide things. I like to see students benefit from Five College Cooperation."

By JIM KASSNER

My friend Henry and I were going into the Dining Commons the other day to catch a bite to eat before class. As we came through the doors, a huge sign bearing the word "STRIKE" in bright red letters hit us in the face. Henry, by the look on his face, seemed puzzled.

"What's with all this strike business anyhow?" he asked me.

"You mean you don't know?" I said incredulous. "Don't you keep up with what's going on around here?"

"Sure I do," Henry answered. "But I don't see what good a strike will do. Lotsa potatoes, please. All it'll do is create tension between students and administrators."

"You got it all wrong," I said. "If they don't listen to our voices, then they'll have to listen to our actions. Pudding?"

"Thanks."

"Don't you realize," I continued, "that some of the most drastic changes in history have come about because people cared — and weren't afraid to show their concern?"

Henry nodded. "But that's just it. Don't you think that a strike is a little, well, radical?"

"Radical?! Are you kidding? A strike would be considered passive by today's standards after what went on during the sixties."

"True," he said. "But isn't there another way? I mean you could write letters to the editor and speak out at Trustees' meetings. Even a little graffiti here and there."

I shook my head. "Never work. We've been doing that for years and look where it's gotten us. We've got to act not just talk. Seconds?"

"Yeah, let's go."

After returning to the table for another bout with the Dining Commons delectables, the conversation continued.

"But what happens if they still don't listen, I mean even if you do strike?"

"Dubious." I said. "If we can get enough concerned people they'll have no choice but to listen. But if they don't, well..."

Henry's eyes widened. "What could be more drastic than a strike?"

"You don't understand," I said. "There are other ways of conveying our message. Like refusing to pay fee bills, boycotting the Dining Commons, even demonstrations. The point is, we've got to make ourselves heard."

"I don't know," Henry said. "Seems like you're asking for trouble."

"That's absolutely ludicrous," I screamed. "It's people like you who stand by while others get ripped off. Well, the time has come to end all that. Want your bread?"

"No, you can have it. But what happens if these budget cuts and what not come about anyway, in spite of your protests?"

I grew serious. "Then I'll have no other alternative . . . "

"You don't mean . . . "

"That's right," I said. "See you in the bread line."

from our perspective

Welfare burden misplaced

The following editorial was printed in last Thursday's edition of the Amherst Student. It is hoped that Five College support will be gathered in opposition to the Welfare budget cuts.

Governor Dukakis has recently proposed a $311 million cut in the state's $1.3 billion welfare budget for fiscal 1975-76. The cuts, in the midst of the deepest depression in forty years, hit hardest those in the very worst position to withstand them. Broken down, the reduction calls for:

— elimination from welfare eligibility for all able bodies persons between the ages of 18 and 40.

— elimination of coverage for initial needs (bills due housing necessities such as cooking utensils, mattresses, etc.) for Average Families with Dependent Children and of payment of back rent beyond two months.

— restriction of medical care, eliminating payments for elective payments to cover only acute illnesses.

— institution of a plan whereby the welfare recipient would have to pay 50 cents for every dollar of welfare money spent on drugs and "optional" medical services.

— no expansion of the state's day care facilities, runaway services, or family planning centers.

— photographic identification cars to be required of all welfare recipients.

The effect of these proposals upon present and potential welfare recipients would be disastrous. The first provision will wipe people off the welfare rolls at a time when unemployment in the state is 11 per cent and finding a job is next to impossible.

For families already deep in debt, the second provision will lead to increased evictions, increased hunger, and increased illness as more money is required to settle past bills.

Additionally, the Governor's proposal to have recipients pay 50 cents for every welfare dollar spent on drugs and other medical needs will force people to manage without medications which as one gets older, become more and more of a necessity.

The impact of what Dukakis proposes will be to lay the burden of hard times on the state's poorest. That is clearly the least reasonable way to approach balancing the budget. Alternatives, such as a tax increase for those with a certain minimum income or cuts in the state bureaucracy or other programs, are what need to be explored.

It is incredible that a governor elected on the basis of such liberal rhetoric should resort to methods of balancing the state budget that will result in added suffering for those already at the bottom of the economic hierarchy of society. It is simply unconscionable to enact legislation that will create more hunger, more sickness. It is not these people's standards of living that will be threatened, it is their lives.

We urge students, through local meetings, rallies and letter writing to the Governor and state legislators, to strongly oppose these cuts, cuts that will lay the economic problems of the time on the backs of people who cannot bear them.

Drowning for donations

It's not all fun and games.

Contrary to the general opinion of most UMass students, the Greek system is not all fun-and-games. For most students, their only impression of fraternity and sorority life is viewed at an Open House, the Pub on Greek Night, or even on the intramural playing fields. Thus, their impression is one in which UMass Greeks are only actively involved in the social and athletic spheres of the University.

This is mere fallacy. Greeks are involved in other areas of the University and in fact, serve the community at large. Sigma Alpha Mu is one such fraternity. Every April during 'Greek Week', SAM sponsors a 'Bounce for Beats' campaign to raise money for the Heart Fund. This campaign is SAM's National Service Project, which is carried out at college campuses across the nation.

Today and tomorrow, SAM is holding it's 4th Annual Waterdunking on the Campus Center concourse level. From 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., SAM is presenting well-known campus personalities for their waterdunk 'victims', including Coach Jack Leaman, Jim Burke, Jim Town of the basketball team, Dr. Fergus Clydesdale from the Food Science Dept., and a representative from Amherst Towing. For 25 cents anyone can personally 'waterdunk a victim'.

Granted, this is but one fraternity. Yet, the whole Greek system is involved in a marathon from Boston to Amherst Thursday to help raise money for the Heart Fund. This certainly is involvement, on the part of each fraternity and sorority.

The Greek system has thus, displayed its willingness to be active and serve the community, by raising money for a notable chairty — the Heart Fund. Yet, the success of these fund-raising activities depends not solely upon the participation of UMass Greeks, but the campus itself.

There is more to Greek life at UMass than beer parties and softball games visible on the surface. Afterall, life is not all fund and games — involvement in the community is the most important element to life itself. This week, UMass Greeks have revealed this factor.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

A response to 'self interest'

I would like to comment on a letter in last week's Collegian entitled "Representation or self-interest?"

First of all, I find it hard to believe that no UMass alumnus has ever benefited "the working people" of this state. Surely someone must have?

Second, if the demonstrators against the proposed budget cuts seek to represent "working people trying to make decent lives" then so does the author of that letter.

Third, the assumption that "these people want a government that represents only them" is not nearly as hard to imagine as this strange government itself.

Fourth, trying to isolate this University, with all its diversity and capability, from the rest of the state, as if it were an unnecessary country club, is utter nonsense.

Fifth, I doubt that Sam Bowles would receive his current salary in a socialist system, and I'm sure that he has taken this into consideration before it was mentioned in the letter.

Finally, I would suggest to the author, that if he cannot tie the budget cuts and the demonstrations against them into anything in that vast political and economic world around us, that he should make that long awaited trek to the library. Even he should be able to find that.

Robert Miller

Capitalism and cutbacks

During the rise of the anti-budget cut campaign I have had trouble supporting a strike action because of a conflict between the vast amounts of money being spent by the school and the people living in poverty in neighborhood communities. The conflict was compounded by the proposed welfare cuts by the Governor. Not only will welfare cuts effect the persons dropped from the welfare rolls but it will also tend to lower the average hourly wage on the labor market. This was shown by the advertisement for farm laborers and later an article that said the tobacco farmers have found interest from the local labor market to work at a rate less than the Puerto Rican farm laborers are demanded. A very probable third effect will be the forced desertion of family heads in order for the family to survive.

So that while I feel that it is important for our community here not to suffer in program cutbacks, it is also necessary to watch that monies not taken from UMass programs are not instead stripped from other much needed programs outside UMass.

This is the time for reexamination of the capitalist system and its repetitive nature. It is also our responsibility to not only demand budget cuts but more important demand the areas where the cuts are made. With more than 95 per cent of the state budget going for salaries this is where the cuts should start. Please, I do not mean the elimination of jobs, especially in the middle and lower-income levels. Rather there is no job in the school that I would be willing to pay 60,000 dollars for. The slogan, "tax the rich is not the way," why lend the rich money at all?

We can not separate ourselves from the rest of the community. Money is a problem and in the short run there is the need to spread the burden equally over all members of the community. The long run calls for us not to forget this time and become complacent with the system which is at the root of the problem we are now experiencing.

Fight for education

Strike!

The most productive opportunity that a country can offer to all the people is the chance to enrich their lives. If the government acts to take away the eduational means of intellectual and spiritual growth, it is also enforcing an insult to all Americans who are concerned about their future and their standard of living.

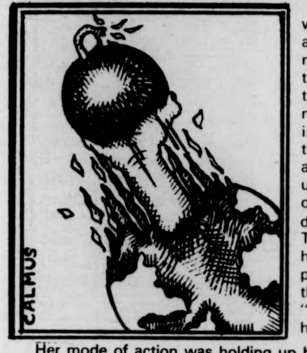
Cause and effects

The word revolution has been so widely used that it no longer inspires the attention which it deserves. We have been using this word so loosely and so indiscriminately that the essence of it is no longer felt or understood.

We have "revolutions" in the newer and more efficient kitchen utensils, in the newer car models, in the newer morals and values etc., etc. The irony is that the revolution which is mostly needed is somewhere out in left field (no pun intended). One of the main factors that deters the materialization of a revolution is that there are too many "revolutionaries".

There are too many individuals who think they are true champions of the people while at the same time their actions do nothing more than have adverse effects.

Revolutions are made by revolutionaries. These revolutionaries are individuals who organize the population, prepare their model of action, and take steps which will promote favorable conditions for the materialization of a revolution. They are what Lenin called "the professional revolutionaries". They dedicate their lives for the preparation of the revolution, and they build an organization which will provide the administrational apparatus for carrying out the revolution.



Unfortunately, these men and women are submerged beneath, and undermined by the actions of a number of individuals who have taken upon themselves the task to terrorize, kill and bomb — all in the name of the revolution. These irresponsible individuals call themselves "revolutionaries" while at the same time their violent and unwarranted acts spread discontent, confusion and disillusionment among the people. These so-called "revolutionaries" have done a great harm to the peoples' cause by the terror which they have spread. Among these "revolutionaries a prominent role has been played by Susan Saxe.

Her mode of action was holding up banks and killing policemen. Her goal? To bring about a "revolutionary" change in society as far as the position of women is concerned. A rather limited goal and a very limited approach to accomplish it. Her goals will not be accomplished by terror. Also, her goals will not be accomplished if they are confined to women alone. She cannot bring such a change in society where people, men and women, are dominated by their economic and political systems. Her goals cannot be realized unless her ideological outlook is broadened in order to embrace a more applicable and general model of the future society.

"Revolutionaries" like Saxe whose concepts of "Amazonism", lesbianism, and womanhood ruled her life and actions, will accomplish very few constructive changes unless their ideologies are expanded and their views take into account the general conditions of society and not just the conditions of women. They must also realize that holding up banks and killing policemen will immediately associate them with criminality and that can only deter the accomplishment of more far-reaching changes.

The terrorism advocated by common criminals such as Saxe must be eliminated, and we as advocates of a truly constructive change within our society must not support but condemn the brand of "revolutionaries" which Saxe represents.

For area governance

By DENNIS PERRY

Every year, the Student Senate gathers for the observed ritual of idle prattle. When the solemn liturgy of budgets review comes around, our modest, demure and sedate representatives throw away their common sense and engage in a truly endless succession of pointless debates. But who can blame them? They are so naive and uninstructed in parliamentary procedure, rules and regulations, and the whole rigamorole of bureaucracy that they sometimes forget whose interests they are representing. Their modest perception thus leads to modest results.

Yet, even worse, those who have survived even one year of the Student Senate continue to associate disordered actions with coherent policies and programs. Incredible, it seems when the stake is $900,000 in student monies. Why, then, is there such deference to these dabblers in politics? Simply, it is assumed that these 100-odd emissaries in the Student Senate will be aware of student interests, effective in communicating them, and will make the decisions to put them into action. So much for exaggeration.

A student opinion survey, conducted by Project Pulse in 1974, indicates otherwise. Students had far more confidence in the skill and ability of their area governments than they did in the Student Senate. As usual, though, all has come to nought: recent legislation by the Senate regulates (if not circumscribes) the activities of the area governments, and there is increasing pressure to screen programs in these areas, which contravenes the official Senate policy of granting area governments autonomy. It all comes down to one thing — the Senate intends to keep its perogative to review all services and programs which are SATF-funded.

It intends to expand at the expense of the area governments through its larger share of those tasks which should accrue to the latter.

The area governments not only have the capability but the desire as well to redress this imbalance. They also closer to student interests, effective in communicating them, and more willing to put them into action (so the Project Pulse survey discloses). The area governments can more quickly mobilize around issues of particular interest to them, or even in conference with each other, can resolve matters of general concern. With the Recognized Student Organizations Office to administer general funds and the Student Union to represent the collective interest of students (viz. student services, student jobs, special programs, lobbying), the area governments can operate more efficiently and effectively, with the increased resources.

There is no doubt in my mind that the area government representatives will do more than talk superficially about the state of the operations, ask a few dutiful questions, make some token suggestions, and then adjourn till the next session.

Boston's marathon

The crowd was very enthusiastic, many of them remembering the words of President Gerald Ford, two days before in Concord. But this day the enthusiasm was due to the 79th celebration of the Boston International Marathon.

This year the numbers of competing athletes went up to 2450, having 52 women and 245 Spanish-speaking athletes, representatives of various Latin American countries. From the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, only five athletes were competing, many of them small and skinny if compared with their American and British counterparts.

The Marathon was full of surprises. William H. Rogers, an education student from Boston College, covered the Olympic distance of 26 miles and 385 yards in two hours, nine minutes and 55 seconds, (2:9:55), establishing a new record. In 1970, Ron Hill, British, made a distance in two hours ten minutes and 30 seconds.

Women athletes made their debut, too. Liane Winter, a 33-year-old automobile industry worker from West Germany, established a new record for women of two hours, 42 minutes and 33 seconds.

The pack of suprises was only half empty. Steve Hoag, (TCTC) was second, Tom Flemming from the New York Athletic Club, made third.

The first Latin American to cover the Olympic distance was Mario Cuevas from the Republic of Mexico, showing that he was the best Spanish-speaking runner in the Marathon.

But suddenly, something happened. Jose Elis de Jesus, a Puerto Rican, covered the distance. So did Eduardo Vera, also from Puerto Rico.

The day before, Jose Elias had said that, "We have come here to be the victorious people, to win, because we are going to run even with our hearts if necessary."

Boston's International Marathon, which was sponsored by the Athletics Associations of Boston, New England and the United States, proved to be an event of great quality. The teams competing — Puerto Rico, first place, United States, second; England, third; and Mexico, fourth.

Boston's Marathon proved that in the next Olympic games, many American nations will present more and well prepared athletes.

For the Puerto Rican team, it shows that even the fact of competing with athletes physically bigger does not make it impossible to run with the heart and become victorious people.

The increasing participation of women was also notable, showing that it is possible for them to compete in a regular marathon.

Other details of socio-political and cultural aspects could be seen in the Marathon, for example the American and English press ignored the arrival of the Puerto Rican team.

The Puerto Rican team, as stated by Jose Cheto Rojas, the team's coach, preferred to stay in their residences at the local Spanish-speaking community rather than in a hotel. After all, as one of the athletes said, they wanted to share their desire to win with the community . . . and they did.

MARATON INTERNACIONAL DE BOSTON

El Maraton Internacional de Boston, celebrado la semana pasada tuvo agradables sorpresas para el equipo del Estado Libre Asociado de Puerto Rico, quien obtuvo el primer lugar.

El Maraton de Boston, consiste de una carrera de distancia Olimpica de 26 millas v 385 vardas. En esta evento 2450 atletas de diferentes paises participaron. Solo 245 eran hispanos, entre los que se contaban los cinco atletas de Puerto Rico. Tambien habian 52 mujeres compitiendo.

El equipo de Puerto Rico, pese a ser de los mas pequenos fisicamente, demostraron que realmente vinieron a ganar.

William Rogers del Colegio de Boston fue el ganador individual. Liane Winter, alemana, fue la mujer ganadora. Mario Cuevas, de Mexico, fue el primer latino en llegar a la meta.

Y los cinco atletas puertorriquenos, (nombres en la columna en ingles), llegaron entre los primeros treinta corredores, por lo que lograron la Victoria para los hispanos del estado y Puerto Rico.

Ziff, Mackenzie return to alma mater

'Ethics and Journalism' colloq

By DON AUCOIN
Staff Reporter

Two 1952 graduates of Amherst College returned to their alma mater last week to head a colloquium on "Ethics and Journalism". John MacKenzie, staff writer for the Washington Post, and Howard Ziff, head of Journalistic Studies at UMass, discussed the need for an ethical code in the media.

MacKenzie stressed the individual responsibility of the journalist, saying "Our own standards have to be higher than what the Constitution gives us". The Post has rigid rules about accepting favors, he said, adding jokingly, "I haven't been able to get tickets to Redskin games for years."

MacKenzie questioned the effectiveness of the National Media Council, an organization which seeks to regulate the media. The New York Times has refused to cooperate with the council, fearing, MacKenzie said, that "self-regulation may become law."

"These primitive forms of surveillance are off on the wrong foot. They're serving the wrong part of the public". The council seems to be protecting the politicians, MacKenzie said, and "The people who need protection are the little people."

Ziff opened his remarks by quoting George Bernard Shaw, who said, "Professions are a conspiracy against the laity". Ziff said he agrees, and prefers to see journalism as "a vocation, a way of life", rather than as a "profession".

He also cited the National Media Council as an example where "political issues are made into professional issues."

The "most common work-a-day problem" for a journalist is the question of invasion of privacy, Ziff said. Both he and MacKenzie agreed that suicide is a particularly touchy area.

Of ethics in journalism, Ziff said, "I don't think it's unethical to peek in Richard Nixon's window. I do think it's unethical to peek in Mr. Average Joe's window. Newspapers should pick on someone their own size." Ziff described as "unethical" the Collegian investigation last year of alleged stealing of food by dining commons employees.

SDC offers last resume job workshop

The Student Development Center will be offering the last in a series of one-session career development workshops focusing on resume writing Tuesday, 7-10 p.m., Campus Center room 903.

Some of the questions that will be addressed during this session include: "What does a job mean to me?", "What marketable skills do I have?" and "How do these answers translate onto a resume?"

This workshop is free and open to all interested students. For registration and more information, call Charlene Campbell at 546-4556.

Hayes (34 pts.) leads late surge as Bullets pierce Celtics

BOSTON [UPI] — Elvin Hayes scored six of his 34 points in a 10-0 spurt early in the fourth quarter to bring the Washington Bullets back for a 100-95 win over the Boston Celtics Sunday in the opening game of their NBA Eastern Conference Championship Series.

The Bullets, trailing by 12 points at the half, pulled to within three at 73-70 after three periods before jumping to an 80-73 edge at 2:16 of the final quarter of the nationally televised game.

Washington had scored six straight points to go ahead 76-73 when Boston coach Tom Heinson decided to rest Dave Cowens, even though the center had only two fouls. The all-star redhead scored 18 on his home court.

Hayes went right back to the basket and Phil Chenier scored another bucket around Cowens' replacement, Henry Finkel, and the Bullets took their win over the defending NBA champs.

Boston scored 10 of the next 14 points, four by Cowens, who was hurried back into the lineup, to trail 84-83 midway through the period. But another hoop by Chenier, who finished with 24 points, and two by Nick Weatherspoon built the Bullets buldge back to seven at 90-83.

The Celtics seemingly had the game going their way through the first two periods as they built a 55-43 halftime lead.

The teams traded baskets to the buzzer, the Bullets having outscored the Celtics 57-40 in the second half.

Sox lose battle of homers to Tigers, 5-4

DETROIT [AP] — Ben Oglivie drove in three runs, two with a home run in the fifth inning, to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 5-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox Sunday.

Ron LeFlore snapped a 2-2 tie with a solo homer for the Tigers in the fourth. An inning later, Oglivie unloaded his first homer of the season after Dan Meyer singled. The blast into the lower deck in right field knocked started Rick Wise from the mound and sent him to his second loss in three decisions.

Lerrin LaGrow was relieved by Tom Walker for Detroit in the sixth but not before raising his season's record to 3-0.

Bernie Carbo and Dwight Evans led off the Boston ninth with home runs to chase Walker, and John Hiller came in to preserve the victory.

Oglivie's first run batted in came in the third when he was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded. Nate Colbert put Detroit on the scoreboard with a run-scoring a single in the first.

Boston picked up its first two runs on a leadoff homer by Carbo in the first and a single by Bob Montgomery following Rico Petrocelli's double in the fourth.

Classics Dept offers five areas of study

The Classics Department offers five different tracks or "concentrations" for its majors. Students may choose to work in Classical Divilization and Literature, Ancient Greek, Latin, Mediterranean Archaeology, or Religion.

The Classical Civilization and Literature concentration requires a minimal amount of study of Greek or Latin, and the remainder of the courses are taken in ancient mythology, religion, literature in translation, history, philosophy, art and archaeology, and the classical tradition.

The Greek and Latin concentrations are for language buffs, and most of the students in these concentrations are preparing for teaching careers at the high school or college levels.

The Religion concentration can accommodate the needs of those who wish a broad undergraduate major in religion, those who plan to enter seminary, and those who plan to continue with graduate studies in religion or Near Eastern Studies.

Further information on these concentrations is available in the CASIAC office (Machmer Hall) and in the Classics Office (544 Herter Hall).

Accountants to hold yearly awards banquet

The Accounting Association and the Accounting Department of the School of Business Administration will hold their annual Awards Banquet, Tuesday, in the Campus Center.

The annual event will feature the recognition of accounting students who have demonstrated high academic achievement during the past year. Among the awards to be presented are: the Accounting Excellence Award; the Barbara Bogdan Award, which is presented to the senior with the highest academic grade point average; the Woman CPA award and the Dow-Jones Award.

In attendance at the banquet will be a number of prominent accountants from national and regional accounting organizations.

Trustees meeting

The Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts will convene their May meeting Wednesday, May 7, at 2:00 p.m. at UMass-Worcester Medial School, Room A11.

Sigma Alpha Mu sponsors Heart Fund waterdunk

By ELLEN KRIGEST
Staff Reporter

Water dunking is back again this year, today and tomorrow. The event is sponsored by Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity in conjunction with it's National Service Project — Bounce for Beats, through which money is raised for the Heart Fund.

In its 4th year, the water dunking will present such well-known campus celebrities as Coach Leaman of the basketball team and two of his players — Jim Burke and Jim Town; Fergus Clydesdale of the Food Science department; Diane Luciani-National Baton Twirling Champion, and who entertained at half-time during basketball season with their "twirling swords"; Coach Dick Garber of the Lacrosse team; Coach Fan Gaudette of the golf and J.V. basketball teams; John Healey, the captain of the baseball team; Dennis Fentio, E.C.A.C. Heavyweight Wrestling Champion, and a member of the football squad; Jeanine Burger and Susan Cantwell of the girls' gymnastic teams; and a host of others. As a special attraction there will be a representative from Amherst Towing.

The water dunking will be held on the Campus Center concourse level from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The times for each water dunk "victim" will be broadcast over WMUA radio.

Sigma Alpha Mu, which is sponsoring the water dunking, is the only co-ed fraternity at UMass. While the fraternity is a National Collegiate fraternity with 36 chapters nation-wide, six of these chapters are now co-ed.

The Beta Epsilon chapter was established at UMass in 1964, and became the forerunner in 1971, when it became the first SAM chapter to go co-ed. Our chapter now boasts of a membership of 59 active members and 8 pledges — 31 of which are 'females', says president Steve Cronin.

WMUA to air talk on proposed lib week

Immediately following tonight's 10 P.M. News, WMUA UMass (radio, 91.1 FM) will air a live discussion on a proposed "People's Liberation Week," a massive cultural exposition which will take place May 1-4 in Hampden Student Center in the Southwest Residential Complex on the UMass campus.

Tonight's live, open forum is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski will interview members of the People's Liberation Week Organizing Committee, who have stated that the event is designed to be "a creative and mass-based effort involving art exhibits, drama, dance, and music performances, symposia, workshops, poetry readings, films, political commentaries-- a collective statement of the progressive community."

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions during the live broadcast.

Spfld bureau seeks interns for youth aid

The Springfield Youth Resources Bureau is a Delinquency Prevention Program serving primarily black children, ages 7 - 17, living within the city of Springfield. Due to insufficient funds over 300 black children will not receive adequate counseling services offered by the Bureau.

How can a student help? The Center for Experiential Education can place you in a pre-professional position on the Bureau staff. You can earn a full year of academic credit and a small living allowance.

If you are seeking a new learning experience, act immediately, you could be placed at this position starting in June 1975. Positions are open to UMass and Five College students. Minority students are urged to apply. The Center urges faculty members to refer students to the Center.

For more information call Larry Scott at 545-1381 or come to the office between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. located at 315 Arnold House, UMass-Amherst.

May 5-9; last chance for senior pix

Next week, May 5-9 will be your last chance to have a sitting for Senior Portraits. There will be evening sittings on the 6th and 8th. Proofs must be returned no later then May 20th in order to have your picture in the yearbook. Sign-up sheets for sittings are located outside the Index Office, 409 Student Union.

Seniors wanting to submit candids and quotes in addition to the "senior picture" must do so by May 15. The candids can be black and white or color, but must be glossy.

Those seniors who had March 17-21 sittings and have not received their proofs are asked to check the display outside the Index Office.

This year the Indes reports 1,852 seniors have had portraits taken, the largest turnout ever, with a week still left for sittings.

Rape panel Tuesday

"Rape and Other Aggressive Behavior" is the topic of the 4th session of the Women's Health Series. This meeting will be held on Tuesday from 12 noon to 1 p.m., in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, and is sponsored by the Division of Health Education of the University.

A panel composed of Sara Wolff, counselor at Everywoman's Center and UHS; Dr. Thomas McBride, director of the Division of Medical Care, UHS; and Saul Chafin of the UMass Police will discuss the support systems available within the University, and the preventive steps that can be taken. Following the panel will be open discussion.

Quality and Value

Two "positives" that product planners accentuate, when they groom their entries for competition.

The ingredients American businessmen strive for, are indeed the ones consumers look for, when they buy. After all, the consumer is the ultimate voter in a product's election . . . and re-election.

But just how much quality can be built into a given item? How many colors and sizes? How will added quality affect the market price? Read about the route most American businessmen take—"The Main Street" approach. Read what this has to do with 21 million dishwashers and 35 million clothes dryers winning their way into American homes.

The adjoining message from the May Reader's Digest sums up important thoughts about quality and value. It's one in a series on our economic system placed by The Business Roundtable.

Reader's Digest

OUR ECONOMIC SYSTEM
YOU Make It Work

ADVERTISEMENT

During these hard times, when all of us are concerned about getting full value in the things we buy, here are some important thoughts about quality

Who Cheers When Products Work?

The new toaster was so shiny you could see yourself in it. But its first piece of toast looked like scorched plywood. And you burned your fingers fishing it out when it didn't pop up. Then the machine heaved a little electronic sigh and stopped toasting altogether.

What a storm! And it got worse. Leaving your wife and three kids beneath the shopping-center canopy, you dashed to your new station wagon. Soaked to the skin, you got behind the wheel and turned the key in the ignition. It wouldn't start. You tried again and again. Nothing. Not a spark.

It was a grand dinner. There were even some halfhearted offers to help with the dishes. "No, we bought a new dishwasher," you announced proudly. You loaded the dishes and joined the company. Uncle Ray was describing his new boat when you noticed the foamy water running across the dining-room floor.

Sound familiar? We all remember vividly when things don't work right. But somehow we don't even think about it when our car covers the 2032-mile trip to Canada and back without a hitch, or when the electric coffeepot keeps perking away year after year. There's just nothing spectacular about the sweeper that sweeps, the oven that bakes, the refrigerator that keeps right on doing its job.

No, the fact is that in our minds one malfunctioning product cancels out the thousands that do work. One of the greatest tributes to American industry is the fact that the "lemon" is news—the fact that bad products are the exceptions that surprise and bother us.

The expectations of the American consumer are very high, and the businessman knows it better than anyone else. That's why he seeks constantly to improve his product and maintain standards. The American Society for Quality Control estimates that business in this country spends from 8 to 15 cents of every sales dollar to overcome errors, to test, inspect and assure quality. Some examples:

- On the Tide-detergent production line in Cincinnati, boxes underfilled or damaged in any way are automatically and literally "kicked" into a reject bin.
- At the Gillette Company in Boston, every razor blade is examined for surface imperfections and sharpness. Some employes come to work unshaven each morning to test Gillette (and competitors') blades under laboratory conditions.
- At Eli Lilly Corporation in Indianapolis, some pills take as long as 45 days to manufacture. The process is stopped many times for tests of the purity and exact quantity of ingredients. As long as the pills are available on drugstore shelves, a control batch will be tested periodically to ensure potency and safety.
- At Sears, Roebuck & Co. in Chicago, many new products, from air conditioners to shotguns to water pumps, are tested in the field and in the lab (sometimes to final destruction) before they are marketed.

To an alert, competitive company, these efforts are as routine (and as vital) as breathing. "The best sales tool possible," says one executive, "is a product worth what you pay for it." But still those negative experiences force their way into our minds. Why can't we make things more reliable? Why do there have to be any mistakes?

To answer such questions, we must measure our expectations as consumers against the realities of the mass market. We must consider what absolute product-perfection would do to prices and volume. Have you ever stopped to think what it would cost to build a television set that would "never" fail or wear out? Many thousands of dollars. And the assembly and inspection procedures would preclude more than a few thousand sets being built each year. Thus, the high quality would be academic for the majority of Americans, who would simply be priced out of the market.

Businessmen face a challenge. Do they travel the low road? Cut corners, use the cheapest materials they can get by with? Or do they take the high road—turning out each product by hand, forgetting costs, doing only "custom work" beyond the financial reach of millions of cost-conscious average Americans?

Wisely, realistically, American business travels instead a "Main Street," where the aim is the best product that can be made at a price the mass of consumers can afford. In shops and factories across the country, engineers, designers, shop foremen hold "product audits," examining the chain saw or tape recorder or child's toy before them. With production costs rising, how can they improve the product but keep the price competitive? Will this plastic compound be as strong and as workable as the now-too-costly metal it must replace? Sure, this transistor is cheaper, but will it do the job as well? At the Rockwell International Corporation, engineers redesigned a pocket calculator over and over again to cut the cost and time of manufacture while improving the reliability of the machine.

The cumulative effect of such activities is a boon to the American consumer, especially during this difficult economic period when all of us want to stretch our dollars as far as possible. For, what good is an improved product if it isn't readily available to everyone at a reasonable price?

The Main Street approach means that there are 117 million TV sets in U. S. homes, 21 million dishwashers, 35 million clothes dryers—and it means that by and large this abundance of products is an abundance of good products, constantly being improved because of competition.

ADVERTISEMENT

Look at automobiles, for instance, probably the most complex and sophisticated item the average consumer will ever buy. Today's cars run much longer between engine tune-ups, oil changes and lubrications than earlier models. Their brakes are much more reliable, their cooling systems require much less maintenance.

"Consumer pressure" is a healthy affirmation of the market system. After all, what good would consumer demands be in a society without businesses competing in reaction to those demands? But consumer pressure is no new phenomenon; it is rather the same pressure that has always motivated the conscientious businessman—competition.

Certainly, consumers have the right to complain, to send things back when they aren't right. But what really makes American products the greatest bargains in the world today—in both cost and performance—is the fact that all of us constantly cast our votes in the marketplace. It is these consumer "ballots" that shape the quality of the goods we purchase day in and day out.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, APRIL 28 — Born today, you are basically an intellectual — the idea man behind projects in which you become involved. In addition, you know how to take your ideas and, through careful planning and logical organization, work them up into feasible endeavors. More important, however, is your ability to assign phases of the work necessary to bring such endeavors to successful conclusions to those best able to carry them out. You know your own strength lies in the initial aspects of any project — and you are content with that.

Not one to hide your feelings, either from yourself or from others, you will have always to be on your guard against your own quick and sharp reactions to what goes on about you. It would be easy for you to be hurt by people, situations or circumstances simply because, in responding too quickly and too deeply to any of these, you may impulsively misinterpret what actually takes place. Time should teach you to count to ten or take a second look before allowing yourself to react.

You have much of the artist's talent and even more of what is thought of as the artist's temperament. It is, however, your executive talents that save you from falling victim to this temperament even as they help you make best use of your artist's talent. Thus you are able to transform your creative impulses into money-making propositions with very little in the way of temper tantrums.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Tuesday, April 29

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Whether a friendship is to continue or be destroyed by jealousy is up to you today. Consider well the consequences of your decision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Afternoon tension may prove enough to undo whatever the morning hours brought in the way of accomplishment. Try to salvage something of morning gains.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A display of temper this morning could cause you to lose out on several advantages you thought were yours. Bring children into afternoon activities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Don't rush another's answers to important questions. You could easily cause mistakes simply by being too eager to get your points across.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can maintain harmony on both the home front and the employment scene -- if you are willing to overlook a few snide remarks. Strive for peace.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — All that you undertake should go well today -- if you are wise enough to undertake only those things for which you are well prepared!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Don't be too quick to accept things at face value today. Take the time and make the effort to look beneath the surface for hidden meanings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Avoid serious encounters with neighbors whose views differ from yours. Where co-workers are concerned, keep your own counsel.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Several different prospects for gain arise in early morning. You will have to make a choice -- whether you wish to or not. Consult an expert.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Emotional control is a must if you are to make the gains you hoped for during morning hours. Personal preferences are definitely out!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you stick to your budget, you should be able to have the necessities and a few luxuries too. Disregard another's ill advice where friends are concerned.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Consider present difficulties from the standpoint of health. Physical and mental activity is required if you are to be able to keep up with the present.

Penn Relay places go to UMass trio

By SCOTT HAYES

For Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, it was like losing to a rival by an identical 14-7 score for the second consecutive year. Thomas finished fifth in the three-mile run for the second straight year. Gillin placed fourth in the 3,000-meter steeplechase with a time that was one second slower than his performance a year ago, as UMass managed three places at the Penn Relays, Friday and Saturday in Philadelphia.

Thomas was timed in 13:36, just four-tenths of a second slower than his effort last season. According to track coach Ken O'Brien, "Thomas looked very good and is probably in better condition than he was last year." Thomas and the rest of the runners in the three-mile started the race at a slow pace and finished strongly. Manhattan's Toney Colon set a Penn Relay record of 13:24.2 by capturing first place. Dennis Trujillo, who was the only runner to finish in front of Thomas at the IC4A cross-country championships last November, placed fourth.

Gillin was fourth in the steeple, behind record-setter Ron Addison of Tennessee, Penn State's George Malloy and Migue Roche of Rutgers. Gillin finished third in the same event last season in Philadelphia, and although he ran a second slower, O'Brien feels Gillin is also in excellent condition.

Bob Adamson was the only other trackster to place. The outstanding UMass jumper placed sixth in the long jump after recovering from a bad spill on his first jump of the trials. Adamson jumped 22-4¼ to qualify for the finals, then just missed three jumps that measured nearly twenty-four feet each when he fouled on each of the attempts. Adamson came up with his best triple jump of the year, a 47-7 effort. Toney Pendleton finished behind Adamson in the long jump taking the seventh position.

Curt Stegerwald recovered from a shaky start to finish tenth in the 440-yard hurdles. Stegerwald had difficulty clearing the first two hurdles, but bounced back to record his personal best of 53.5. The performance was only three-tenths of a second off the school record.

Joe Martens failed to clear the opening height of 6-8 in the high jump, but O'Brien noted that the team's premiere high jumper enjoyed "good height and explosion," in his three attempts. Martens saw his first competition since he was sidelined with a hamstring pull two weeks ago.

The sprint-medley relay team set a school record with a combined time of 3:30.2. Tommy Beland, Pendleton, Mark Healy and Devin Croft entered the UMass record books with their showing.

The mile relay team finished third in its heat and the two-mile relay was fifth in its heat. The distance-medley team placed ninth in the Championship of America race, in which Villanova set a world record.

One of the highlights of the two-day meet, which attracted a crowd of about 27,000, was the Ben Franklin mile. Kenya's Wilson Waigwa of Texas El Paso took first in 3:57.7 as he bested outstanding milers Rick Wohlhuter, Tony Waldrop, Dennis Fikes and Reggie McAffee.

The trackmen will spend the week preparing for the Yankee Conference Championships, which will be held in Burlington, Vermont. The trackers are 2-1 in dual meet competition and will be defending their YanCon crown on Saturday.

Softballers revamp

By GREG LEVINS

The revised, refreshed, and still confident UMass Minutewomen softball team will attempt to post their first win of the season today when they head to Boston State for a 3:30 encounter.

Last Thursday, the team, sporting a new, younger lineup was seemingly mauled by Springfield College 13-2. However, UMass coach Jaquie Elliott refused to call the game a total loss.

"Although the scoreboard didn't reflect a victory, it really was a team victory. The team really pulled together as a unit and strongly supported each other." The contest was played in a downpour from the opening pitch to the final out and needless to say the slippery ball and the muddy field did little to help the Minutewomen cause.

Springfield put the game away in the first inning tallying eight runs before the Minutewomen could blink. This one inning was more than enough to subdue UMass considering in reality it was almost another season's opener Coach Elliott's squad.

Kelliher, Romboli impressive in gridiron intrasquad scrimmage

By BILL ELIAS

A 19-yard touchdown pass from Brian McNally to tight end Lee Harriman proved to be the difference Saturday as the White team defeated the Red, 7-3.

Played before a sparse crowd, the annual intrasquad game featured some encouraging new faces in Fred Kelliher and John Romboli, and some all too familiar mistakes, as UMass fumbled ten times.

The return of Fred Kelliher from knee surgery marks the awakening of the UMass offense. Playing two quarters, Kelliher completed five passes and moved the Red squad to its only score, a 20-yard field goal by Dave Croasdale.

A surprise for UMass was fullback John Romboli from Everett. The 205-pound sophomore carried 19 times for 115 yards.

The lone touchdown of the game came late in the third quarter with McNally at quarterback for the White. After a 25-yard field goal attempt by Croasdale went wide left, McNally took over and moved his team 80 yards in five plays for the score.

The big play in the drive was a 52-yard scamper by halfback Bill Coleman. Cutting across the field defensive cornerback Todd Holt made the stop for the Red squad, tackling Coleman on the 28-yard line.

After Coleman, fullback Jim Torrance carried for nine yards before McNally was thrown for a loss back to the 19-yard line. With three minutes showing on the clock McNally took the snap, rolled right, and lofted a perfect pass to Harriman heading for the flag.

With the score at 7-3, both teams traded fumbles until late in the game when Kelliher moved the Red squad to the White one yard line. The opportunity for victory ended however as fullback Romboli was stopped by linebacker Walter Collins as time ran out.

Baseballers split with Maine

By BILL DOYLE

The UMass varsity baseball team pulled a bit of Jekyll and Hyde on Saturday, losing the first game of a doubleheader to Maine, 12-3, and, on the strength of Jeff Reardon's four hit shutout and Craig Allegrezza's three run homer, coming back in the second game to whip the Black Bears, 6-0, at Lorden Field.

The split kept UMass' Yankee Conference title hopes alive, Coach Dick Bergquist said.

"We're in it as much as anyone," he explained. UMass and Maine are both 2-2 in the conference, while every other team has two losses.

After three UMass pitchers gave up 16 hits and 12 runs in the opening game, Reardon turned the tables around by keeping Maine off balance by mixing his pitchers well. The sophomore righthander allowed only four singles while walking six and striking out seven. He was helped by three double plays, as no Maine runner got as far as third base.

UMass struck early in the second game against starter Rich Prior. In the first inning, Mike Koperniak walked and John Seed forced him. Jerry Mondalto singled and then Allegrezza ripped a pitch over the fence in right-center to give Reardon all the runs he needed.

Allegrezza, who was the starting and losing pitcher in the first game, was UMass' DH in game two and besides his homer, he chipped in with a run scoring double and two singles in four trips to the plate. He also had one hit in the first game.

UMass got to Prior for two more runs in the fifth as Al Lopriore singled after he had struck out four times in a row, Mondalto tripled, and Allegrezza doubled. Another Minutemen run crossed the plate in the eighth on Allegrezza's single and two Maine errors.

The first game saw Allegrezza breezing along with two outs in the fifth inning and one man on base, ahead 2-0 on the strength of a Mondalto home run with Seed on base. Maine's Paul Cairnie hit a routine pop fly that third baseman Mondalto and shortstop Jim Cullen let drop.

"That pop up that wasn't caught rattled Allegrezza," Bergquist said, and indeed it did, as before he could get the final out of the inning, Maine had picked up five runs and had the ball game wrapped up.

After the pop up was allowed to fall to the ground, Allegrezza walked the next batter to load the bases. He then gave up an opposite field double to left by Kevin Goodhue to score two runs. A throwing error by Koperniak allowed the go ahead run to tally and a single, which rightfielder Steve Wright let skip through his legs and roll all the way to the fence, made the score 5-3 in favor of Maine.

Another run in the sixth brought in reliever Rich Kelly, who promptly was tagged for two more runs in the seventh and three in the eighth before he was relieved by Jerry Erb, who gave up the twelfth and final run.

Bert Roberge picked up the victory for Maine, setting down the Minutemen on eight hits, while walking no one and striking out seven.

Sugarloaf trackwomen rule Ludlow road race

By SCOTT HAYES

Seven runners from the Sugarloaf Athletic Club were among the top ten finishers in a four-mile open road race for women, which was held yesterday afternoon in Ludlow.

Charlotte Lettis, a UMass graduate, won individual honors by completing the flat course in 21:56. Lettis finished well ahead of Sue North from the Cherokee Track Club (Springfield College), who placed second with a time of 24:38.

Sue Lambias captured third in 24:47, competing as a member of the Liberty Athletic Club, which is based in the Boston area. UMass senior Marion Kulick took the fourth spot with a 25:08 clocking. Julie Lafriniere, another UMass student, finished fifth in 26:34.

Sugarloaf runners occupied the next four positions as Cindy Hastings, Marianne Wilcox, Carla White and Lila Pease placed sixth through ninth, respectively. Wilcox, also a UMass senior, ran the race in 28:00. Donna Harrington of the Capital Track Club, representing Albany, New York, rounded out the top ten.

Johara Chapman of UMass was eleventh with a time of 29:15.

Lettis, Kulick and Lafriniere are now preparing for New York's "Mini-marathon," which is the most prestigious road race for women in the United States. The top six finishers in the Central Park event will have their expenses paid to race in Puerto Rico as participants in the International Feminists Marathon. More than 300 women are expected to take part in the New York marathon, which is the women's version of the Boston Marathon. Jackie Hansen, a Californian who won the Boston Marathon in 1973 and held the women's record until last Monday, will head the highly competitive field. The Mini-marathon is scheduled for May 10.

Coast Guard, rough water prove too tough for men

By BOB NORTON

The United States Coast Guard Academy broke away at the 1000-meter mark and went on to a nine second and two-length victory over the crew last Saturday on the Thames River. For the second week in a row, UMass was unable to handle the high winds and rough waters and fell prey to a fine crew.

"We just didn't handle the bad water," explained Coach Bill Mahoney. "We don't row well in rough water." Mahoney indicated that Coast Guard is a fast starting crew and that "we had a good start." UMass stayed right with Coast Guard and actually had a couple seat lead at one point. At about the 700-meter mark they encountered relatively rough water and began to fall apart. There were white caps most of the morning and the crew hadn't finished their warm-ups before they had taken on a considerable amount of water. Prior to the start, sweatshirts were used as sponges to bail out the worst of it, but the race began anyway with an excess of two inches of water in the bottom of the shell.

This handicap though, was not the crux of the problem. Mahoney felt "the stroke wasn't long enough" with the strong tail wind and tide. He continued that "we still haven't approached our potential, there will have to be some improvement."

Coast Guard Coach Bill Stowe pointed out that this is his best and strongest team ever, "better than in 1972 when we won the Dad Vail. We won't sit on our laurels after this one. The races will be a lot closer at the Vail and UMass is still considered the team to beat."

The JV race was a near blueprint of the varsity's. The control was eradicated with the onslaught of the rough water. Coast Guard continued strong and fairly smooth rowing to finish the 2000 meter course in 5:47 with UMass a distant fourteen seconds astern.

On the bright side, the frosh heavyweight eight powered UMass to its only victory of the day. Freshman coach Mark Casey was not pleased with the race as he said "a win is a win but it wasn't impressive — we were lucky."

Weightlifters NE champions

The University of Massachusetts weightlifting team captured the New England Collegiate Championship in events held this weekend at Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

UMass lifter Doug Cooney set a New England collegiate record with a lift of 335 pounds. More details in tomorrow's Collegian.

Crewwomen sweep BU, Dartmouth

By TERESA HANAFIN

Good strong rowing, a well-timed sprint, and a boatful of determined women spelled success for the women's crew team as they powered their way to victory over BU and Dartmouth College on the Connecticut River yesterday.

It was the team's second straight win over the BU crew, having beaten them last week on a wind-blown Charles.

This time it was the Connecticut's strong current which played a leading role in the drama, as the race had to be shortened to 750 meters. According to team members, "it felt like 1500 meters."

The race was neck and neck between BU and UMass for most of the course. But a powerful, well-timed sprint of the last 300 yards surged the UMass women past BU for a finishing lead of three-quarters of a length.

Dartmouth came up fast at the end to tie with BU for second place, in what judge Maida Riggs called "the closest thing to a photo finish you could have wanted."

The times, unusually show because of the current, were UMass in at 5:15, while BU and Dartmouth came under the wire approximately 10 seconds later.

"I was getting nervous near the end," laughed coach Bob Spousta. "It was pretty close."

Co-Captain Debbie Kirchmer was more confident. "We plan races to sprint at the end," she commented. "I knew we could do it."

The JV did not fare as well, however, as they placed third in their race, 3½ lengths behind the leader BU, and two behind second place Dartmouth JV.

Buoyed by the past two victories, the team faces MIT next week in hopes of another before the sprints. The third crew travels to Northfield-Mount Herman in search of their first victory.

Golfers dominate YanCons

Freshman Glen Sullivan seems to be admiring one of his shots. He had many chances as he carded a sizzling 71 to easily captured low medalist honors.

By RON ARENA

The UMass golf team proved themselves to be the class of the Yankee Conference in running away with the league championship at Stow Acres C.C. Friday. The Minutemen's superior talent was evident as their nearest rival, runnerup Rhode Island, placed an incredible 32 strokes behind.

Four Minutemen shot under 80 to lead the route led by freshman Glen Sullivan's sizzling one-under-par 71. Sullivan easily took low medalist honors for the day as Joe Artman's consistent 76 carded in as the next best score. UMass totaled a 464 compared to URI's 496, while Connecticut captured third place in the six-team competition, with a 503. New Hampshire, Vermont, and Maine rounded out the standings.

Sullivan reacted nonchalantly following his round noting that his score could have been even better, as he double-bogied the 18th. "I missed some shots I should've gotten." But overall, he obviously was happy with the results. "I found a putter that I liked, and it really helped," claimed Sullivan. Yet he offered no great theory in his evaluation. "I just played well and hit the ball well. That sums it up," he added.

John Lasek and Rick Olsen also enjoyed fine days with 77's, while Tom Toski carded an 80. Six out of seven scores were used in the scoring, so the final UMass score was 83, shot by both Howie Terban and Bill Locke.

Lasek's score resulted primarily in his excellent putting as he played the 6882-yard course with an amazing low number of putts. Lasek, who needed only 29 putts for the day, explained, "I borrowed one of Joe Artman's old putters, and it really made the difference. I was putting really well; I was making everything." He added, "Joe better let me keep it now, or I'll steal it from him anyway."

Coach Fan Gaudette was a proud coach following the match. "We really did better than what I thought. I never figured on winning by this much," remarked the coach. He did agree that UMass obviously out-classed the rest of the field. "I really doubt that any of these teams could shoot that good a score even on their better days," he commented.

The coach also had praise for Sullivan, saying "He has an awful lot of talent. He's adjusted to the team well, as he's concerned with the team and not just himself."

TEE TIME... Howie Terban came as close as he'll ever come to the dream of all golfers, a hole-in-one. Terban's tee shot hit the pin and bounced back on the par three 16th, leaving it a quarter-inch from the hole. "When I placed my marker down, it was overlapping the hole," noted the senior in describing how close he came. "If the wind blew, or if I coughed, it would've gone in."... Joe Artman, in shooting his 76, had what he thought to be his best drive of the day go wasted, as he followed up his tee shot on the 17th by hitting the ball into the water...

You have to feel kind of sorry for the other players in the 42-man field. A Vermont participant, on his last hole, yelled into a teammate to inquire some other scores. His teammate responded by saying one Catamount shot a 79. "Is that low?" asked the player on the green.

"No, some kid from UMass came in with a 71."

"71! You're kidding."

Lettera, Spooner lead way, Gorillas dump Williams 15-6

By TOM CROWLEY

Sputtering in the first half, the UMass lacrosse team regained its scoring form in the second half and beat Williams College, 15-6 last Saturday.

The Gorillas were only up 1-0 at the end of the first quarter and 4-1 at halftime.

In the second half, though, as the sun went behind the clouds and it got windy and cold, the Minutemen got hot. UMass outscored the Ephmen 7-3 in the third and were up at one point in the fourth period 13-4.

The offense dominated the second half as the defense had the first. The defense played by both teams in the first half was good and the play of the Williams goalie, sophomore Bob Harriman, was excellent.

The UMass defense kept them in the game when the offense was sputtering. However, three sure goals hit the bar and Williams protected the crease well.

Jeff Spooner took a Steve Pappas pass and scored the first goal of the game from the corner. Pappas got the assist on the next goal as Terry Keefe scored on a 4-3 fast break early in the second period.

Williams then got on the board with a Scott Supple man-up goal, in the middle of the second period.

Just before the half, UMass shook off its doldrums as Spooner scored two late period goals, both assisted by Pappas, to lead 4-1 at intermission.

The Gorillas came back as Mike Lettera scored an unassisted goal on a bounce shot. Lettera scored a minute later as he cut across the middle, took a pass from Spooner and put the pea past the goalie.

Spooner assisted on the next goal as he passed to Kevin Patterson out front for the score.

Pappas faked out his man producing a 4-1 break as Patterson scored easily on a pass from Spooner. All of these scores were set up by long passes by Bob Durland.

Williams answered with two scores right after this. Todd Erikson scored when the Ephmen were three men up and Phil Hartigan scored from in front when UMass was a man down.

When UMass was up 8-4, Williams started to set rather heated and words being exchanged. Vin LoBello was involved in one of these discussions and when his penalty was over, he outran his companion from the penalty box and scored on a pass from Spooner.

Andy Scheffer scored his first goal of the season and Gene Hardiman scored with an assist to Lettera. The period ended 11-4 UMass, as they keep the ball in the Williams zone for most of the period.

In the fourth, Patterson scored on a 3-2 break set up by a Frank Garahan check. He scored again when he took a pass from Spooner and seemed to score from behind the net.

Patterson tallied his fourth goal of the game with an assist to Joe Martin and Bill Arnold finished out the UMass scoring.

Williams had 18 shots and UMass had 42. Durland only had to make nine saves, an expression of the tight defense played by the Minutemen.

Bill O'Brien, the second leading scorer until the Williams game, missed the game and may be out the rest of the season. He has a bruise in his upper right side and it bleeds internally. It is painful and he has a doctor's appointment Friday to see if he can play. If the bleeding doesn't stop, O'Brien is in danger of getting calcium deposits.

UVM bests netmen; wins YanCon war

By PETER NALAK

The 1975 Yankee Conference tennis championship was a showdown between UMass and Vermont, with the UMass netmen being shot down yesterday on the final day of competition by a 24-15 margin.

Saturday's matches cleared away the weaker teams, leaving the netmen and Catamounts in a nearly complete head-to-head battle for the singles.

vermont players reached the singles finals in every bracket, one through six. UMass players met them there, with the exception of fifth singles where netmen Marc Ouellet had been beaten.

By Saturday night the team totals were: Vermont 13; UMass 12. New Hampshire, the closest team to the leaders, had only five points.

Billy Karol

Singles finals were held Sunday morning and the score stayed close. UMass had three singles champions: Rob Schpeiser at first; Barnaby Kalan at fourth and Art Cloutier at sixth singles.

But Vermont captured second, third and fifth singles to stay ahead.

The netmen's doubles were their only chance for a team victory. But UMass ran into three tough teams from New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

All three UMass doubles duos were eliminated in the semi-finals also eliminating any threat against against Vermont's defense of their 1974 Yankee Conference title.

Things had looked good for the netmen. "We couldn't have gotten a better draw if we had made it ourselves," assistant Coach Ted Donahue said.

Also, last year's number one netmen, Rob Schpeiser, rejoined the team four days before the tournament began.

"I knew it meant a lot to everybody and I wanted to help to try and win it for the coach, the team and myself," Schpeiser said.

Schpeiser was in top form and pulled off one of the best upsets of the tournament. He breezed through opponents from Rhode Island and Connecticut, 6-4, 6-4 and 7-5 6-4 to reach the finals of number one singles.

Schpeiser then upset the number one seed, Vermont's Jay Moorhead to win his bracket 4-6, 7-5, 6-1.

The second singles bracket went along with the seedings. UMass captain Chris Post, seeded second, reached the finals with a 6-1, 6-4 victory against a New Hampshire Wildcat.

But Post lost a tight 4-6, 3-6 final to Moorhead in a match marked by only two service breaks.

In the third singles mini-tournament Bill Karol advanced to the finals with a 2-6, 6-3, 6-4 struggle against a UConn player. He then met Dick Hillmer of Vermont, last year's fourth singles champion who had missed most of this season with tendonitis.

Hilmer had whipped himself into tournament shape in one week and a shell-shocked Karol was off the court, 2-6, 3-6.

Netman Barnaby Kalan, a runner-up in last year's fourth singles bracket, advanced to the finals 6-4, 7-6 for another try. This time Kalen prevailed 7-5, 7-6 over a Vermont netman, and added three points to UMass' tally.

First seeded Marc Ouellet lost a double painful match in the semifinals. His 3-6, 1-6 upset boosted Vermont's total by two points.

But Art Cloutier, at sixth singles, was the surprise of tournaments for UMass. Cloutier, playing only his fourth, fifth and sixth matches this year took the title.

His unseeded advance was marked by three tough matches: a 6-3, 6-4 win over Maine; a 3-6, 6-3, 6-4 victory against Rhode Island and his final 6-3, 4-6, 6-2 triumph.

"The doubles teams didn't let me down — they were consistent," Coach Kosakowski said.

All three teams lost at the same time, showing the consistency Kosakowski was referring to.

First doubles, Schpeiser and Karol, picked up one point in the first round, 6-4, 6-2. They were beaten almost as quickly, 4-6, 5-7 one round later.

Post and Ouellet followed the same pattern at second doubles. They advanced 6-2, 5-7, 6-4 to the semifinals but were downed 3-6, 6-3, 3-6.

At third doubles, Kalan and Dave Abramoff, the bracket's top seeded team, were upset 6-2, 5-7, 3-6.

Emergency US evacuation from Saigon begins

Compiled From Wires

The emergency evacuation of Americans by helicopter from Communist-threatened Saigon was to get underway early this morning U.S. sources in Washington told the Associated Press today.

The disclosure came after Viet Cong troops shelling the Tan Son Nhut Airbase outside Saigon withdrew, and waves of U.S. Air Force C130 transports took off from the Philippines in hopes of landing at the beseiged airport.

Reliable sources also told the AP that Viet Cong 130mm artillery had knocked out all but 5,000 feet of the main runway — Saigon's last remaining link for the evacuation of refugees and 940 Americans still reported in Vietnam.

The helicopter airlift was to be carried out using Marine-scouted landing areas with craft from ships of the 40-unit U.S. 7th Fleet standing off South Vietnam.

Meanwhile, South Vietnamese President Duong Van Minh today ordered all Americans assigned to the U.S. defense attache's office to leave Saigon within 23 hours. The radio announcement appeared to meet some demands that Viet Cong laid down for peace negotiations.

In downtown Saigon, trucks pulled up at the Brink Hotel and pulled out all Americans there in the start of the final evacuation of U.S. citizens. Military sources said a Viet Cong regiment of unknown strength withdrew this morning to a command post at Tan Phu Trung village on Highway 1, about 10 miles north of the airbase.

They earlier overran two government ranger battalions in the area, the sources said. They said the forward Viet Cong positions were in an arc two miles northwest to north of the base. Two battalions of crack government special forces, paratrooper, and infantrymen moved out trying to secure the area.

Two Marines were among those killed in the shelling of the airfield and a U.S. Air Force C130 cargo plane trying to fly refugees out was destroyed. Flights had been halted until the pullback.

Sources at the Pentagon in Washington said sketchy reports were received about the deaths of the Marines, who had been on guard duty at the U.S. defense attache's office.

On Tu Do Street, a half-mile long strip of garish bars and tawdry shops, bordered at one end by a Roman Catholic cathedral and at the other by the Saigon River, people took cover where they could.

Drivers of cars slammed on the brakes and raced toward shelter. One of the planes veered over a wide street and strafed it. Anti-aircraft guns around the presidential palace, two blocks from the cathedral, fired at planes which from the ground appeared to move slowly, slowly across the darkening sky.

Boston denies parade permit

By BILL DENSMORE

A parade permit application filed by four UMass students to demonstrate on the State House steps tomorrow has been denied by the City of Boston, director of security David L. Johnston said he was told yesterday.

A second permit is still pending.

Johnston said Paul Doherty, chief of the Capitol Police, called him yesterday to tell him a permit request for 7,000 protestors of budget cuts had been denied.

Doherty said, according to Johnston, that "the City of Boston had turned down a request to shut-off Beacon Street. Doherty did not say who in the city had denied the permit request.

Stephen Dunleavy, an aide to Boston Police Commissioner Robert DiGrazia, said his understanding is that a two-block area of Beacon Street below the State House steps is controlled by the Capitol Police, not Boston.

He said parade permits are handled by a different city department and he had heard of no permit being issued or denied.

A second permit for Boston Common is still pending, student organizers on campus say.

Both permits were filed by four UMass-Amherst students, according to Johnston. He recalled three as Dudley Phillips, David Millikin and Nora Chansky. None could be reached immediately for comment last night.

According to Johnston, Doherty said: "There's been no permission to use the State House steps."

Student Action Committee organizer Miguel Rivera and others met with campus Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and attorney Sidney Myers to set up transportation to Boston for the rally, Bromery said last night.

The Chancellor said he agreed to allow rental of about ten Student Senate Transit Service buses with student-generated funds to get as many as 1,000 students to Boston tomorrow.

But Bromery said permission to rent the buses for the day would only apply if students went to a "concert" on the Boston Common and not directly to lobby against budget cuts.

UMass security and police director Johnston said he wanted to warn students planning to rally in Boston of the permit denial for Beacon Street and the State House.

"I'd like to tell people that by all means they must obey the orders of the police if they go down there. Otherwise they're not going to get back to Amherst as they should," Johnston said.

Campus officials have discouraged students from demonstrating at the State House but have not actually opposed it. They say it is not an "effective" means to protest proposed cuts by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis until the Legislature is presented with an actual budget — sometime this summer.

There was no indication whether the 7,000 figure listed on the students' permit application was

Selectmen approve JFK library location

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

The town selectmen last night unanimously voted to endorse the location of the proposed JFK library on the UMass campus, after hearing a report from Gladstone associate consultants.

"The negative impacts are not nearly as great as I would have thought," said Chairperson Nancy Eddy. "I believe this board should have no objection to its location on the UMass campus."

Visitor consultant Tobie Lanoll, after outlining a preliminary assessment of visitation projection, estimated a visitation level of 300,000 persons annually, with a higher peak when it first opens.

Harvey Joyner, Vice-President of Barton Aschman traffic consultants said, "In our preliminary analysis, we see few significant impacts that may arise from library traffic."

Joyner estimated that 2700 persons per day would view the library-museum complex, 2400 of which would come by automobile. Breaking these figures down further, he projected a rate of 810 cars at the library during the highest attended day of the year.

Chairperson Eddy cited the benefits of the library locating in Amherst as being an educational advantage for the town and local schools, and strengthening research efforts at UMass.

Lanoll explained that the "key determinent" to the expected low level of visitation as compared to the Austin, Texas Johnson library of 500,000 annual visitors was the relatively remote Amherst location.

Lanoll said most trips in this region were for pass-through visits to see the foilage. "Major points of visitation are lacking in the Pioneer Valley now," he said. "Other points lie outside the Valley, such as Tanglewood and Sturbridge Village, and require a visit of a half day or more."

Lanoll estimated most visitors to spend one half to one hour at the library. Admission charge to the educational and commemorative exhibit will be 50 cents, which will have no impact according to Lanoll, "except to possibly discourage students."

SGA again fails to elect president

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

The Student Government Association (SGA) failed last night for the third time in six days to elect a president for next year.

The last ballot gave John O'Keefe 46.7 votes to craig Ghodotti's 41.4. A 48.1 vote majority is necessary for election.

The elections started last Tuesday with Ghodotti, O'Keefe, Peter Lewicke, Cindy McGrath, and Tim O'Brien running for the presidential position.

The assembly recessed with a stalemate between Ghodotti and O'Brien. The other candidates were eliminated, as SGA rules provide that only the two top vote getters are valid candidates after the first ballot.

Upon reconvening, the assembly voted to reopen nominations, and the five original candidates were renominated. The meeting ended in a standoff between Ghodotti and O'Keefe when the assembly recessed due to the lack of a quorum.

At last night's meeting, nominations were reopened after a runoff between Ghodotti and O'Keefe failed to produce a majority candidate due to abstentions.

Tim O'Brien and Henry Ragin were nominated and all candidates were allowed to make three minute speeches.

Ragin resigned after he addressed the assembly in what he said was his first "serious" speech as a member of the SGA.

"'Stand by your man.' Forget political expediency," Ragin said. "Forget time constraints. Let's just do this right. If I ran for president for 20 years, I couldn't make the farce of these elections that you have." he added.

O'Keefe said, if elected, he would resign October 1 in favor of an "open" election and urged the other candidates to do likewise.

Ghodotti said, "For the salvation of the SGA, we need a president now. We need some kind of student unity."

If elected, he added, he also would resign Oct. 1.

O'Brien said, "We will lose the student trusteeship if we don't elect a president soon.

"Win or lose," O'Brien said, "I will present a nomination before the Student Senate Wednesday calling for open elections."

The SGA will reconvene Monday at 7:00 in room 163 of the Campus Center.

UMTA makes financial, legal plans for co-op

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) is "going full steam ahead on the co-op idea" despite concern regarding the payment of a $140,000 loan owed by Married Student Housing, according to UMTA member Clifford Perkins.

UMTA is working with the campus administration in determining the feasibility of a cooperative self-management program for Married Student Housing. UMTA hopes to institute the co-op by September.

A financial planner has been hired to "look at expenditures and establish procedures for making a complete financial package" said Douglas Forsyth, Chancellor's staff member. Forsyth also said that several lawyers are being considered for the task of conducting a feasibility study of the legal implications of the co-op management plan.

Concern exists regarding a $140,000 outstanding loan which was taken out on the Married Student apartment complexes. It was originally agreed that the administration would assume responsibility for the repayment of the loan, as spelled out in an agreement signed by UMTA and the campus administration. However, it was later learned by UMTA that reserves generated by student rent monies would be used to pay for the loan.

It was agreed at a joint UMTA-administration meeting last week that "a process for the determination of what portion of this loan should be assumed by the University" would be undertaken, according to Forsyth.

This may involve selecting a "well-run apartment complex in the Amherst area, and using their vacancy rate as a model," said UMTA spokesperson Karen Forsgard. "UMTA will be responsible for a "reasonable" vacancy rate, and the university will assume the rest paying off the loan in this fashion, she claims.

"The matter is still under investigation," Forsgard added. But UMTA does not want to hold up the progress of the co-op feasibility study or institution of the management agreement while the loan is investigated.

The once sleek canoe constructed by the UMass Concrete Canoe Team suffered considerable damage en route to their fourth place finish in the Annual Whitewater Concrete Canoe Race held in Maine over the weekend.

Concrete canoe finishes fourth

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

The UMass Concrete Canoe Team captured fourth place this weekend in the first Annual Whitewater Concrete Canoe race, and won a first place trophy for Best Designed and Constructed canoe.

The team has been invited to participate in the National Invitational Concrete Canoe Championship in Princeton, N.J., but declined the offer, saying it would be "no challenge."

Out of the 19 concrete canoes entered in the race on the Kenduskeag Stream in Bangor, Maine, only six crossed the finish line. Paddlers Jim Dokoozian and Simon Bunyard manned the canoe for UMass, and were aided by other team members and the "pit crew" when the canoe needed emergency repairs during the race. The canoe now has a dozen holes from hitting rocks on the run down the 3rd class (most difficult in the 10½ mile race) rapids.

The University of New Hampshire won first place in the race, but according to team members, "they portaged (picked up and carried) their canoe over the third class rapids." UConn came in second, New Haven placed third. The U. S. Coast Guard entered three canoes in the competition, but all three sank, teammen said.

The 270 lb. canoe will now go on display in Marston Hall. Next year, UMass plans to enter another canoe, perhaps two, in the race. Plans are already underway for improvement in design and construction, team members said. Another improvement would be to increase the ship's cooler capacity to two cases of beer, they added.

Dorm rent increases slated for next year

By LARRY KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

Rent increases for dorms on campus will vary from $25-30 per year next fall, according to Ken Dean, director of Residential Life.

Dean also said rumors that there will be a universal fee or a utilities fee next fall are false. The administration announced on April 11 that it will recommend a policy of no new fees and mandatory dorm residency to the Board of Trustees.

Married student housing will have rent increases of $7 to $12.50 per month next fall depending on the type of unit rented, said Dean.

The cost of the meal plans will go up by $45.50 per year or less next year, Dean added.

The rents to be charged in the different residential areas next year are as follows:

—Orchard Hill - $705 per year; Southwest - $705 per year; Sylvan - $725 per year; Renovated dorms in Northeast and Central - $705 per year; Other dorms in Northeast and Central - $645 per year.

The rates to be charged for the various board plans next year are:

—10 meal plan - $656 per year; 14 meal plan - $736 per year; 19 meal plan - $806 per year.

The 19 and 14 meal plans were also announced by the administration on April 11. The 19 meal plan will offer three meals a day on weekdays and two meals a day on weekends. The 14 meal plan will offer two meals a day seven days a week.

Dean said there was no rent increase last year so the new increase will cover the last two years of inflation.

Tymkowiche, DC head chef, dies

Theodore "Teddy" Tymkowiche, familiar to students as a head chef for UMass dining commons for the past 28 years, died on the job yesterday.

Tymkowiche was born in Poland on December 12, 1913 and was brought to this country as a child. He was brought up in Sunderland and attended the public schools there. Tymkowiche was married to the former Anna Ursia on May 11, 1937. They had 5 sons, two daughters and 10 grandchildren.

During WWII, Tymkowiche served in France and Germany where he was decorated with the Purple Heart for bravery. After the war he was a member of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 754 and the South Hadley American Legion post.

His fellow workers in Franklin Dining Commons expressed deep sorrow yesterday. He was said to have been the kind of person who, despite being head chef, would take time out to work with students washing pots and pans.

Calling hours will be at the Douglas Funeral Home in Amherst today and tomorrow from 2 to 5 and 7 to 9. There will be a funeral service Thursday morning at 9:15 at the funeral home, followed by a 10:00 a.m. High Mass at the Holy Ghost Ukranian Church in South Deerfield.

Bike club guides rides

"Come ride with me" could be the bicycle club's Spring slogan. The club is offering guided five to ten mile rides starting at 1:00 every day this week from in front of the Student Union, "to attract people to come out on a nice day to celebrate Spring," said club member Peter Bittlinger.

Bittlinger, who was yesterday's trip guide said a ten-speed bike wasn't necessary, but riders should have a bike which is in "fairly good mechanical condition," for the estimated 90 minute ride.

Bittlinger also said the League of American Wheelmen (LAW) is sponsoring the Great Eastern Area Rally (GEAR '75) at UMass on May 24-25 which is open to all students.

LAW, which does have women members, will be holding 12 rides, ranging from a tour of the five colleges to a 100 mile ride to New Hampshire and Vermont.

Glucksteen reiterates stand

Faculty must teach

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
Staff Reporter

Former Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern yesterday reiterated in an interview what he wrote to the faculty in a letter sent out last Friday — that the faculty is expected to hold classes during the class moratorium.

"Faculty are expected to meet with classes regardless of attendance," he wrote in a memorandum. He added that the faculty is responsible for determining make-up work for students who miss classes during the moratorium.

Gluckstern said the only way for faculty members to participate in the moratorium is for them to apply for a Leave Without Pay (LWOP) through their department heads. "Permission for the LWOP is contingent upon the faculty member making alternate arrangements for covering the class," the letter added.

However, a Collegian random survey of fifteen department heads yesterday revealed that no faculty members have applied for the leave, and that none were expected to.

The departments surveyed were in the School of Business Administration, the College of Arts and Sciences, the School of Engineering, and the School of Education.

It has been the general trend in past student strikes and moratoriums that classes in sciences and engineering are the least likely to be cancelled by professors. When asked if any faculty were expected to apply for the LWOP, one department head in the Engineering Department said, "I don't think there will be any. I'd be surprised."

Gluckstern said yesterday that he expects all the faculty to attend classes. However, he added that "We normally don't check up" on faculty attendance.

Gluckstern said in his letter that the common goal is "to obtain the resources necessary to perform our responsibilities well," but he added this must be done in a "forceful and responsible manner."

He said yesterday this does not mean that he is against the moratorium. Rather, he emphasized that the demands for funding for UMass must be relayed to governor Michael S. Dukakis and the legislature.

Gluckstern compared this moratorium to the strike in 1970, and said they were very different. In 1970, "tensions were very high," he said, and the university closed classes. This allowed the faculty to hold workshops on the national problems that arose out of the Vietnam war. Because of this faculty members were not responsible for attending classes, as they are now, he said.

Classroom debate recorded for TV

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

While the television camera of Channel 3 monitored the action, two members of the Student Action Committee (SAC) yesterday initiated a "political" discussion of the current campus crisis concerning budget cutbacks and the class moratorium scheduled for today.

Michael Best, professor of economics voiced reservations concerning what had happened in his classroom. Best said when he arrived at his class, the two SAC members, and Channel 3 were there. "I talked it over with both groups, and presented my dilemma to the class concerning whether the class time should be used for a political discussion."

Best said he believes every student has the right and responsibility to be aware and involved with what is going on around him, but questioned the propriety of using the classroom for such a purpose. "I want to protect the interest of everyone — some students may not want to support the action presented, and in the classroom situation they are a captive audience."

Best ultimately left the decision up to the class, which voted in favor of the discussion, with one dissenter among the group.

Marc Zimmerman, a spokesperson for the SAC and one of the initiators of the discussion in Best's class said "I didn't feel any hostility" in the classroom, but added that the students wanted hard core facts, which we couldn't give them because we can't get them from the University. Zimmerman said that response to the discussion was good, however, and students seemed interested in the discussion.

SAC members had originally planned to send volunteers to specific classes to initiate discussions, but the idea was dropped in favor of letting everyone go to their own classes and begin discussions, and urging their friends to follow suit.

Other SAC members said the discussions depended on the attitudes of the teachers involved in letting the class have time for discussion.

Dorm meetings, rally, workshop set today

By Progressive News Service

UMass students are beginning the first day of the two day moratorium of classes today with a variety of campus-wide activites.

The Student Action Committee has coordinated dorm meetings and workshops in the campus center for today so that students may increase their understanding of the budget cuts and other related issues.

DORM MEETINGS

All University dormitories will hold meetings from 10:00 a.m. until noon. Discussions facilitated by the SAC will acquaint students with the need to fight budget cuts on both the legislative and administrative levels.

Afternoon workshop schedules and lists of the nine demands passed by students at the first Town Meeting will be available for all residents. These morning sessions will give students a chance to understand the nature and systemic reasons for the cutbacks at UMass. Signs have been posted throughout each dormitory to tell where these meetings will be held.

WORKSHOPS

The Campus Center workshops will run from 11:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. These workshops will enable students to voice problems while providing information concerning the socio-economic situation now facing students and other low-income people.

The workshops have been set up in order that the participants may exchange individual information as the coordinators. This interaction will hopefully create a solid perspective by which students may assess their role in society as well as in the university.

RALLY

Information concerning a musical event tentatively scheduled for 9:30 this evening will be available at the afternoon workshops.

An information table has been set up at the front entrance of the Student Union. Workshop schedules and locations as well as any new moratorium information will be available at this table.

the actual number of students from UMass planning to go to Boston.

On Saturday and Sunday, House Speaker David M. Bartley, (D—Holyoke) described a student class boycott as a "nice way to spend a couple of spring days." He said the students were foolish to protest a theoretical ten per cent cut by Dukakis.

The Legislature is scheduled to debate a proposed tuition increase bill for the state's public education system tomorrow, student organizers say, and hence the planned rally. But similar bills filed in other sessions have never met with approval.

Viet Cong reject offer by Minh for ceasefire

Complied from wires

SAIGON — Gen. Duong Van Big Minh took over yesterday as South Vietnam's third president in a week but failed in his initial plea to the Communists for an immediate cease-fire. Minutes later warplanes bombed Saigon's airport for the first time in the war.

As thunderclouds raged overhead, the 59-year-old hero of the coup that overthrew President Ngo Dinh Diem 12 years ago took the oath of office to succeed Tran Van Huong. Minh addressed himself to the Communists: "Let us sit together and negotiate and work out a solution."

Minh aimed his acceptance speech at the Communists. "I propose we stop all aggression against each other", at friendly nations, "We sincerely call on all the world's people to come to our aid to recover peace" and at his own people "please be courageous and stay here and accept the fate of God".

He did not mention the United States by name.

Minh ordered his soldiers — outnumbered three to one around Saigon alone — to "protect...-whatever territory we have left over."

With the pressure building on the capital, Minh told his people that "within the days to come, I can promise you nothing but difficulties. I cannot promise you much.

"I accept the responsibility...to seek a cease-fire and to reopen negotiations and bring peace on the basis of the 1973 Paris peace agreement."

In Paris, a North Vietnamese spokesman, asked whether Minh's election and call for peace talks had met the Communists' conditions for negotiations, replied, "Certainly not." A Viet Cong spokesman in Saigon said only that Minh's inaugural remarks were "not in keeping" with Communist demands.

But the three-paragraph statement from the Viet Cong indicated its position has hardened in recent days. After demanding the abolishment of the Saigon administration and its army and an end to U.S. intervention, the statement said:

"Those who are true patriots must put themselves on the side of the people and fight energetically for the realization of these demands. The declaration of Mr. Duong Van Minh hardly conforms with the demands mentioned above."

The statement called for a new administration in Saigon standing for "peace, independence, democracy, national concord and serious implementation of the Paris agreement."

Sources close to Minh said his new government was making every effort to meet these demands.

Minh said one of his first measures would be the immediate release of political prisoners and an end to press censorship. Describing the coming days as "very difficult," he called on government troops "to defend the territory which is left and to defend peace."

Congressmen urge US evacuation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The bombing of Saigon airport triggered congressional demands yesterday to close the United States Embassy in Vietnam, recall Ambassador Graham Martin, and speed up the evacuation of the remaining 954 Americans.

Some congressional leaders also voiced growing uneasiness with the airlift of thousands of South Vietnamese refugees to this country.

"I want all Americans out," Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield told reporters.

Republican Leader Hugh Scott said, "In view of the bombing, we ought to remove everyone in the embassy, including our ambassador, without delay."

Mansfield concurred the embassy should be closed.

Scott told the Senate there is "no need to fear too great an influx" of refugees into any one state. He asked for an end to "niggling and nit-picking" about the evacuees.

But Assistant Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd, following Scott, said the Vietnamese would encounter cultural and language difficulties in the United States. The recession and high unemployment "does not add to the prospect of success" in bringing 130,000 refugees to this country, he said.

Indochina developments

House votes today

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House leadership succeeded yesterday in arranging a speedy floor vote today on a Senate-passed bill providing $327 million for aid and evacuation in South Vietnam.

By a voice vote, the House Rules Committee waived a rule that requires legislation to sit in the House for three working days before it is voted upon.

Rep. Thomas E. Morgan, D-Pa., chairman of the House International Relations Committee, argued before the Rules Committee that the bill should be brought to a quick vote because of the emergency in South Vietnam.

"This is an emergency," he said. "I think we will see a speed up in the evacuation once it is passed. I want to get Americans out."

Refugees jam planes

By United Press international

South Vietnamese refugees yesterday jammed themselves into cargo planes to get to safety in an unknown land before their country falls to the Communists.

Refugees were being taken to Clark Air Base in the Philipines in the face of official reluctance. The Philippine government is anxious to realign its foreign policy from its previous one-sided relationship with Washington.

Laos forces fight

VIENTIANE [UPI] — Communist shelling has prevented loyalist forces from reoccupying a strategic road junction in northern Laos despite an order from the coalition government for Communist troops to withdraw, military sources said yesterday.

The order set a deadline of last Saturday noon for both sides to resume their original cease-fire positions near Sala Phou Koun, 90 miles north of Vientiane.

France, United Nations request mercy shipments for Cambodia

By United Press International

France and the United Nations yesterday appealed to the new pro-Communist government in Cambodia to permit mercy shipments of food and medicine to hundreds of foreigners holed up in the French embassy in Phnom Penh. There was no immediate reply.

Phnom Penh radio, in a broadcast monitored in Bangkok, said the victorious Khmer Rouge had decided to keep Prince Norodom Sihanouk as chief of state. But it said nothing of the fates of more than 600 foreigners, including a handful of American newsman, who were in Phnom Penh when it fell April 17.

French government officials in Paris said an epidemic of dysentery had broken out among the refugees in the embassy. French sources at the United Nations said the foreigners needed food, medicine and a way to leave the complex.

A French military transport plane was standing by at the Laotian capital of Vientiane with a load of medical and other relief supplies, awaiting an okay from Cambodia for permission to land at Phnom Penh.

A French spokesman said that if the flight could be made the aircraft would try to evacuate at least some of the refugees now inside the embassy compound.

U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim appealed to both Phnom Penh and to Sihanouk in Peking to permit relief missions to the embassy. A U.N. spokesman said yesterday no response had been received either from Sihanouk or from the Cambodian capital.

French sources also said the Khmer Rouge took away the embassy's radio transmitter and that authorities in Paris had heard nothing since Saturday. It was not clear whether the Communist authorities confiscated the transmitter or forbade its use.

There also was no word from Phnom Penh as to the fate or whereabouts of former premier Long Boret and other leaders of the deposed government, some of whom the Khmer Rouge once said were marked for death.

Phnom Penh radio instead carried a statement, under Khmer Rouge leader Khiu Samphan's signature, that a "special national congress" of the Cambodian liberation movement had decided unanimously to maintain Sihanouk as cheif of state.

The broadcast shed little light on other developments in Cambodia, including what sort of political organization was being set up to run the country.

Ford opposes consumer agency

Also urges repeal of fair trade laws

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday told 3,000 cheering members of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce that he opposed congressional proposals for a consumer protection agency and he wanted repeal of fair trade laws which set minimum retail prices for certain products.

A consumer protection agency, he said, would be a waste of money, while abolishing fair trade prices would make Americans' dollars go farther.

"I do not believe that we need yet another federal bureaucracy in Washington with its attendant cost — about $16 million over the next three years — and hundreds of additional federal employes," Ford said, referring to the proposed consumer agency.

The 3,000 persons at the 63rd annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce interrupted Ford's half hour speech 15 times with applause and gave him two standing ovations.

In the Senate, a consumer protection agency bill has already been reported out by the Government Operations Committee. Several bills are pending in the House but none has yet moved through committee.

Advocates of the agency, which would represent consumers' interests before other federal agencies, were optimistic that the proposals would fare better in the new, more liberal Congress than they have in legislative battles over the past several years.

But Ford went on record Monday as being adamant in his opposition.

"I have ordered action by the executive departments and agencies to make major improvements in the quality of service to the consumer, and I have asked the Congress to postpone action on legislation which would create a new federal agency for consumer advocacy," Ford said.

Ford said Congress should turn to ending fair trade laws which allow manufacturers to set minimum prices for items they sell. Discount stores have been trying for years to overturn these state laws so they could sell at lower prices.

"Federal law now permits states to allow manufacturers to dictate the price of their products, and drives up the cost of such items as books, cosmetics, shoes and hardware." Ford said.

"These Depression-era laws — which cost consumers an estimated $2 billion a year — should be laid to rest alongside the N.R.A. Blue Eagle of the same period."

Edelin requests judge declare him innocent

BOSTON [AP] — Dr. Kenneth C. Edelin is asking a judge to declare him innocent of manslaughter, despite his conviction last February in the death of an aborted fetus.

Edelin's lawyers filed a memorandum yesterday asking Suffolk Superior Court Judge James P. McGuire to overturn the jury's guilty verdict because it went against the weight of the evidence.

The judge has scheduled a hearing for tomorrow on the motion, brought under a little-used state law that allows a judge to declare a jury's verdict incorrect.

If the motion fails, Edelin's appeal will proceed before the state Supreme Court.

The Boston City Hospital obstetrician was convicted Feb. 15 after a six-week trial stemming from a legal abortion he performed at the hospital in 1973 on a 20-to 24-weeks-old fetus.

McGuire imposed the light sentence of one year's probation, and delayed it pending appeal. Edelin continues to work as director of ambulatory services in the hospital's obstetrical ward.

According to Defense lawyer William P. Homans, the motion for a directed verdict of innocent makes three points that also will be central if the appeal proceeds later.

Homans' first point is based on the judge's ruling during the case that a fetus only becomes a person with legal protection after it has been removed from its mother's body.

Homans points out that Edelin was indicted and convicted of killing the fetus before it was fully expelled from its mother's body.

The second point is based on the conflicts in the prosecution's testimony about whether the fetus drew a breath of air ourside the body of its mother before it died.

The prosecution's only eyewitness, Dr. Enrique Gimenez-Jimeno, said the fetus was dead when it was removed, but a pathologist said there were some signs of respiratory activity.

Meanwhile, Homans points out, pathologists testifying for the defense said unanimously that the lungs showed no evidence that the fetus had breathed air.

His third point is that some jurors appeared to reach their guilty verdict on the basis of their belief that Edelin was negligent in his treatment of the fetus after it was removed from within its mother.

Edelin had not been charged with negligent conduct after he removed the fetus, Homans said, and his entire defense dealt with the period before it was removed.

Guerrillas nab embassy; hold Israelis hostage

JOHANNESBURG [UPI] — Armed guerrillas, some of them Japanese, took over the Israeli consulate yesterday, seized nine men, women and children hostage and threatened amid bursts of machine gun fire to blow up the building unless the Israeli ambassador negotiated with them.

Police reported at least two persons killed and more than 30 injured when the guerrillas sprayed bullets into lunchtime crowds in the streets below the fifth-floor consulate office in a downtown Johannesburg office building.

They said three hostages, including an Israeli security officer, were wounded when the guerrillas shot up the consulate. A doctor treating the hostages reported the captors had wired explosives and hand grenades to their prisoners.

Prime Minister John Vorster told Parliament the South African government would not negotiate with the guerrillas under any circumstances. Israeli Ambassador Yitzhak Unna refused to enter the consulate as the gunmen demanded.

The Israeli cabinet met in an emergency half-hour session in Jerusalem and Unna said his government ordered him not to go into the building.

Israel always has refused to comply with demands of guerrillas attacking its facilities outside its borders and has stormed buildings seized by guerrillas inside Israel, no matter the number of hostages.

Cyprus talks open

VIENNA [UPI] — Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders began talks yesterday "in good spirit" to find a solution that will allow the two rival communities on the Mediterranean island to live in peace with each other.

"The talks began in good spirit and in a constructive atmosphere," a United Nations spokesman said after the one-hour opening session.

"It was conducted in an informal manner and anyone with anything to say simply said it," the spokesman said.

Court upholds busing

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday denied a hearing to the Springfield School Committee, which has been claiming that a 1973 school desegregation order was canceled by new legislation.

The Court's brief order leaves standing a decision by the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court that the new law is unconstitutional as applied to the Springfield situation, since the schools already have been integrated.

Death penalty passed

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts House yesterday gave its final approval to a bill that would reinstate the death penalty in the state.

The measure immediately moved to the Senate where swift approval also was expected. The House vote was 154-68.

It was expected to reach the desk of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis by the end of the day. The governor is on record as vowing to veto it.

The margin of passage in the House indicated there was enough strength in that chamber to override a veto. But opponents remain hopeful the necessary votes are available in the Senate to uphold the governor's action.

Lisbon accuses US

LISBON [UPI] — Brig. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, chief of the military security police, yesterday accused the United States and Western Europe of hostility toward Portugal's leftist military regime. He minimized the significance of Friday's national elections in which the Communists fared badly.

Carvalho told a news conference the Americans and their NATO allies have mounted an unofficial economic boycott against Portugal and warned the public to beware of machinations of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency to subvert the government.

Public power opposed

BOSTON [AP] — A legislative committee voted 12-5 yesterday to oppose legislation that would establish a public power authority in Massachusetts.

The Government Regulations Committee voted to oppose an initiative petition filed by Rep. Michael Harrington, D-Mass., which would, in effect, substitute public ownership of generating plants for private ownership by utility companies.

SAC to plan tactics

A crucial informational and tactical meeting is scheduled today from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. to prepare students for contacting their state legislators about the proposed state budget cuts.

The Student Action Committee is organizing a car and bus caravan tomorrow to the State house in Boston to lobby against the cuts.

Meetings will be held today every hour on the hour for those interested in participating in this lobbying effort.

We can only be effective in Boston on Wednesday if we organize today.

Further information is available by calling the University and State Communications Council at 5-0217.

English undergrads to organize

There are decisions being made about the future of the English Department on the administrative and faculty levels. If undergraduates can organize, they are guaranteed input into these decisions. At present, when decisions may severely limit the educational resources of the English Department, there is no such organization in existence. We are organizing to take positive action on the following issues:

— The University administration has denied tenure to three Assistant Professors, professors whose tenure was favorably recommended by the English Department Personnel Committee.

— The School of Education has asked the English Department to limit the number of students recommended for student teaching, in order to alleviate the predicted surplus of qualified high-school teachers.

— Curriculum and Requirements.

If you are interested in having a voice in your education, come to our second organizational meeting: tonight at 7:30 p.m., in Campus Center 113. For further information, please call 546-6304.

Look closely at what you get in a pair of Scholl sandals. It's called value.

Value means more for your money. It means long lasting, quality materials, fine craftsmanship and a comfortable, patented product.

What's more, Scholl sandals are versatile. Because they look terrific with almost anything—jeans, dresses, shorts, whatever—they do the job of a whole wardrobe of regular shoes. That's added value.

Add it all up. And step into the comfortable life—in Scholl sandals.

Accounting students to be honored

The Accounting Association and the Accounting Department of the School of Business Administration will hold the annual Awards Banquet today in the Campus Center.

The annual event will feature the recognition of accounting students who have demonstrated high academic achievement during the past year. Among the awards to be presented are: the Accounting Excellence Award; the Barbara Bogdan Award, which is presented to the senior with the highest academic grade point average; the Woman CPA award and the Dow-Jones Award.

Special recognition will also be given to accounting alumni who have distinguished themselves in some notable manner. This year's award will be presented to Dr. Ronald M. Copeland, Professor of Accounting at the University of South Carolina. Professor Copeland graduated from the University in 1961 and earned a Master's degree from the Pennsylvania State University in 1963 and a Ph.D. degree from Michigan State University in 1966. Professor Copeland is the author of four books and over thirty articles on accounting.

The Accounting Appreciation Award will be presented to the professional accounting firm that has provided outstanding support to the accounting program at UMass.

The program will also include the installation of the officers of the student Accounting Association for the 1975-76 academic year. The following officers will be installed:

President — Joanne O'Rourke, vice president — June Navalany, secretary — Joan Korzec and treasurer — Lynn Etheridge.

Women's backpacking

The Days and Weekends Program sponsored by Everywoman's Center if offering a Backpacking and Hiking Weekend on May 3 and 4. This will be a time for women to learn backpacking skills and to enjoy being together outdoors. Participants will spend two days hiking and camping in the mountains in Vermont or New Hampshire.

The cost is $30.00 which includes transportation and food. You must provide your own pack and sleeping bag. The facilitators of this workshop are Nancy Edgar and Chris Prunier. For more information call Everywoman's Center at 545-0883.

Concert band to perform

The UMass Concert Band will present their only performance of the semester at the Student Union Ballroom tonight. Highlights of the program will include Court Festival in four movements by William Latham, The Fairest of the Fair, conducted by Anthony BiBartolomeo, Second Suite by Robert Jager, and Festivo by Nelhybel. A special presentation of Tubby the Tuba with soloist Anthony Bosco and narration by Edward Bontempo will also be heard.

The concert band is conducted by Joseph Duchi, assistant director of bands at UMass. This will be Duchi's last conducting appearance before leaving UMass.

There is no admission charge for the concert.

Haves vs. have-nots

Reducing a school's funds is like taking a step backward in terms of intellectual evolution. Proposals of this sort will have a deleterious effect on man's ability to increase his knowledge, and the consequences would be very far reaching (probably global in scale, if budget cuts become a reality everywhere). Such action will intentionally blind some of those who are capable of seeing great work — people whose minds are and will be of major importance to the true progress and survival of life on Earth.

The explanation for such proposed action is that the State has to cut down on expenses, such as financial aid. Or as an alternative, incoming revenue could be increased (like a tuition hike) and budget cuts would be less severe or maybe not needed at all. However, no matter which road is taken, it still leads to the same place. The students will be paying more money to go to school next year.

Some students come from families that can afford to have this extra money stolen from their pockets. Others don't, and they could be forced to leave school for this reason. It seems that only those students from families who have incomes above a certain figure will go on to a college education. I shall classify these people as the "haves." They have a chance to further their education, financially speaking, anyway. Consider those below this certain income figure (it doesn't matter what the number is) the "have nots."

Today's economic situation has resulted in a decline of people qualifying for the "haves" category. Money seems to be the important factor in this subject area. The State desires to give less money; the People can't afford to give any more. Now who comes first, the State or the People? (No one could convince me the State is the People, especially in 1975.) I believe the People come first; there is no other logical choice. Budget cuts, tuition hikes, and all the other garbage which would limit qualified enrollment (and become a hindrance to the advancement of knowledge and evolution of the species) are asinine proposals that would weaken the capabilities of today's and future generations. We'd be travelling in the wrong direction. Knowledgeable people are very important to the well being of this planet. All should have access to higher education, regardless of income. Using money (in any form) as the deciding factor is absurd.

If one finds this opinion difficult to identify with, try substituting "upper class" for the "haves" category, and "middle and lower classes" for the "have nots." Or maybe for "haves" one could put "masters" and change "have nots" to "slaves." Hmmm? You never know.

Questions to ponder

Today the campus is faced with the difficult question of whether to put its present interests ahead of the future interests of others. Because whether we go to class, whether we act to oppose cuts to public education and welfare will not affect us right now. It will affect our brothers and sisters; our friends who will attend UMass in the future; our fellow Bay Staters in the urban jungles of Boston, Worcester and Springfield.

This is a watershed year, 1975. It could mark the beginning of a new nationwide political consciousness, or the ignominious death of an old one. What we face is a question of economic priorities.

In the sixties, the United States and Massachusetts were rich by comparison to other countries and other people. Former President Johnson ran a country which could afford "Great Society" spending for the poor and disadvantaged. In 1975, fully twenty per cent of what American's workers earn is turned back to the poor and disadvantaged through government programs like welfare, medicare and other subsidies. In 1965, that figure was just under seven per cent.

Because unemployment was relatively low, earning power was high and inflation under control, the workers and middle-class of the sixties were willing to pay for these escalating programs. And as they did, the expectations of disenfranchised millions for a better life were raised — and to a certain extent, fulfilled.

But now times are tough. The economy is down, inflation up. In the state, unemployment is now over ten per cent and the national rate is only a point and a half behind. Our parents can no longer afford the luxury living of the sixties in the hard times of the seventies.

Whether this will change, whether the country will have another period of wealth and growth, remains to be seen.

What is important right now is that the taxpayers of this state are having trouble making ends meet in their own homes. They no longer want to pay for programs they receive no benefit from. And if they see no benefit in UMass or state welfare they will fight a tax increase to the hilt.

There are hard questions brought on by the economics of 1975. Should the system's ability to pay be the major factor deciding when the meat cleaver falls on social and education programs? How is it possible to demonstrate the worth of such programs to society? What will be the future effect if they are severely cut back? Should the programs continue, even if the system can't afford them? Should the system be changed to allow for their continuation?

These are questions that go to the root of what you believe in. But if you want higher education in this state to continue as it has; if you want to continue social programs of the sixties in the hard times of the seventies, then don't go to class today or tomorrow.

You will miss some lectures, because faculty have been ordered to go on teaching. The administration is afraid of legislative reaction if they allow faculty to overtly back a moratorium. But if you allow a misused lecture to keep you from demonstrating concern, you are putting your own interests up front.

Attend lectures and workshops and talk to your friends today about the questions raised above. Phone and write the Legislature if you wish. Participate in a demonstration at Gov. Dukakis' house later this week, if you think that will help. But for all of our sakes, think about those questions. If you do that much, you will spend your time far more wisely than attending class.

Serious intentions

We, the students, demand legitimacy and change. We want a responsible role in which our voices are heard and our suggestions are incorporated. It has been evident time and time again that when people take the responsibility for their own community they are successful. In this fight for legitimate participation we have become a political force. We need to be able to communicate with each other about our needs. We need to understand each other. With this growing understanding we realize the solidarity amongst us and with other groups that are to be affected by the proposed budget cuts — the recipients of welfare and all Human Services. While private higher education is a privilege for those who can afford it, public higher education is a right for all people. A substantial raise in tuition plus a decrease in financial aid will make it impossible for those who already find it difficult to meet expenses to return next semester. Since this will mostly affect poor people, it will defeat the whole purpose of public higher education. We propose a student union that will serve as a collective bargaining agent. We hope to keep these alternatives open to the people's needs and not bureaucratized as so many organizations have become. We feel we are ready to work together.

"The mark of a true university is whether or not it takes its students seriously." We are demanding to be taken seriously.

Faculty support

The Socialist Faculty Caucus strongly supports the right of every student and faculty member to engage in moratorium activities without threat of reprisal from the University administration.

Ex-Provost Gluckstern's statement threatening to penalize faculty for participating in the moratorium comes dangerously close to an infringement of academic freedom.

The form of education is an issue to be determined collectively by faculty and student decision and not by administrative fiat. Those faculty who do engage in the educational activities of the moratorium will amass a considerably larger number of "contact" hours with students than in the normal operation of classes.

Just as we are for worker control over the economy, so we are for student-faculty control over education. Education should serve to develop people's capacity for active participation in decisions affecting their own lives. To participate in moratorium activities is to discharge our educational responsibilities in the highest sense of that term. We support this activity and urge others to do the same.

Points of information

PHONOTHON

Come to Council Chambers on second floor of Student Union on Tuesday to call your State Rep. in order to protest budget cuts and tuition hikes. We will supply you with your Rep.'s name and phone number.

CAR CARAVAN

Call the Student Action Committee at 545-0436 if you would like to drive to the demonstration at the State House in Boston on Wednesday.

Ideas on the moratorium

The academic reputation and public effectiveness of the University of Massachusetts is in jeopardy. To simply maintain UMass at its present levels will require the acceptance of the budget as proposed by our board of trustees.

By latest figures, Massachusetts is close to last in the per capita expenditure of state funds for public higher education. If weakened, the public institutions of higher learning would become even more restrictive to low income, minority and non-traditional students.

Students from the three UMass campuses will be expressing their sentiments at a rally in support of the UMass budget on Wednesday, April 30th, at 11:30 a.m. on the steps of the State House.

We urge all of those interested in the future of public higher education in the commonwealth; students of the Community College system, the State College system, as well as the University system to contact members of the legislature, as well as attending Wednesday's rally.

I would just like to urge everyone who is against the tuition hike and budget cuts to write to their state legislators and senators and tell them so. It is really quite simple and, contrary to popular belief, it really does make a difference, provided that enough people do it. PLEASE! Show that you truly are concerned!!

I wonder how many striking students realize the money being wasted by missing 2 [or 3] class days? The faculty are still being paid, therefore you defeat the purpose of trying to SAVE money by WASTING money! Who is being punished and who is losing out? The students, that's who. After all, who pays the salaries of professors on the entire campus for 2 days? WE, the students do. I, for one feel that missing 2 days of class does not suit the purpose the best way. How many students will just use the strike as a legitimate-sounding excuse to skip exams and such, and not even care about the demonstration of a point?????

I am not against the purpose, just the method used.

AHORA, the Latin American student organization, expresses complete solidarity with our brother and sister students in their struggle against racism and repression via the moratorium today and tomorrow.

We understand that university administrations, both public and private, are attempting to delimit the access of Third World students to education, and to withdraw the basic educational and economic opportunities achieved through the ever-expanding struggle of all oppressed peoples. The excuse of the current economic crisis is being utilized as a justification of repressive actions against our communities in all areas, such as education, human services, employment and others. These actions, however, do not in reality result from the present situation, but are part of an extensive plan to silence those who struggle against social and economic oppression; a plan of action which had been forged even before the onset of the present crisis in order to suppress the increasing forces demanding liberation and socio-economic equality throughout the world.

Our solidarity with the Third World Coalition in its struggle comes from our understanding that their fight is equal and coextensive with our own. Our fight is just one aspect of the struggle of all oppressed peoples battling for justice within and outside the empire.

We call on all Third World students and other progressive organizations to offer their support and express their solidarity with our brothers and sisters at Brown University, as well as wherever fronts of our common and continuous struggle for human dignity break forth.

April's power

I was up late Sunday night, listening to the Dead, when suddenly I realized I had a column to write. On student activism no less.

Which brings us to the point. For too long have students here, we, of this great big fast moving community, moved in the wrong directions. We have moved toward parties, and funtimes, and bogus academic pursuits — outing trips and honor projects, without realizing why. To say that we have lost our perspective is to insinuate that we at one point had it. For too long, in the words of the immortal Samuel Clemens, has school got in the way of our education. Or in the words of the semi-immortal Henry Ragin, have we taken it too seriously. It's time we did something.

April is a great month. April has brought the start of many wars, including our own Revolutionary and Civil. April saw the greatest days of the movement, the strikes of 1970 and 1972. April brought us the streakers of 1974 in full bloom. Everyone loves April, and sitting in the sun with a sign or a placard, singing lonesome songs about freedom and the new day to come. The winter is over, spring is here. The hideousness of May and the great summer decisions are still weeks away.

Which is not to detract from the present revolution. The issues are there and we students are armed and about. But this revolution is televised. We can watch it on the local hack T.V. stations every night. Why I even got on for three seconds on a Channel Three spot, pretending I was a commuter and voting for the strike. What a ham, everybody said.

The dangerous thing about April strikes is that May is around the corner. And with May come finals, trying to sublet your apartment, getting a summer job, figuring out what to do with the rest of your life. As Atlas said, real heavy things. And who has time for it all in May. In June we're all gone — most of us anyway. The administration knows this and is just playing a waiting game. Once we leave, all the really important decisions can be made. Crucial decisions are always made in the summer, when few of us are here save for a few thousand with their heads sizzled on the Guru. We have to keep the pressure on past the end of the game, for them to realize that it's more than a game, with each side shaking hands at the buzzer and going out to toss a few down with the referee.

Thank God the S.G.A. has little to do with this movement. There's so little life in the S.G.A. that they had to wait 45 goddamn minutes for the presidential election to start before they could get a stinking quorum. And in these times of heightened interest. And then one of their primo ego addicts had the disgraceful gall to stand up and holler at Henry Ragin, who was just pointing out to the blind that the Emperor had no clothes. The bitch.

The ISSUES ARE FOR REAL!!! A 10 per cent budget cut would emasculate this University. Student programs will be cut. Especially those of an experimental nature, from which all innovation feeds off. Don't forget Mike Dukakis went to Harvard, and who needs public institutions of higher learning, when the great and holy Boston Privates take a po' boy from the slums every now and then — to keep the folks on the assembly lines happy. Like Mike Dukakis for example — the token who made it big and can now repay his old mentors. At our expense — the working people of this state.

There are some heavy political games being played. Secretary of Education Paul Parks would rather cut administration. So Wood takes a voluntary 6 per cent salary cut, before they stick him with a mandatory 10 per cent cut. Don't forget this is the same benevolent who is reportedly using interest off of student money (housing deposits) to pay the rent for his SUPER LUXURIOUS office. He makes 10 grand more than even the governor. And then there's the Legislature. To quote Ken Kesey, they're all a bunch of psychoceramics — real crackpots!

"TAKE US TO MORATORIUM, SEÑOR".

ellen gavin

Answers to be found

"Staying out of class is fruitless. Everyone in the state will get angry at us for wasting time, and it won't prove anything."

The above remark is a typical response to those UMass students who, while they don't want budget cuts, still find themselves wondering about whether or not to go to class today.

First of all, if we contend that we are adults, capable of rational and purposeful thought and activity, why are we so worried about legislators and parents telling us kiddies that we are misbehaving? If we decide to do something (84 per cent of the vote was in favor of a moratorium) we know why we are doing it, and if parents, legislators and administrators see us as responsible adults, they will listen and understand our rationale.

As I see it, the moratorium is a time for us to interrupt our everyday routine, to interrupt our lives, and to interrupt our university, and begin to ask and answer some real and pressing questions. These questions can't wait, we must begin to seriously discuss them now, before we all go down the tube.

"Why are we here?" should be the first question. We, or our parents have worked hard to get us here and we should know the purpose behind these four years. Because higher education ain't a bad idea — learning, questioning, reasoning, analyzing, making the pieces fit, all of these are activities in which thoughtful, creative human beings should be involved. Yet now we hear that only some of us will be able to come back next year, and that education is becoming a privilege. We also hear that those classes which are the most thought provoking, the most innovative, the ones that allow for the most positive and human inter-action within the generally sterile, authoritarian structure of the typical UMass class, will be the first to go.

The second question should be "where are we going from here?" If we are at all in touch with reality, and if we've finally been able to face it, we'll understand that none of us know where we are going from here. School has kept us out of a labor market that now has no room for us. There are no jobs. And we must begin to question the priorities of a society that allows basic human needs, including the need for productive work, to be ignored.

Our last question must be "What are we doing while we are here?" If the answer to that is that we are sitting and listening, absorbing and internalizing, processing and then spitting back information that is irrelevant, erroneous, or uninspiring, then we have another whole slew of questions and answers to grapple with. Why are we afraid to disobey a professor who holds a grade, a cum, a mythical career over our heads? Why do we sit through some irrelevant classes with boring out-of-touch professors while the country is falling apart? Why don't we dare to ask the questions that are in desperate need of answers, to pose the problems that are staring us in the face?

Please, come to some of the workshops, and begin to ask some of these questions. You may or may not be surprised to find that you may already be discovering some of the answers.

On human energy

By GREGG WILSON

Energy, politics and pols (a.k.a. Polsci 381) have provided stimulating topics for writing and even interesting columns for reading over the past few months. Since the appearance of "Commentary On Energy" in February your self-appointed Collegian energy czar has traveled the bewildering and often times perilous road of a political commentator.

Provoked into journalism by the likes of the Rolling Stone's own Hunter Thompson and his characterization of ibogaine Ed Muskie, I have made the often sophomoric attempt of reaching an audience unmoved by the drippings of an oil well of the perils of the atom.

It all started with an unelected president named Gerry. Champion of the Republican fund-raising circuit and high in demand at many of their over priced chicken dinners, his energy proposals lacked the quality one would expect from the person occupying the most important office in the land.

Ford's isolationist call for project independence was bewildering to countries who were past and present victims of American exploitation and imperialism.

Yours truly was enraged at the lack of a coherent thought process in the mind of the nation's leader.

But not every energy column was critical or unconstructive.

The call for a national oil company was a rational response to an economic system in need of restructuring. But to believe it would cause teethnashing on the right or a rush to sell on Wall Street was a product of naivete on my part.

All semester my intentions had been to write a piece on an alternative energy source. Certainly the introduction of solar geothermal, wind or tidal energy might provide a solution to our energy problems. An article on the politics of energy would most certainly comment on the lack of an effective research and development program in these areas.

Yet while in search of an understanding of these policies, I stumbled upon a radically different source of energy, one untouched by the political or scientific minds of our society. This week is an attempt to transmit a bit of this energy your way.

Although its cost is minimal you won't be able to use it to power your gas guzzler or warm you in the chill of the winter; it most certainly will not generate enough kilowatts to insure you against electrical brownouts in the future.

But this new energy did possess the ability to generate drama on a preciously inert campus. It has fostered a sense of unity, purpose, whatever in a sizeable group of people never before involved in a campus movement. More importantly it has culminated in an attempt to secure a say in the state's decision-making process.

The time has come for us to relieve ourselves of the autocratic control of governors, legislators, and administrators. Today and tomorrow you will receive a chance to "plug into" the source of this power. It's free and yours for the taking.

Gregg Wilson is a Collegian Commentator.

Continuing Ed to fund most summer courses

Due the University's general reduction in expenditures of state funds, the Division of Continuing Education will be assuming responsibility for the majority of Summer Session courses on a self-funding basis.

The Division of Continuing Education was established at the Amherst campus in 1970. The Division has expanded the concept of "student" to include adults attending credit courses on a part-time basis, evenings or weekends, on-campus or off, and persons participating in activities without academic credit, conferences, workshops, and institutes.

The Division is self-funded, which means that fees paid by students contribute directly to the establishment and maintenance of programs.

A minimum number of courses, however, known to be essential to graduation plans in many cases will be funded by the University as usual. The decision to have most of the rest of the summer courses self-funded through the Division of Continuing Education will entail somewhat higher course charges to many students, but will preserve an appropriate range of Summer Session offerings.

The range of offerings this summer include: Summer I, a three week session running from June 2-21. Students will have over 20, three credit courses to choose from; Summer II, day and evening courses with 300 courses running from June 24-August 15; "Toward Tomorrow: A Symposium of Alternatives," a series of over 30 non-credit workshops in alternative energy and food production offered on week-long and weekend schedules from June 27-August 15.

In addition, a number of courses which fall into a variety of categories, but do not conform to the eight week session will be offered.

Registration for these courses is by mail or in-person on Thursday, May 29 at Hills House Main Lobby for Summer I, and on Monday, June 23rd at Boyden Gym for Summer II. The hours for both in-person registrations are 9:00 a.m.-1:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m.-7:00 p.m.

Summer Session '75 will also include the fifth consecutive Summer Workshop Program offered by the School of Education. Over the years the School of Education has endeavored to meet the needs of the educational community through alternative approaches to teaching and learning. These needs now seem to be focusing on a growing desire for in-service educational opportunities. To meet this challenge the School of Education will be concentrating its energies in the area of in-service during the coming semesters. With in-service in mind, this summer's selection includes general and specific workshops of special interest to people in the field. Also included in these offerings are certain courses meeting certification and graduation requirements.

The Arts Extension Service of the Division of Continuing Education will offer a special, week-long Community Arts Leadership Workshop, August 4-8, which is designed to develop skills and specific knowledge needed to start or strengthen arts organizations within communities. Topics will include: organizational structure and management, decision making processes, arts services for community institutions, publicity and public relations, long range planning, working with budgets, and arts in the schools.

For interested participants, tours to Tanglewood, Jacob's Pillow and Williamstown Theatre will be arranged for the weekends prior to and after the workshop week. Further information on this program is available by calling 545-2013 or writing to their Division at P.O. Box 853, Amherst, MA 01002. Arts Extension is located in Draper Annex on the UMass campus.

"Project Self" and "Days and Weekends," offered through Everywoman's Center will also be scheduled throughout this summer from June 23-August 15. Further information is available by calling the Center at 545-0883, or dropping by 506 Goodell Building.

Catalogs containing course descriptions, course schedules, and other important information are now available at either Hills North or the Registrar's Office in Whitmore.

Expesion Joven, a singing group from the Dominican Republic, will perform in Hampden Commons tonight at 8:00.

Expresion Joven performs tonight

Expresion Joven, the leading singing group from the Dominican Republic, will be performing tonight at 8 p.m. in Hampden Dining Commons, Southwest, on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the U.S. invasion of their island.

Beginning on April 28, 1965, 42,000 U.S. Marines landed in the Dominican Republic in order to insure the defeat of the democratic forces in the country, who were rising in opposition to the U.S.-supported oligarchy in power. Now, ten years later, the members of Expresion Joven (Voice of Youth) bring us the voice of the Dominican people, who have suffered sorely under the yoke of U.S. domination.

This concert is being sponsored by the Five College Chile Solidarity Committee. There is a $2.00 donation requested. Tickets will be available in the lobby of Campus Center and at the door.

Polymer lecture

Professor Isaac Sanchez of the Polymer Science and Engineering Department at UMass will speak on "A Molecular Theory of Fluid Phase Equilibria" today in Room 103 GRC Tower I at 11:15 a.m.

UYA budget intact

Any cutbacks in the University budget this year will not affect the University Year for ACTION Center program. University Year for ACTION Center is currently operating in its fifth year on step-down funding from the Federal government. For this fiscal year, the UYA Center has been granted federal funds to place at least 70 interns in pre-professional positions.

The UYA Center for Experiential Education is presently recruiting students from the University of Massachusetts and the Five College community for pre-professional internships to begin in June 1975. These internships are for a full year, however, there are a limited number of internships available for the Summer and Fall terms. Students will earn academic credit and $200 a month while interning. Interns will be exempt from the mandatory dorm residency requirement since they are required to live in the community in which they are interning.

The UYA Center urges faculty members as well as student career and development programs to refer students to the UYA Center program.

For more information contact the UYA Center Office at 545-1381, located at 315 Arnold House.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, APRIL 29 — Born today, you possess a very easy-going nature and are most comfortable and at home among those willing to serve you, to help you toward your success, whether in your career or in leisure time activities. Self-reliance does not come naturally to you — but it is essential that you develop it, for it is impossible that you will always have someone else to count on for aid when attainments and achievements are on the line. A moderate amount of independence should make genuine success not only possible but probable during your mature years.

You thrive under the encouragement of loved ones -- but you do your best work when under the demanding eyes of those whose praise is not so easy to come by. It is important when choosing a marriage partner, that you select someone who knows how to inspire you without nagging, how to praise you without flattering, and how to admire and respect you without seeming to place you on an undeserved pedestal. Your instinctive rejection of anything phony should enable you to make the right decision in this regard.

Because you have leanings in two directions at once — both the artistic and the scientific — you may during your youth be in danger of dividing your interests to such a degree that you cannot excel anywhere. Once you learn to be selective, to choose the one road to follow from among the many that stretch out before you as reasonable possibilities, you should have no difficulty moving forward.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Wednesday, April 30

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take care to keep your behavior on such a high level that none can find fault with your actions today. The atmosphere is highly critical!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Though you may vacillate between success and failure in the forenoon, by afternoon you should be able to predict the final outcome — and act accordingly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Irresolution could cause you considerable trouble today as you attempt to find your way out of difficulties. Know what you want to achieve.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Pay close attention to the details upon which the present situation has been built. Duty demands that you take time away from personal interests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take some obviously clear-needed action where tension among co-workers is concerned. You can gain a reputation as a peace-maker.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Early morning hours may be more stressful than you anticipated. Take the time to discover where you're going — and how to get there.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Gain some personal recognition today through fast and accurate action in an emergency situation. Put yourself in another's shoes in the evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Precarious personal relationships may take a great deal of your time today. You might do well to let a friend fend for himself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you are positive of your ability to keep your promises, you would be better off not making them.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You can save yourself considerable disappointment if you don't take too seriously another's image of you as the master of all you survey!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — It would be easy for you to overestimate your ability to get things done today. Early morning hours may go well — but it's downhill in the afternoon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Consider well the "human element" or you may be inclined to overestimate your chances for success in a project involving cooperation among many.

Academic loans available for vets

Veterans attending school under the GI Bill who are in need of additional financial assistance to meet education expenses, are eligible to apply for loans up to $600 per academic year. The loans are in addition to the monthly GI Bill stipends, the VA said at Boston this week.

A principal factor in determining eligibility is the comparison of "actual cost of school attendance" to the student's "total financial resources," VA said.

Applicants must be enrolled at least half-time and have sought a loan under the guaranteed student loan program of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Courses must lead to a standard college degree or be at least six months duration and lead to "an identified and predetermined professional or vocational objective."

Repayment of principal and interest is deferred while the student is enrolled at least half-time. No interest accrues until repayment is started.

Installment payments start in nine months after the student ceases half-time enrollment. Interest at the rate of 8 per cent is deferred until that time and full payment is due within 10 years and nine months. There is no penalty for prepayment.

A 3 per cent loan fee is deducted from the face amount of the loan to provide a fund to insure against defaults. Defaults are to be considered overpayments with recovery in the same manner as other debts due the government.

Students may apply through the VA regional office through which they receive educational benefits.

Poets to read for bicentennial

Two UMass poets will participate in the "Literary Boston" program that will highlight the capital's bicentennial celebration.

Dr. Donald Junkins, director of the Master of Fine Arts Program in English at the Amherst campus, and James Tate, assistant professor of English, will read their poems in succeeding months of August, this year and in 1976.

They are among 19 poets invited to a series of readings inaugurated this month with Archibald MacLeish of Conway, Mass. The program is sponsored by the Boston 200 and Boston Public Library. It is funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Tate is scheduled to read his poetry Aug. 6. A Missouri native, he is the author of eight volumes of poetry. He is the 1973 winner of a special Academy of American Poets prize and the 1973 Yale University Younger Poets Award. He has been on the UMass faculty since 1971.

JVcrossmen glide; clip Canton Tech

By SCOTT HAYES

Using a well-balanced scoring attack, the UMass junior varsity lacrosse squad stomped Canton Tech, an upstate New York junior college, by a 19-9 margin in a home game played last Saturday.

The contest was not originally scheduled as part of the JV season, but that didn't bother the JV Gorillas, who jumped to a 5-1 first period lead. The crossmen just missed a scoring opportunity that immediately followed the opening face-off. Carl Leone then beat a lone defender and scored 29 seconds into the initial stanza for a quick UMass advantage. Mike Gongus tallied two goals in the first quarter.

Several good fast break goals enabled the stickmen to take a 9-3 lead at the half. Coach Russ Kidd substituted freely the rest of the game and the team's depth was exhibited. Six different midfields took part in the action and when a UMass victory was apparent, attackman Larry Heaton was utilized as a goalie.

Gongus led the JV's with four goals while Leone and Dave Lautman contributed a pair of goals each. Pete Farquhar netted two goals and added two assists leading the first midfield, which "did a good job checking and played a tough game," according to Kidd.

Fran Yung scored twice and Bill Henry, Steve Zinkowski and Emmett Holt scored one goal apiece.

Kidd used thirty-five players in the game as the junior varsity upped its record to 3-1.

Nine penalties slowed the UMass scoring barrage, but defensemen Jim Draper, Joe Perry and Blanchard Kenney continually denied the Canton offense. The goaltending was solid with Jim Kenny playing most of the game.

The JV Gorillas travel to Brown tomorrow for what has to be the biggest game of the season. The team is then scheduled for an away game Friday at Mount Hermon before returning home Sunday to face the Massachusetts Lacrosse Club.

Cooney outstanding

Lifters win NE's

By JANE HOLZAPFEL

The UMass weightlifting team overwhelmingly won the New England Collegiate Championship in the invitational meet held this past week-end at Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

It was the first weightlifting meet ever held at UMass, with twelve different schools represented. There were 21 lifters in various weight classes.

Though it was a fairly small meet, some really outstanding lifts were performed. Nick Vernucci of Brandeis University, already a National Collegiate Champion, won the outstanding lifter trophy for the lighter classes. He performed a snatch of 200 pounds and a clean-and-jerk of 250 pounds.

UMass weightlifter Doug Cooney was the outstanding lifter for the higher weight classes. His snatch of 265 pounds and clean-and-jerk of 335 pounds were in themselves New England Collegiate records, as well as the total of the two lifts (600 pounds).

UMass had three lifters in the 165 pound weight class. Chuck Stickney performed a snatch of 170 pounds and a clean-and-jerk of 240 pounds, giving him the highest total of the UMass lifters in this weight division. Joe Satlak lifted a snatch of 175 and a clean-and-jerk of 230 pounds. Fred Myerson was third UMass lifter in this division, performing lifts of 135 snatch and 185 clean-and-jerk.

In the 181 pound division Brian Wiseman performed a snatch of 170 pounds and a clean-and-jerk of 225. Brian came in third in this weight division.

Besides team captain Doug Cooney in the 198 pound weight division was John Donnelly and Jeff Smith. John lifted a snatch of 195 pounds and clean-and-jerked 270 pounds. Jeff lifted 155 pounds for the snatch and clean-and-jerked 220 pounds.

In the heavyweight division was Eric Wiseman who performed a snatch of 185 pounds and a clean-and-jerk of 235 pounds.

The UMass team gave an outstanding performance at their first home meet, and hopefully will sponsor more meets here in the future.

Sylvanites earn second life

By RUSS SMITH

What is JJ Sheehan and Sons? A billboard company? A new rock group? Or how about a law firm? Nope, JJ Sheehan and Sons is a softball team.

The team's homeland is Cashin dorm. It is named after its general-manager, player-coach, John (or Jack to his friends) Sheehan. The team is entered in intramural softball.

Last week they lost their fourth straight IM game.

They have only one game left to play to salvage a victory before their softball season is over. They aren't going to the playoffs this year. Will tears be shed by those players who won't be here at UMass a year from now, making this game their last as a college kid?

No way!! You see, Sheehan and Sons have something else to fall back on – the Sylvan Tournament!

Back in 1974, due to atrocious weather conditions, the intramural department had to cancel the regular season for spring's outdoor sports, and institute instead a single elimination tournament. For half the teams on campus then, the '74 softball season consisted of one game.

Sylvan's Area President, Mark Spengler, decided to do something about this for the teams in the elite sector of the campus. He started a double-elimination tournament for the Sylvan teams. There wasn't an announced prize for the winner (besides the right to claim Numero Uno), though they did receive a couple cases of beer for celebration.

Sixteen teams entered the tournament. And when it had ended, the Brown Bombers had 'given' the title to the Moondogs from rival McNamara house. Where was JJ and the Gang? Long gone, eliminated in the early goings. For them, it was that famous adage, "Wait 'til next year".

Well, next year is here. And the 0-4 Sons are ready to bow out of the intramural scene. Luckily for them, the Sylvan tournament is back again.

As a matter of fact, the Sons played their first Sylvan game last week against the McNamara Magicians. Supposedly the best team in the area (they are undefeated in intramurals), the Magicians were upset by the Sons, 5-3. This not only gave Sheehan's kids their first softball victory of the year, but also proved that on any given day, any team can win.

So at the end of this week, when the Sons ordinarily would have been no more, you'll still be able to see them out on Wope fields, practicing, banging base hits into left field, and having a good time.

And although hardly any team in Sylvan really believes JJ and his Gang can win the tourney (even though an underdog can go all the way), in the wind blowing from Cashin, the song can be heard – "Here Comes the Sons".

Base hits: The Thatcher Redwoods were the Campus Champs in softball last year, but I can guarantee it won't happen again this year... the regular season in softball ends next week, with the playoffs close behind... did you know we have fifteen intramural softball fields? Amherst College has two... how about playing the championship game in Earl Lorden Field (no, not against the baseball team)... what a homerun wall...

Intramural Notices

Intramural softball and soccer games will be played Tuesday, 4-29, and Wednesday 4-30, as scheduled. Softball games which were rained out on April 3 will be played on May 6 on the same fields and at the same times.

Intramural tennis matches must be completed by Monday May 5th.

All undergraduates and graduates must turn in their gym equipment and locks by 5 p.m. Tuesday May 20. Faculty and staff must turn theirs in by Friday May 30. All will be billed for equipment not turned in.

The Distinguished Visitors Program is asking the student community for suggestions for speakers for next year's program. Please drop slip off at suggestion box on Campus Center Desk.

Instant golf: Women's team starting now

By RON ARENA

All you Janie Blalocks and Sandra Palmers out there, start swinging those golf clubs. Yes, UMass now has a women's golf program, and it's starting immediately. Potential candidates are urged to contact Fan Gaudette right away. He can be reached at the basketball office at Boyden, or phoned at 545-2481.

Depending on how many women are interested, Gaudette explained that he hopes to schedule some matches for this spring. Yet his primary goal presently is to judge the potential of the candidates in order to plan for the fall. Claims Gaudette, "It's important that we find out how many people are interested in performing on the team so we can schedule future matches."

Although seniors are also welcome to try out, the emphasis will be on underclassmen. Since the spring semester is nearly over, Gaudette is primarily looking for women to participate in the fall, but stresses the importance of them starting now.

The program, according to Gaudette, "will also offer women in high school an opportunity to come to UMass and play golf, whereas before, those students would have to go to a southern school." A flyer is being designed to send to high school sports directors to help stimulate the program.

Idle Flyers respect Isles

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] – The Philadelphia Flyers, idle for nine days after a quarterfinals sweep of the Toronto Maple Leafs, resume National Hockey League Stanley Cup play here Tuesday night in a semifinals series against the never say die New York Islanders.

A jubilant Islanders' goalie Glenn Resch said after his 1-0 shutout of the Penguins in Pittsburgh Saturday night that "it'll be hell on ice against Philadelphia and I can't wait to play against them.

"We have the best defense in the league, better than the Flyers," the rookie goalie said. "Nobody can touch us."

The Flyers' Terry Crisp, who played with the Islanders three years ago when they were the worst team in the National Hockey League, said Philadelphia, the defending Stanley Cup champion, has a lot of respect for the Islanders.

Crisp said that in beating the New York Rangers to gain the quarterfinals and then coming from behind against Pittsburgh, the Islanders have done "two impossible things. If things happen in threes, we're next on the list."

The Flyers' regular season record against the Islanders is 3-1-2, with the last a 4-1 win in Long Island April 5 while Billy Smith was in goal.

Smith played in five of the Islanders' games against the Flyers while Resch was in the net during a 3-2 Philadelphia win here.

Netmen favored in SUNY match

By BILL EDELSTEIN

If you happen to be moratoriumizing by the Boyden tennis courts today at 3:00, you might as well sit down, take in the match between UMass and the State University of New York (SUNY) at Albany, and be thankful that the professor teaching your 2:30 class told you in advance that he wouldn't spring any new material on you.

The racketeers are the decided favorites of today's contest as overconfidence, and not SUNY, at Albany should provide the prime opposition.

"The guys have been saying that they 'can't get excited' over the match," stated coach Steve Kosakowski, "but we don't know how good they (SUNY) are this year, and we might be surprised by them."

The Minutemen who have a two year's running history with the New Yorkers, hold a 1-0 advantage in the series. Now, I agree that holding a 1-0 edge after two matches seems about as logical as general procedures at Whitmore, but there is a reason for the odd tally (even though there may be no reason whatsoever behind general procedures at Whitmore).

The...er...Albanians came to UMass two years ago to face the racketeers, and with them came the monsoon season compacted into one day (definitely not SUNY weather). When the teams floated onto the courts, their rackets swam away to safety, thus putting the damper on the proceedings which caused the match to be cancelled.

Last year, at Albany, the rain was replaced by wind, but the match was held, and the only thing that got blown away was the SUNY tennis squad (to the pneumatic tune of 7-2).

The Minutemen will also be battling a possible letdown after their vain, all-out effort to cop the Yankee Conference Tournament championship last weekend.

"The guys played hard (at the YanCons)," lauded coach Kosakowski, "and I was really pleased."

OTHER DISASSOCIATED RAMBLINGS — UMass' unseeded Rob Schpeiser, joined the racketeers before the YanCon tourney and finished the event doing chief justice to the supreme court by whipping Vermont's Jay Moorehead for the first singles title, 4-6, 7-5, 6-1. "I finally got even with him," declared an elated Schpeiser, referring to his debacle of two years past when the same Jay Moorehead blanked Rob in straight sets..: Marc Ouellet, the only racketeer to miss the tournament finals, had pulled some chest muscles prior to the competition. "We were afraid he was having a heart attack," said a relieved Kosakowski... The entire UMass tennis team has a severe drinking problem; the efficient public servants at Whitmore have promised the club a water bubbler for five years straight, but they have yet to make good their promise as the racketeers are forced to whet their collective whistles from an ancient Mass Aggie bucket...

Make believe you are on the other side of the net, facing Barnaby Kalan in a crucial match. Kalan awaits your serve...UMass netman Kalan and his UMass racketeering teammates face State University of New York this afternoon at the Boyden courts. The team's current record is 4-4, (excluding YanCon tourney).

Council report questioned

By SCOTT HAYES

The presentation of the Athletic Council's special report at last Thursday's Faculty Senate meeting turned into a battle between the Council and the Committee on the Status of Women.

After Arthur Elkins, chairman of the Athletic Council, briefly explained the Council's information, Ula Motekat, chairperson of the women's committee, submitted a response to the special report.

Elkins stated in his introduction that some changes had taken place since the report was compiled. Executive members of the Athletic Council met with the Faculty Senate and a first report was rejected. The final report was approved by the Council for Senate consideration.

When a question period was opened, Motekat brought up her committee's response. The handout pointed to discrimination against women in athletic programs documented in the special report. The Committee presented four motions "to insure equal opportunity for women in athletic programs."

The following excerpt from the response lists what those four motions were: "It is moved that the reorganization of the Athletic Department and the implementation of the programmatic approach be postponed until the following conditions are met:

1. resources within the Athletic Department are distributed on an equal basis between men's and women's athletic programs;

2. the allocation of full-time positions to women in the Athletic Department is increased substantially and, as a minimum, all head coaches of women's sports programs are women on full-time positions within the Athletic Department;

3. the number of women's athletic programs is increased substantially and, as a minimum, the following actions are taken:

— women's crew is given varsity status;

— women's lacrosse is given varsity status;

— women's club sports are started, and

— policies are developed for giving varsity status to women's teams either directly or via club sport status;

4. women are according equal participation in policy-making decisions within the Athletic Department.

It is further moved that no expansion of male athletics, including programs, positions, etc. be undertaken until such time as an equitable distribution of resources between men's and women's athletic programs is achieved."

Analysis

What followed was a "discussion" of the athletic fee, revenue and the Barber Fund, which provides scholarship money.

"We hope to achieve programmatic results on more limited resources," Elkins said as he addressed the Senate. Through this "programmatic approach" the Athletic Department will attempt to equalize men's and women's athletics. The chairman added that the objective at UMass is not big time football or basketball, but to provide a greater revenue for all sports. These statements came in response to questions from two female Senators.

Basically, the women said that they're getting a tiny slice of the pie, they're dissatisfied and they want more money.

The Faculty Senate was not prepared to make a decision because the response had been handed out at the meeting and no one was given a chance to study the information. The Senate decided to refer the problem to the appropriate administrarive offices. The report was referred back to the Athletic Council and Dean Bischoff of the Athletic Department.

The response to the special report came as a big surprise to everyone, including Elkins.

The Faculty Senate questioned whether it had the power to vote on the issues that were included in the motions. What would have happened if the motions were passed? Well, no one is really sure, but Associate Director of Athletics Robert O'Connell suggested that at most, the requests might have been recommended to the Athletic Department. The Senate is only an advisory body and the final action is the result of the Athletic Department's decision.

Intramural-mania

White spikes... high school baseball caps... hometown slopitch softball shirts brandishing Barney's Sunoco, Main Street Pizza or Kowalski Insurance... gloves that were thought to have been hopelessly lost in a closet of old sports equipment...

No, the scene doesn't depict a baseball training camp. Instead, it's the atmosphere which pervades the athletic fields three days a week as intramural softball becomes a prime concern for thousands of participants.

First, you have to understand the basic types of competitors that are common to intramural softball.

There's the ex-baseball hero, a .956 hitter who pitched three perfect games in high school and compiled a 17-0 record. These former schoolboy superstars play to win at all costs, and are quick to voice their biased opinions when an umpire makes a call. Softball is not recreation to these players, but instead a chance to be a hero.

So-called "professional" softballers are the ones you'll see wearing spikes, chewing tobacco, wearing a Red Sox cap and carrying a $5 Wilson glove.

A second type of player never made the "big time" in high school. In fact, some have trouble fielding a batted ball, foul-tipping a pitch or even coaching the bases.

The give-it-a-try players compete despite the very good chance that they will embarrass themselves during a five inning game.

Of course, there is also the middle-of-the-field player who falls in a category that bisects the other types. He has limited athletic ability and knows it, so he's not a flashy player; little noticed, consistent, but never mentioned by his teammates in post-game chatter.

You can understand some of the reasons for 27-2, 31-24 and 2-1 scores. It's not really that amazing when a no-hitter or perfect game is pitched. Everything depends on the attitude a team's members take into the game which affects the way they play and the outcome.

I'm not knocking any players. It's just interesting to note the personalities, playing styles and abilities that become ingredients of the intramural recipe. One thing is certain, however, and that's the amount of enjoyment a player gets from participating in softball or any other intramural sport. Whether a member of the campus champions or the most pitiful team ever organized, you can bet the individual had a hell of a time during the season.

The war is over

SAIGON [UPI] — Communist tanks entered downtown Saigon at noon today after South Vietnam declared unconditional surrender to the Viet Cong ending 30 years of warfare.

"All soldiers, be calm and remain where you are now," said President Duong Van Minh.

"I also call on soldiers not to open fire so that together we can discuss wars to hand over the reins of government without bloodshed."

While Minh proposed the formation of a new military and civilian administration, more could still be heard. Fighting continued on the outskirts.

"In the interest of peace, national conciliation and concord of the people, I believe deeply in concilation among the Vietnamese people," Minh said.

"Therefore, I call on all the soldiers of the Republic of Vietnam to stay where you are.

"We also call on the soldiers of the Provisional Revolutionary government Viet Cong not to open fire because we here are waiting to meet with the government of the PRG to discuss the turnover of the administration, both civilian and military, without causing senseless bloodshed to the people."

The Viet Cong's mission to Paris waited Wednesday for the fulfillment of its one remaining demand before accepting the surrender of South Vietnam.

Of the last remaining two demands, the dismantling of Saigon war machine and the withdrawal of American ships from South Vietnamese waters, only one remained to be confirmed — the withdrawal of U.S. evacuation ships waiting off the South Vietnamese coast for flights of refugees.

Earlier, before Minh's surrender, a spokesman for the Provisional Revolutionary Governemtn, the Viet Cong, said two more conditions must be met.

Campus moratorium underway

Students rally for unity: plan Boston protest

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

An estimated 800 students gathered last night on the steps of the Campus Center for "student unity." The rally was also held to inform students about today's planned activities in Boston.

Sponsored by the Student Action Committee (SAC), the floor was left open to various speakers and followed no planned format. It was essentially to "get a good feeling going among the students," SAC members said.

Guitarist Richie Aaron kicked things off and got the crowd in a responsive mood, paraphrasing the words of popular songs to fit the current "crisis."

Bernie Lougee, SAC member stressed students' behavior in Boston today, calling for a "peaceful and effective demonstration."

Bus tickets were sold out last night, according to SAC members. At a meeting Monday, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery was reported as saying he would contribute $50 of his own if money could not be acquired for buses. The necessary money was contributed from various residential areas and campus organizations, however.

David Johnston, Director of Public Safety was scheduled to speak, but it was decided that student marshals would be recruited for the demonstration, so he decided not to speak at the rally.

Asked about the bonfire proposed for the rally, John Fisher of the SAC said they were thinking of having the bonfire to promote good feelings at the rally. The idea was abandoned, when no permit for a fire was issued.

Lougee asked any students interested in being marshals for the demonstration to see committee members. He also said "Despite what the Collegian says, we do have a permit, and will rally on the Boston Common, in front of the State House."

Lougee added that students from other schools will also be joining UMass in Boston today. "UMass Boston and Boston State, are supposed to be on the Common, and we assume Brandeis, Boston College and Tufts will also be there," he said.

Miguel Rivera spoke to the crowd, who responded enthusiastically to his opposition to cutbacks and his promotion of student unity. During Rivera's speech, a 50 ft. sign was carried out which said, "Support the 9 Demands." The chant was taken up by the crowd, lead by Rivera.

Students not going to Boston were asked to organize this morning at 8:30 in front of the candy counter in the Student Union to form picket lines for the class moratorium today.

Humanities turnout sparse, science courses unaffected

This material was gathered by staff reporters Bill Mills, Susan Genser, Donna Fusco and Deborah Gallagher. Compiled by Bill Densmore.

Science classes were well attended but English and humanities suffered a loss of students yesterday morning as UMass students contemplated whether to take part in the first day of a two-day boycott.

The boycott is to continue today.

Mary Muirhead, a spokesperson for the Student Action Coalition (SAC) said at a noon press conference yesterday that classes varied in attendance from 20 to 50 per cent.

The administration estimated approximately 50 per cent of the campus attended classes. Campus bus drivers reported fewer students than usual at stops outside dormitories during the morning hours.

A Collegian survey of classes by four reporters in Herter, Bartlett, and Morrill Halls showed attendance levels of 75 to 90 per cent, English about 20 per cent of normal and humanities, history and languages about 25 per cent of normal.

Most professors said they would hold students responsible for work missed in classes. John L. DeNyse, personnel director for UMass-Amherst said yesterday no faculty had applied for a day off without pay to protest budget cuts.

A random survey of students eating breakfast at Worcester dining commons by a reporter showed 143 were planning to attend classes, 67 said they would not, and another 60 were undecided. Exams were cited frequently as reasons for attending.

"I'm not going to classes because I'm going to the teach-ins," said Roberta Decker, a sophomore in education from Framingham.

But Craig Ghidotti, a candidate for student government association president disagreed. "The strike will only be detrimental to the student body," he said. "It will put the legislators against us."

A fraternity president, Neil Pitchel, said "big capitalists" want skilled workers, not liberal arts graduates.

"The big capitalists are trying to rearrange the higher educational system and they want to increase fees... they want skilled workers and not a lot of four-year liberal arts school graduates," he said.

Another student said he supported Dukakis' proposed cuts. "I voted for Dukakis and I supported his platform of no taxes, and I realize he has to cut state budgets, including UMass'... so I'm going to class," Tim Davey, a history major from Franklin said.

Officials at the campus library reported "less people than usual" during the morning and the library was "still dead" around noon.

16 buses allotted for protest; rally planned at Whitmore

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

Some 800 students will travel to Boston today in 16 buses to protest proposed budget cuts at a rally and concert on the Boston Common. An undetermined number of students will go in car caravans.

Students here are planning a noon rally at Whitmore Administration building in support of the Boston rally and the nine demands passed two weeks ago at the University Town meeting.

Area governments and various campus groups have donated approximately $2,220 to help pay for renting buses.

However, the Student Senate executive committee yesterday denied a request from the Student Action Committee (SAC) for $500 to help defray the cost of renting buses. Each bus costs $175 to rent.

Tara Dolan, treasurer of the SAC said approximately $736 was collected for bus tickets. Southwest Assembly donated 1,215; University State Communications Council, $555; Commuter Assembly, $300; Orchard Hill, $100 and Sylvan, $50.

In other matters, the SAC's phonothon was shortcircuited for not having a sizable deposit in their account. The phonothon was organized so students could call legislators to voice opposition to proposed budget cuts and tuition increases.

Student Senate Treasurer Jack Margossian said the phones were shut off because of mounting deficits the SAC has build up over the past week.

According to Margossian, paper, telegrams and miscellaneous items were billed to the Student Senate and the Student Organizing Project.

Margossian said he made repeated requests to have SAC members make daily deposits on the monies collected.

Boston Common set for protest site

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

UMass students will be able to protest on the Boston Common for three hours today beginning at 11, but not on the State House steps or on Beacon street.

In a letter to a member of the Student Action Committee received yesterday, Boston Parks and Recreation Commissioner Anthony E. Forgione said it was policy not to issue permits for Common use to other than "publically-sponsored meetings or celebrations."

"This communication is not to be construed, however, as denying or preventing you from exercising any Constitutional right or rights which you have or may have to use Boston Common for the purposes and at the times specified in your communication," he wrote.

The demonstration, expected to draw an undetermined number of students by bus, car and thumb from Amherst, is to protest proposed tuition increases which student organizers say could double the cost of attending UMass.

The students are also protesting a proposed ten per cent budget cut for higher education by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and cuts in state welfare benefits spending of up to $311 million at a time they say, the unemployed needs them most.

The permit request to Forgione was one of two sent to Boston by four SAC members, according to Daniel Lewis, 21, one of the four. The Commissioner's letter was addressed to Lewis and dated Monday.

A second parade permit request by the group to march on Beacon Street from Charles Street up to the State House was denied Monday, Lewis said.

"But that was a longshot," he said. "We didn't expect to get that."

Cpt. Paul Doherty, head of the Capitol Police, said it was standard policy to allow no demonstrations on State House steps. He said a semi-circular paved area on the State House side of Beacon Street could be used by up to 140 demonstrators if they make no speeches and keep moving.

Doherty said it was policy to "suggest" to protesting groups that they gather at the corner of the Common across from the State House for speeches and demonstrations.

Lewis said the Parks Dept. would allow a sound system near the Shaw Memorial on the Common from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Stephen Dunleavy, an aide to Boston police comr. Robert DiGrazia, said there was "no problem" with a peaceful demonstration on the Common.

"There are no constraints as long as it's a peaceful protest and they don't interfere with the rights of others," he said.

Monday, UMass Director of Security David L. Johnston said the permit request for Beacon Street was for 7,000 people and he warned students to obey orders of police officers in Boston.

Organizers of today's rally had thought the Legislature's joint committee on education would be considering a tuition increase at a hearing today.

But an office aide to Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst), a member of the committee, said the calendar for today showed no such hearing, although the committee will be hearing bills on METCO and the restriction of fiscal autonomy for town school committees.

The aide siad she thought the bill on tuition was one filed for three years in a row by Rep. Barney Frank (D-Beacon Hill). The bill, she said, calls for tuition of between 30 and 70 percent of actual per student costs.

UMass-Amherst spends about $2,900 per year on each student in state funds. Tuition is about $300 per year, but other required fees bring to total student cost to about $2,500.

SW Assembly votes funds for buses

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Southwest Assembly (SWA) voted unanimously last night to appropriate $1,215 to defray the costs of 16 buses traveling to the rally at the State House in Boston today, according to Craig Sanderson, SWA president.

While voting inside the Hampden Student Center, nearly 200 students gathered outside in support of the rally today. Brian Harrington, proposer of the bill to appropriate the busing funds, said Southwest "is an area where many students don't have transportation to Boston." Harrington said, no students living in Southwest should be denied from boarding the buses.

Also, at last night's assembly meeting, new SWA officers were elected.

Nominated by out-going SWA president Craig Sanderson, Gary Lewis, a junior living in Moore House, was elected the new president by a near unanimous decision.

Sanderson said, in nominating Lewis, "he is the only person that can handle the job right now. He's been very active in Southwest for over two years, and he has been very helpful to work with (as my vice president)."

In a pre-election speech, Lewis said, "I can't see myself a really persuasive person as president...I just want to listen to the people." At the same time, Lewis said he is not a weak person.

On a fifth-ballot vote, Gary Hartley, a junior Mackimmie resident, was elected vice-president.

Defeated by Hartley in the vice presidential election, David Tillman, freshman resident of John Adams, was elected treasurer.

Peggy Powell, a newcomer to the assembly this semester, was, on a close vote, elected communications coordinator for SWA. She is a freshman living in Cance.

Faculty caucus blasts Gluckstern

The twenty-member Socialist Faculty Caucus yesterday released a statement through a spokeswomen, criticizing former-Vice-Chancellor Robert L. Gluckstern's order that faculty must take a day off without pay in order to cancel class and participate in boycott activities.

Ann Ferguson, professor of ethics and aesthetics in the Philosophy Department, said the Caucus believes the order "is clearly an infringement of academic freedom," and called it "obviously a political move."

She said faculty are not required to take time off when recruiting and soliciting research grants and that any decision about time-off should be made by faculty.

"This violates the requirements of faculty educational responsibility," she said.

In a statement prepared Monday and printed in yesterday's Collegian as letter to the editor, the group said:

"To participate in moratorium activities is to discharge our educational responsibilities in the highest sense of that term. We support this activity and urge others to do the same."

Economics, women's workshops get best turnout

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

"Students are fighting for control over student life," said radical economist Samuel Bowles before over 100 persons at one of yesterday's moratorium workshops. "This is a gradual move toward a Socialist society."

Collegian reporters found that economic lectures and workshops on women's issues in the Campus Center were the most heavily attended. Faculty members Michael Best, Richard Wolff, Ann Ferguson and Samuel Bowles drew the heaviest numbers of between 50 and 150 persons.

Nesta King of the Student Organizing Project (SOP) said the workshops "in general are well attended," and that "a lot" of people went to dorm workshops.

"People seem to be interested in education and organizing on campus," she said, "and less interested in political issues outside the university. Also the faculty get higher attendance than the students do."

An approximate total of 222 persons attended the 19 workshops held at 11 a.m., 287 attended the 14 workshops held at 1 p.m. and the same number attended at 3. 68 persons attended the 4 workshops held at 2.

Sam Bowles in his afternoon lecture described the university as a combination of a factory, a warehouse, a prison and a massage parlor, as well as "an arena where various claims are fought out."

Bowles decried the claim that people are powerless unless they hold a high government office and said, "If you want to have a good education, you're going to have to fight year after year after year by pushing for a new social system."

Ann Ferguson of the philosophy dept. said women are pressured to stay in the home in order to benefit the capitalist class. "Women are exploited by doing housework and not getting paid for it."

"Women are also a reserve labor force," she said, "who are forced in and out of the home depending on whether or not they are needed in the economy. During WWI and WWII, the state pushed for women to help our boys abroad.

"Day care centers in work places magically opened up. But when the boys came home, the day care centers were closed and women were forced back into the home, because 'they belonged there'.

Ferguson attacked the nuclear family, saying that it is an important element of stabilizing the system. "When women challenge that," she said, "they can unite with workers and bring a revolution to this country."

Economics Professor Richard Wolff spoke for 90 minutes before 75-odd persons who crowded into CC 171 and then spilled out into the hallway. "What does our leadership do for this economic crisis?" he asked.

"They reduce the quality of education for our young people and increase the output of automobiles, even though we all know our needs are exactly the opposite," he said.

SAC blasts Collegian editors for moratorium coverage

By SCOTT HAYES
Staff Reporter

Members of the Student Action Committee (SAC) met with three COLLEGIAN editors to discuss moratorium coverage, yesterday afternoon in the Student Senate chambers.

About 40 SAC members assembled to question editor-in-chief Bill Parent, news editor Richard Wright and assistant news editor Judy Boucher.

The informal meeting opened with representatives of the SAC calling an article which appeared on page one of yesterday's COLLEGIAN, "erroneous."

The printed article in which the parade permit denial was cited, "misrepresented the facts," according to one SAC member.

Parent responded by noting the problems of a student newspaper, and pointed to a no advocacy policy for students.

The arguments offered by the SAC included more front page coverage of the moratorium and a balanced view of the issues. An article stating House Speaker David Bartley's position on the moratorium was talked about and according to the SAC action should have been taken to reflect students' views.

The editors and members of the student group discussed various issues and listened to numerous gripes.

A need for student viewpoints and perspectives was brought up and the gathering of students felt that recent articles failed to represent the feelings of undergraduates.

Decisions made at the COLLEGIAN concerning the importance of moratorium news were questioned, and Wright answered, "You can't make an event more dramatic than it really is."

The SAC, obviously displeased with coverage during the past two weeks, referred to "a negative attitude toward student action," which recent articles supposedly reflected.

Bill Densmore, a news reporter who wrote the article concerning the Boston denial of the parade permit, arrived at the meeting late. Densmore was immediately questioned about his story and bluntly accused of manipulation. Apparently, the parade permit was only one of three permits requested by four UMass students. The other two were obtained.

The debate continued and the SAC suggested that the COLLEGIAN change its news values. A conscious decision to play down the moratorium was also mentioned, but Parent denied any deliberate downplay in coverage.

More student orientation was proposed by the SAC, which after complaining about past coverage of the moratorium, suggested more balanced, in-depth reporting of student activities.

Also discussed at the meeting were grievances mounting over the last two weeks and dissatisfaction with placement of moratorium information.

The COLLEGIAN apparently failed to cover the moratorium from its outset nearly two weeks ago and the SAC became upset, since nearly 10,000 students voted. The campus-wide referendum represented one of the largest student efforts in the past five years.

Joe Cotter, a SAC spokesman, said that the COLLEGIAN printed information, but never tied it together, leaving many students confused. "I wish the COLLEGIAN would tell students exactly what's going on," Cotter added.

After the meeting, Parent said, "I'm happy with the outcome. There were some really good points made and more people now understand some of the difficulties students come across in putting out a daily newspaper. We'll never please everybody and we'll always have mistakes, but that's our right too."

State-wide Financial Aid slated to increase for 75-76

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Although it is likely that the Financial Aid appropriations for UMass for the 75-76 fiscal year will increase over the current level, a lower percentage of students may be able to benefit from it, due to the increase in Financial Aid applications, according to Richard A. Dent, director of Financial Aid Services.

Charles H. Bechtoldt, senior program officer for the regional office of the U.S. Office of Education said that on a state-wide level, Massachusetts will receive an 8.9 million dollar increase, or one-ninth of the entire national increase from federal funding. This increase is distributed over three campus-based programs, the National Direct Student Loans, College Work-Study, and Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants.

Dent said last year approximately 3,500 students received financial aid, working from roughly $3.8 million allocated to the University. He said this year 5,000 students are on aid, working with the approximately $4.8 million budgeted.

It is projected that the number of applications to Financial Aid for next year will increase by one third. Although Dent did not have the exact figures available, there will be an increase in Financial Aid money, he said. Dent added there will be a problem in distribution, because more students will be in need of Financial Aid. There will be more freshmen applying and due to the present economic situation a smaller percentage of students may receive aid. The amount of money given to students who apply may be decreased in order to distribute the money to more students, he said.

Dent added he is hopeful that the supplementary appropriation for education will be passed by President Ford in May because, "that could give us at least a $.5 million more to work with."

Of the students applying for financial aid this year, 85-90 per cent of them received aid, Dent said. He added they hope to aid 5,500-6,000 students next year.

Asked how it is determined which students receive financial aid, and how much, Dent said they try to aid the neediest students first, and each program carries its own criteria in determining who gets aid, jobs or loans. "Every application is read individually," then it is determined what the student will received, depending on the specific program, Dent added.

The combination of loans and jobs next year, which are self-help programs, will comprise over 61 per cent of the total aid available, he said. Dent noted the increase saying that two years ago these programs made less than half the total aid.

In terms of dealing with any cutbacks, Dent said the case for Financial Aid appropriations is one of the easiest to argue because the "problems of the economy are the same ones that will increase the number of applications we receive-we would hope there would be no cutbacks in Financial Aid."

Judiciary's decision in Rainbow case

Corwin acquitted of four, guilty of four violations

By DEBBI DIMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

The Student Judiciary last night found Bruce Corwin, treasurer of Rainbow Productions, not guilty of four charges, and convicted him on ten counts of four violations of the RSO Financial Policy Act and the Code of Student Conduct.

Corwin has been placed in jeopardy (given a suspended suspension) for one calendar year effective immediately, and prohibited from holding any RSO position of financial responsibility for the duration of the jeopardy sanction.

He said that he will not appeal the findings. Corwin was found not guilty of the following charges:

—misrepresenting another member of the University community.

—representing an RSO without the specific prior consent of that group.

—using inter-activity transfers illegally.

—failing to deposit all revenues with the RSO office.

—Guilty verdicts were entered on charges of:

—knowingly submitting false information for incorporation into University records — two counts.

—knowingly approving financial transactions in violation of the RSO Financial Policy Act — two counts.

—using purchase orders in multiple — two counts.

—using purchase orders restricted to purchases of $25 or less for expenditures exceeding $25 — four counts.

Defense advocates Carry Holkiotis and J. Michael Parkhurst argued for a sanction of probation rather than the suspension recommended by Prosecutor Cindy Iris.

"The violations of the Financial Policy Act are highly technical and do not warrant suspension," said Halkiotis. "Probation would best serve a rehabilitative function."

The defense asked the judges to make a strong recommendation to RSO and to Food Services that policy be followed in the future. "These regulations are violated commonly," said Halkiotis.

"I hope that the RSO office can correct the things that are going wrong," said Corwin after the trial. "I don't want to see anyone else go through this."

Ford announces completion of evacuation

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford announced yesterday the emergency evacuation of Americans from Vietnam had been completed successfully, "closing a chapter" and ending nearly two decades of U.S. involvement in that war-torn country.

"The last helicopters are in the air," Presidential Press Secretary Ron Nessen told a news conference that had been delayed almost five hours so the end of the evacuation could be announced.

"This closes a chapter in the American experience," Ford's statement said. "We must now close ranks, avoid recriminations, look ahead to new goals and work together on the task we face."

Nessen read Ford's statement just before Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger briefed reporters in a nationally broadcast news conference.

The final phase of the evacuation took less than 24 hours, marred by the loss of three military aircraft. Two crew members were reported missing. In addition, two Marines were killed Monday night.

Kissinger said 6,500 U.S. civilians had been involved in the emergency evacuation, and 55,000 South Vietnames citizens.

He said the three main objectives over the last week were:

— to save the lives of Americans still in Vietnam.

— To save as many South Vietnamese as possible who worked with Americans for 15 years.

— To bring as humane an end as possible to the situation.

He said Ford at 11 p.m. Monday (Tuesday morning Siagon time) had ordered the evacuation of all Americans from their two locations near the airport and at the embassy.

"I hope we can contribute to a political evolution that may spare South Vietnam some of the more drastic consequences of this change of governments, but this remains to be see," Kissinger said.

"We do not believe this should be a time of recriminations. It is a time to heal wounds, to look at our international commitments, to remember that the peace and progress . . . of our own people is closely tied to the rest of the world."

Indochina developments

Aid bill delayed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — At President Ford's request, the House yesterday suspended final congressional action on the $327 million Vietnam aid bill until the administration can suggest revisions in light of the American pullout.

Speaker Carl Albert announced the decision after meeting with Ford at the White House and a short time before Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger arranged to go on national television to explain in detial the full U.S. withdrawal from Indochina.

Refugees arrive

Military and civilian authorities worked on an around-the-clock basis yesterday to feed, house and clothe the thousands of South Vietnamese refugees moving through bases in the Pacific on their way to the United States.

Preparation were being made to take care of up to 60,000 refugees at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., Camp Pendleton, Calif., and Ft. Chaffee, Ark. Local officials and residents in some area expressed concern about the impact of the refugees on their communities.

Officials at the military bases that will house the refugees concentrated on putting up tents, laying extra sewer lines and rounding up food.

"We just heard about this yesterday," said Lt. Don Mills, the public information officer at Eglin.

American withdrawal from Saigon marked by violence, panic, chaos

Compiled from Wires

America's 30 year involvement in Vietnam ended in tears, panic, looting and rage.

It appeared that what tipped the scales and forced the issue was an ultimatum from President Minh to U.S. Ambassador Graham Martin. In effect, Minh told Martin he had 24 hours to leave the country.

The evacuation of the thousands of Americans and Vietnamese, coming just before the surrender of Saigon to the Communists, was a hazardous operation.

Embittered Saigon soldiers, feeling betrayed by America's withdrawal, fired shots at buses carrying evacuees to the embassy and at the helicopters skimming overhead.

Thousands of civilians, fearing they could be killed by the Viet Cong victors, tried to claw their way over the 10-foot-high wall surrounding the gleaming white embassy building and its gardens.

Marines and U.S. civilians used pistol and rifle butts to hammer their fingers, but scores got over and raced the Americans for the helicopter pad on top of the four-story embassy.

Some frantic civilians jumped from the wall and landed in barbed wire below. A middle-aged man and some women were bleeding as they struggled against the steel barbs.

Mothers holding up their children wept as they pleaded with Americans to take the youngsters with them.

Yet other Vietnamese found their own way out. A Pentagon spokesman said in Washington about 10 Vietnamese helicopters ditched near the amphibious ship Blueridge, but that all crewmen were rescued.

Some Vietnamese, mostly military officers and families, made it to the Philippines, Taiwan and Singapore, and at least 70 planeloads landed in Thailand. Some of the planes, according to reports reaching Washington, apparently were stolen.

The deaths of Marine Cpl. Charles McMahon Jr. of Woburn, Mass., and Lance Cpl. Darwin L. Judge of Marshalltown, Iowa, apparently helped prompt the American evacuation. They died in a barrage of Communist rocket and 130mm artillery fire that pounded Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base in the predawn hours of yesterday.

U.S. Ambassador Grahm Martin and senior members of his staff flew out of Saigon aboard a Marine helicopter early Wednesday and landed before dawn on the communications ship USS Blue Ridge in a thunder storm.

Seventh Fleet Commander Vice Adm. G.P. Steele met the ambassador's helicopter as it touched down on the flight deck at 5:45 a.m. (5:45 p.m. EDT) yesterday.

Martin, looking weary and drawn, was not carrying the U.S. flag, and it was not immediately clear whether he had it with him.

One member of the embassy staff said a grenade was thrown into a crowd of Vietnamese clamoring outside the high embassy front wall late last night Saigon time.

Embassy sources said some 80 Americans and 800 Vietnamese embassy personnel remained inside the embassy grounds in Saigon when the ambassador pulled out, but it was not immediately known if they managed to get out later.

The departure ended an era that cost the United States 14 years, $150 billion and more than 50,000 lives —the last of which were two U.S. Marines killed in a Communist attack on Saigon's airport early yesterday that spurred the pullout.

Foreigners expelled

By United Press International

France said yesterday the Cambodian Communists had decided to expel foreign nationals who took refuge in the French Embassy when Phnom Penh fell and would make them travel about 300 miles by bus to Thailand.

French Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues said in Paris the rugged overland trip could endanger the lives of some of the 610 refugees, who include 26 foreign correspondents, six of whom are American citizens.

Brandeis students occupy building

B.C. students picket president's house

Compiled from Wires

WALTHAM — About 40 students occupied a classroom and office building at Brandeis University yesterday to protest planned budget cuts. The university administration refused to negotiate.

"We have no intention of negotiating with any group that is occupying the building at any time," university spokesman Jeffrey Osoff told reporters after a day of meetings of university officials.

"We have every intention to clarify, to explain, the listen," he said. "The word negotiation is not a viable word."

A dean, Marguerite Robinson, started clarifying matters by opening her door to all comers to explain the budget. It was not immediately known how many students went to see her.

The university had not decided what to do next and Osoff declined to discuss specifics, but he noted options included a court injunction, summoning police or the established campus judicial process.

Although saying the university would not negotiate, Osoff said there existed a possibility of talking about program changes under a fixed budget. "The trustees have determined that Brandeis will have a balanced budget for 1975-76," he said.

A single campus policeman watched the takeover of Pearlman Hall.

The students inside the building said they were members of the "Student Action Committee."

The building houses classrooms used by the sociology department and several classes were cancelled as a result of the occupation.

Some of the demands by the group were for continuation of the "transitional year" remedial program, and increased financial aid to students to offset a $650 jump in fees.

University President Marver H. Bernstein met with his advisers through the morning but made no public comment on the takeover.

University spokesman Jeffrey Osoff said the university planned about $2 million budget cuts to bring next year's budget to about $31 million. "Students have not been adversely affected; in fact, scholarship aid will increase. Most cuts are in administrative areas," he said.

A statement issued at mid-morning by the students in the building said, "The student body will tend to become richer and whiter, the number of faculty members will be decimated and the school's minimal commitments to society will disappear."

Dukakis vetoes death penalty bill soon after Senate passage

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis vetoed legislation yesterday which would restore capital punishment in Massachusetts.

Dukakis issued his veto message just minutes after the Senate gave final approval to the bill on a voice vote and without debate. The bill had been approved previously in the House.

"I cannot reconcile the willful taking of a human life by the state with my own moral and ethical beliefs," Dukakis said.

"I do not believe that this commonwealth has the moral authority to execute human beings." The bill would mandate capital punishment in nine categories of murder.

The governor also said he was not convinced that the death penalty is a deterrent to crime. He added he has grave doubts that legislation requiring a death penalty is constutional.

It was Dukakis' first veto since he took office in January. The veto established a legislative confrontation with the House, which was expected to override the veto easily. Senate action, however, was in doubt. A two thirds-vote is needed to override a veto.

New gun law will be posted on state roads

BOSTON [AP] — Signs warning out-of-state motorists of Massachusetts' stiff new gun control law will be posted along all numbered routes leading into Massachusetts, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis announced yesterday.

"We want to give ample warning to out-of-state motorists who may be unaware of the law, and we expect them to comply with it or face the consequences," Dukakis said in a statement.

Under the law, which took effect April 1, anyone convicted of carrying a firearm without proper authorization is required to serve at least a year in jail. There is no possibility of a suspension, probation or parole during the first year of the jail term.

B.B. rifles, as well as handguns, shotguns and rifles, are considered firearms under Massachusetts law.

news summary

Abortion law killed

BOSTON [UPI] — A U.S. District Court panel yesterday declared unconstitutional a Massachusetts law requiring parently consent in order for a girl to have an abortion.

The suit had been brought by abortion advocate Bill Baird and his Parents Aid Society along with a minor girl who had undergone an abortion at his clinic.

The class action sought to declare illegal the Massachusetts statute that said it was a criminal offense to perform an abortion on a minor without the consent of both parents as well as that of the minor.

"We find that a substantial number of females under the age of 18 are capable of forming a valid consent," the court said.

At Boston College, about 30 to 40 pickets marched in shifts at the home of President Donald Monan to complain about operation of some minority programs at the school. The protesting students said they were keeping open their option of occupying a building.

Consumers may save

LOWELL [UPI] — Officials released yesterday the results of a six month study showing that consumers here and in other Massachusetts cities could save millions of dollars by building hydroelectric power plants.

The study, conducted by a seven-member committee chosen by the city manager, said 15,995 kilowatts of generating capacity could be installed on the Merrimack River in Lowell at a cost of $6.7 million.

The hydroelectric facility would generate 89,402,081 kilowatts of electricity a year, five times the municipal requirement and about one fifth of the city's total residential and business needs.

Guerrilla faces trial

JOHANNESBURG [UPI] — A South African Jew who occupied the Israeli consulate for 16 hours, firing wildly into street crowds and threatening to blow up more than 20 hostages one by one, proably will face trial for murder, police minister Jimmy Kruger said yesterday.

Police said four persons were killed and 32 injured, one critically, during the siege at the consulate in downtown Johannesburg.

Ulascewicz indicted

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A federal grand jury yesterday indicted Anthony T. Ulascewicz, a New York City detective who became a courier for Watergate hush money, on charges of filing false federal income tax returns for 1971 and 1972.

Attorney General Edward H. Levi said a two-count indictment returned in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn charged Ulascewicz received substantially greater income than the $27,068 he reported for 1971 and $18,434 for 1972.

Dr. Rodney to speak on Africa's economy

This evening, Dr. Walter Rodney, the internationally known historian, writer, and political activist will speak on campus on the colonial economy of Africa. The lecture will be given at Thompson Hall 104 at 7:30 p.m. and is entitled "The Colonial Mode of Production in Africa: A Case Study of Tanzania."

Rodney was born in Guyana and received his undergraduate education at the University of the West Indies in Jamaica. After graduating with honors in history, he entered the School of Oriental and African Studies at the University of London and was awarded his Ph.D. in 1966 at the age of twenty-five. His doctoral dissertation, A HISTORY OF THE UPPER GUINEA COAST: 1545-1800, published by Oxford University Press, has been acclaimed as the definitive historical work on that sector of West African society.

Numatic Swing Band to play tonite

A jazz concert by the Numatik Swing Band will be presented tonight at 8 p.m., in Emily Dickinson Lounge as part of MOSAIC, an arts festival sponsored by the BDIC program.

The concert will feature improvised variations on compositions by Herbie Hancock, Miles Davis, Buster Williams, Joe Henderson, and McCoy Tyner, as well as performances of original pieces by members of the ensemble.

The Numatik Swing Band is a quartet featuring David Dupont, trombone; Marty Schiener, reeds; Peter Schott, piano; and Steve Pedegorski, drums.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Corwin acquitted

Corwin also said that it was worth being convicted on the contempt charge which resulted when he left the courtroom during the second session of his trial. "The court reversed the manner in which it was working after that," he said.

Both the prosecution and the defense concurred after the proceedings that Corwin was given a fair trial by the Student Judiciary.

Assistant Prosecutor Paul Yancwich commended Judges John van Tol, David Bennett, and David Carter. "The judges did an excellent job. They recognized the seriousness of the charges and the precedent-setting matters involved," said Yancwich.

Senate clashes over budget

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Senate liberals Tuesday urged adoption of a budget with a deficit larger than the $60 billion limit drawn by President Ford. Conservatives demanded major spending cuts.

The clash came as the Senate, acting under 1974 reforms, opened debate on the size of the fiscal budget for 1976 which begins July 1.

Previously, Congress passed tax and spending bills piece-meal, without regard to their total impace.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, called for approval of a $365 billion budget — $10 billion more than Ford proposed.

The budget — approved by the committee 10 to 3 — would increase the deficit by $7.5 billion over the $60 billion Ford said is the most he would tolerate.

Black Labor Conference

By Black News Service

On Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the Malcolm X Room there will be a Black Labor Conference. The theme of the event is "Black Labor and the Current Economic Crisis."

The panelists will include James Boggs, former auto worker and author of "Racism and the Class Struggle"; Macee Halk, electrical worker, League of Revolutionary Black Workers and Labor organizer; General Baker, auto worker, member of communist League; and a member of the Boston United Black Construction Workers will appear.

This is a very important event to which Third World people are invited to attend and exchange knowledge with the panelists.

Beareather Ready recital

By Black News Service

Beareather Reddy has decided to become a singing actress who dances. The most practical way of accomplishing such an aim is to convince the director of the B.D.I.C. program that a broad-based curriculum can be drawn up with integrity, you can pass the courses and make a living at what you have studied.

Beareather will show evidence of her skill Friday night when she will be presented in a B.D.I.C. Graduation Recital in the Rehearsal Hall, Room 248 of the Fine Arts Complex.

The theme of the one-woman recital is Black Women in America, focusing on the Afro-American female in the Slavery period, the beginning of the free period (1865 onward), the Black woman in transition (1930-1960), and the contemporary Black female.

Beareather has been coached for the recital in drama by Paul Carter Harrison, in dance by Diana Ramos and in Music by Horace Clarence Boyer and Archie Shepp.

Cruising on a cloud

By MIKE KNEELAND

Each afternoon I'd open my Collegian mail and sure enough, there'd be a picture of a duck saying "Michael Dukakis Should Be Governor" complete with an accompanying press release. Indeed students here were eager to oust Republican Francis Sargent for "the people's candidate," young Dukakis.

Well I can't help but laugh at many of those same students (ducks) who can't raise their picket signs high enough in the air. When Dukakis was running around saying he was going to cut the budget, what did the students think, that he'd close his eyes when the UMass budget came up for review? In Batman's words, "Poor disillustioned souls."

So now the students are protesting the very problem they helped create, another mistake. House Speaker David Bartley was quite correct saying the student boycott won't win any sympathy from the state's jobless workers and others having a hard time making ends meet.

Why? Because there's Joe Smith reading the newspaper worrying about supporting his family with a job that could at any moment liquify...it it hasn't already. And then he reads about those UMass students cutting classes because the economy hasn't fully spared them.

Why, Joe Smith is asking himself, should students be totally exempt from the economic hard times? Times are tough for everybody everywhere and students should be glad it's only a 10 per cent cut facing them.

For sure this moratorium was dommed from the start, both in conception and implementation. Sure, a good number of students voted for the moratorium, but they were still forced to go to class.

What's a student supposed to do when the professor says, "I support your concepts but I will still conduct class and you'll be responsible for this material on the exam." Well I'll tell you what the student does, he goes to class. Why risk a poor grade for an ineffectual strike?

And then there are the workshops. Most seem relevant to the moratorium but what abou these: "Is Amherst a Company Town," "The Socialist Movement", "Sex Roles at UMass", and the token "Workshop for People Who Are Opposed To The Moratorium".

What I see is a cause diluted by left-wing groups who seem to dominate the Student Government Association yet are not representative of the student body as a whole.

Don't get me wrong. I'm sad to see the budget face the scalpel. But what else can be done? Cut money elsewhere and eliminate jobs? Raise taxes?

Our unhappy circumstances are a fact of life, a brutal one at that. Students cruising on clouds ought to make a landing and take, perhaps, their first look at reality.

Mike Kneeland is a Collegian guest commentator

from our perspective

Student impact; RSVP

Today is the second day of the moratorium, and many of us again will be boycotting classes. In addition, a large group of students will be in Boston protesting to the Legislature by demonstrating on the Boston Common this morning at 11:30.

STUDENT UNITY

Support for the moratorium has been given by the Hampshire Student Collective and the Amherst Student which indicates some Five College support for our cause. But most of all, support has come from within the student body. Class attendance yesterday averaged 30 per cent, and the attendance at various teach-ins was termed "quite satisfactory" by one Student Action Committee (SAC) member.

As Dr. Wood pointed out in last week's speech to the Student Senate, we are now franchised. We are now voters in this state and have the ability to influence the future decisions made in the Legislature. The real impact of our protest should also be felt next November, when certain candidates will be up for election and re-election.

To say that the quality of public higher education has no effect on the people is an erroneous conclusion. The economic rationale for all taxpayers' support of public higher educational institutions are the "spillover benefits" produced by the institution. In other words, everyone benefits in one way or another from higher education, not just those receiving it. And conversely, if public education suffers, the public will suffer.

The fight here is not just one "interest group" versus another; it is a fight for the general good of the citizens of the Commonwealth, either directly or indirectly Allowing a "recession" to stand in the way of the goals of higher education is defeating the purpose of that education; that is to explore old problems and find new solutions. If any answers to the present global problems are to found, it is highly likely that they will be developed in the universities of this nation. With the current trends, these answers may only be found in the private universities, and that is another danger in itself.

Massachusetts ranks forty-ninth in the U.S. in aid to higher education, yet it is fifth in the nation in tax rates. It is easy to see that public higher education has not been a top priority. When Michael Dukakis was running for election, he spoke at the Amherst campus of the importance of public higher education. What happened?

The Collegian feels the students of this campus have made a valid and credible statement, one that warrants an answer. No one, least of all students, can afford a UMass budget cut. It is now up to the Legislature. We await a reply.

Collegian victimizes students?

The STUDENTS AT THIS UNIVERSITY ARE VICTIMS OF A NEWSPAPER THAT REFUSES TO REPRESENT THEM. In response to this accusation, one Collegian staff member defensively summarized what they feel is the function of our newspaper, saying, "We are a newspaper first, and a student newspaper second."

For the past two weeks, the Collegian has intentionally neglected to adequately cover this student movement; a movement that is unprecedented in terms of the phenomenal support and participation that students have demonstrated.

Readers have been plagued with news that has given priority to administrative and legislative responses to the moratorium. It is apparent where the perogatives of the Collegian lie, when they choose to put quotes from House Speaker David Bartley on the front page. Instead of supporting those students and parents that are engaged in massive phone-calling and letter-writing to legislators, the staff prefers to quote an individual who does not understand the serious concern of all students; [They're living in a dream world] This is not simply advocacy journalism; this is NEGATIVE ADVOCACY JOURNALISM.

The Collegian has consistently undermined the momentum of this student movement by either printing incomplete information or failing to cover the activities at all. The television media has been reporting on this moratorium three times a day. It is time that the Collegian realize and act upon their responsibility as the central media force for the 25,000 people at this university. When the New York Times and numerous other publications give the moratorium substantial coverage, there is no excuse for insufficient and injurious reporting by an on-site "student" newspaper!!!

Our student activities fees and in-house advertisements account for $147,668 of the $270,000 Collegian budget. Most of an additional $18,500 accrued from classified ads and subscriptions is paid for by either students or former students. Clearly, a newspaper that derives such a large portion of it's monies from the student body should meet the needs of the student majority.

The Collegian has proved to be inflexible in it's treatment of critical student issues. This newspaper must dissolve it's fears of nebulous institutional authorities and begin to act as a vanguard for student self-determination. If this situation does not correct itself, the Collegian may be facing the same student opposition now confronting the legislature and administration.

May day activities

For the past ten months the Sunday News Collective has been reporting on local, regional, national and international efforts of people to gain self-determination. On May Day [May 1], recognized around the world and celebrated in many countries as International Workers' Day, the Collective and its community friends and supporters will present twelve hours of programming on WMUA to celebrate the holiday.

The emphasis throughout the day will be on the role of culture and the importance of history in building movements for independence and freedom. Poetry and history will be read and a great deal of music played.

There will be a children's hour, a news and discussion hour, and an interview with Puerto Rican political prisoner Lolita Lebron who has been in the federal penitentiary since 1954. Interviews with people involved in political work in Western Massachusetts will be aired as well as discussions with area working people about how they perceive the current economic crisis.

We welcome suggestions for this programming, especially in the are of music — we would like to play as much non-sexist, non-racist music as possible. Phones will be open at the station on May 1 and we invite any suggestions and criticisms as the day progresses. We also urge anyone that has something to pass on to the larger community to come down to WMUA at 42 Marston Hall and share in the work of the day.

On to Washington

Monday was a perplexing day for classes. The classes were conducted by concerned fellow students debating against proposed budget cuts and tuition increases. I had the impression that many students were having a hard time grasping an overview of what's coming down. I share in concern over cutbacks that will lower the quality of our education and further limit accessibility to higher education for low income groups.

But I feel we are way off target by looking toward Boston. The pie that the legislature has to cut up this year just isn't as big as last year's. Corporate tax rates in Massachusetts are relatively high and any increase risks lowering the desirability for existing firms to stay in this state, thus risking even higher unemployment rates. Any call for higher corporate taxes may end up alienating any working class support for our struggle. Money in Boston is tight and a lot of interest groups under "human servic " are trying to grab for the crumbs. I've come to believe the big crumbs are to be sought in Washington, not Boston, considering that from the average wage earner 20 per cent of income is confiscated in the for of federal taxes as opposed to less than five percent in state taxes.

Over one-half of the federal budget goes into military related spending to fulfill such vital needs as increasing the overkill ratio and devastating foreign allies. If we are looking for funding for education and other vital human services maybe we should take our search to Washington rather than Boston.

Hampshire students aid UMass

We would like to express our solidarity with the UMass campus moratorium. The Hampshire Student Collective consists of a group of people who also feel that higher education should continue to be a top priority even during periods of economic instability. At Hampshire we have been confronting similar issues concerning tuition cost, financial aid, and priorities in the allocation of funds.

To demonstrate our solidarity we will:

1] send copies of this letter to Representative Collins and Governor Dukakis.

2] circulate petitions in support of the UMass moratorium to be signed by members of the Hampshire community and sent to the above.

3] set up an information table at Hampshire to inform students of the moratorium.

4] demonstrate with you in Boston in Wednesday. Most importantly we will not attend our classes at UMass Tuesday or Wednesday in recognition of the moratorium.

A people united will never be defeated.

The Hampshire Student Collective

More cars are needed to join the caravan to the State House rally today. Although some busses have left, there is a good possibility that there will not be enough to hold the amount of people who want to go to Boston. If you can take riders, be at Whitmore with your car today at 9 a.m. Thank you.

Letting them know

By PAUL BRADLEY

A steady stream of people were stopping at the tables set up in front of the Student Union yesterday as the two-day educational moratorium got underway. The tables were set-up to organize mass letter writing campaigns to the legislature and to organize a caravan to go to the State House today. The members of the caravan plan to let the legislature know how serious the demands of the students are.

A lot of the emphasis on this first day of the moratorium was placed on just this: letting the legislature know that this is not a cop out, as Speaker David Bartley called it, but instead the moratorium is a serious attempt to air grievances and implement demands, very real demands.

Members of the Student Action Committee, the purported sponsors of the moratorium, were pleased by the reaction of the first day. There was no way to accurately keep track of how many people actually wrote to their reps or signed up for the buses, but the steady influx of students trekking to the tables in front of the Union indicated a large number indeed. Students were aided by copies of a couple of angry form letters, supplies of stamps and envelopes, so that the message would be sent now and without delay.

The sign-up sheets for the buses going to Boston were crowded. Efforts to sign-up people to go to Boston were also underway in Southwest and Orchard Hilll, and both areas indicated a good turnout. A prominent feature at the bus sign-up table was a sign that said the group going to Boston did indeed have a parade permit, contrary to a story printed in the Collegian yesterday. This report may have discouraged some students from signing up for the caravan, but students can be sure that they will be breaking no law if they demonstrate on the Boston Common.

A reporter from WTIC in Hartford asked me as I stood observing the picket line in front of the Student Union where a classroom might be. This was supposed to be a student educational moratorium, he explained, and he wanted to see if students were actually boycotting classes.

All indications say that students did indeed stay away from classes yesterday. WMUA estimated that 70 per cent of the students did not go to classes, and from the classes that I saw this seems accurate. There were a number of students who were lounging the tennis courts and the fields, but reactions to the moratorium also indicated that students were not staying away for solely selfish reasons.

Workshops in the morning were well attended. A real curiosity was prevalent, and it gave way in the afternoon to attempts at action. Marching on the State House or writing irate letters, action rather than information was the order of the day.

Legislators can expect to hear from their student constituents. The volume of correspondence may make some of them listen to students, because students are serious and they can vote.

The moratorium was not a "cop out" but an attempt to put some words into action.

opinion

The great divide

By ED SANDIFER

Maybe i'm giving the administration a whole lot more credit than they deserve, but it seems to me that they're playing this whole moratorium-budget request thing pretty shrewdly. First, let's look at who the budget cuts really effect. Nobody talks about closing down a wing of Whitmore, or doing with a few less deans or other high-up administrators. Instead the hiring freeze affects the people lower in the organization, the ones who are working while their wives or husbands finish school, the ones who get paid $125 a week for work they'd get $175 for if they weren't tied to working in Amherst, and could go to Boston or Albany to do the same work.

Thhe budget cuts tear into financial aid, hurting those who don't have someone to work while they finish school. I figure we could save seventeen $40 a week jobs in the Campus Center by eliminating one $400 a week job in the administration. (The math doesn't seem right at first glance, but I'm figuring that the students only work 7 months a year, while administrators get paid 12.) And so it seems the people making the decisions are covering their own backs first. What would you do in their shoes, though?

Besides, insuring their own security, they're dividing students from students, and students from faculty. Some students are threatened with losing both their special programs and their financial aid. If they're stealing his food, why leave the plate? Even if they leave the program, and cut the aid (or vice versa) it's a case of choosing whether to cut off the arms or the legs. So how about if you're in a special program in danger of being cut and your neighbor might lose his financial aid (with proverbial snowball's chance of getting a decent job for the summer) and they're faced with cutting one and not the other? been decided, and it takes a superhuman gesture of humanitarianism to say you'll give up your program so your neighbor can keep his aid. That' dividing student against student. Then there are the students who are financed well from home.

They shouldn't feel guilty that they can afford to pay their own ways through school, but it really doesn't affect them that much if the budget is cut and they're in a safe department that won't be crippled or eliminated by a budget cut. This group of people probably is the largest group on campus, and we really can understand their not getting especially involved in other people's issues.

They're probably the 10,000 people who didn't vote last Thursday and Friday. This is another division of student against student, since half of us, the budget cuts just won't affect. The administration does not deserve any credit for dividing us along these lines. This division is innate in the student body.

Now, dividing students from faculty, On one hand, certain administrators proclaim their support of the students' plight, with certain apparently cosmetic reservations. (For people who can't see through my allusion, I'm talking about Bromery and Wood.) On the other hand, the faculty is being vigorously discouraged from giving support to the students. They are being barraged with memos and notices to continue class regardless of attendance or attention levels! Gluckstern sent a notice to all faculty on Monday saing that any teacher who found it necessary not to hold classes on these two days (perhaps through some errantly placed bit of conscience or compassion) must apply for 'LWOP, (leave without pay)' and find someone to teach the classes in his stead.

campus comments

Question: Did you attend classes today, and if yes, why, if not, why not?

Bill Rourke, senior from Worcester, Chemistry major:

"Yes, I went, although I only had one class. I don't think staying away is going to get anything accomplished. Besides, I can't afford to miss any of my classes. I did participate in a workshop and belive we ought to go through the budget and weed out all the crap."

Suzi Milstein, freshman from Albany, N.Y., CASIAC:

"Yes, I attended all my classes today, because I felt I would miss too much work, especially since it's the end of the semester. I do support the strike though, as I believe budget cuts would be detrimental. I voted for the moratorium, but there are some classes I just can't afford to miss."

Alex Leondakis, freshman from West Springfield, Business Administration major:

"No. I only stayed away though, because my professor said that the classes weren't mandatory. I'm not really involved, but I think students should make proposals as to what should be done, instead of just criticizing Governor Dukakis."

Karen Conway, senior from Woburn, Psychology major:

"No, I didn't go. But I didn't sit around all day either. I took my class time and helped to make sure that people wrote to their legislators."

Richard Allen, senior from Brookline, Social Science major:

"Yes, I went to my classes, because I have to pass my courses. I am in support of the strike, but I am paying to go to class."

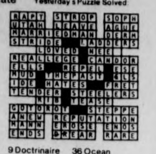
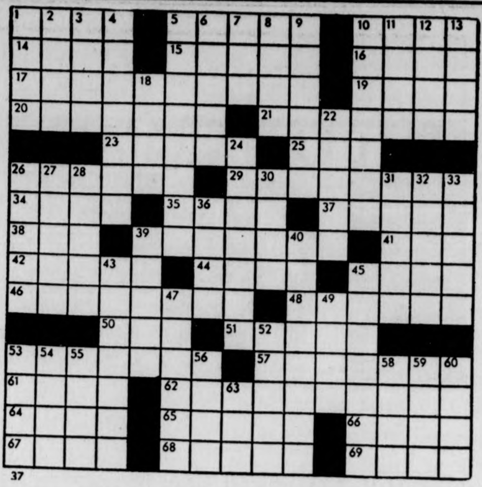
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved





Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30 — Born today, you possess a highly developed critical faculty which you may be inclined to apply a little too often to the hard-won, though perhaps not outstanding, successes of other people. You enjoy seeking out injustices but must be on your guard against allowing what might be an admirable, respectable trait to disintegrate into the shallow, annoying habit of fault-finding. Take the time to study situations and circumstances thoroughly before passing judgment on them — and bear in mind that perfection, though sought after, is unattainable.

Honest and straightforward when you approach things from an intellectual standpoint, you are blunt, sometimes even brutal in your opinions, when you allow temperament to guide your words and deeds. This is especially true when it comes to affairs of the heart, for you are extremely demanding of those you love and exceedingly temperamental in your relationships with them.

You need to develop ways in which you can express your inner feelings. It is to be hoped, therefore, that parents or guardians will have helped to instill in you habits of both intellectual and emotional exercise. If you are allowed to grow to maturity without such habits becoming a part of your personality, it may well be that you will never be able to make your feelings known in anything like their true color and value.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Thursday, May 1

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Employ diplomacy early in the day — extensively! The pitfalls attendant upon a recent decision for gain may cause you considerable concern in the afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Take care that excitement does not cause you to speak out of turn. Take into consideration another's recent disappointments on the home front.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you are practical you can be a winner. Only be on your guard against rejecting all fanciful notions out of hand. Study suggestions carefully.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Keep unpleasant matters to yourself. Whatever you share with others may prove easier to deal with as a consequence. Take advice in the afternoon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Get-rich-quick schemes may come fast and furiously this morning. This is an excellent time for dispassionate consideration of your future.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Make your own decisions as best you can. If you can avoid outside interference, you may make a mistake or two but you can be proud of your effort.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Be wise — sleep on present problems another day or two. If you rush into actions you believe will solve difficulties, you may make mistakes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is a day when money talks; the only difficulty is that it may not say what you'd hoped. Help another attain a minor goal in the afternoon.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — There is no need to bring old projects to their conclusion today. Give endeavors more time to gain the kind of profit they might.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If you would get through this day without any mental or physical traumas, take your time regardless of how others may try to rush you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Keep eyes and ears open to understand what the opposition is doing. This is a good day for gaining an advantage.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You would be wise to not extend your activities beyond the usual today. The future looks good for the Aries who takes his time.

The women's softball team split a doubleheader Monday, losing the first game, 7-6, and taking the nightcap, 7-5.

Batswomen win first

By LAURIE WHITING

The UMass Women's softball team split a double-header at Boston State, Monday, chalking up their first victory of the season, 7-5.

The win came in ninth inning over-time play in the second game. The two runs were scored on a pass ball error.

Coach Joanne McGowan cited left fielder Carolyn Shea as being an important factor in the win, as she collected five put-outs to her credit.

Pitcher, Gail Mathews pitched a fine first game, said Coach McGowan. Back to back home runs by Co-captain Terry Pudlo and LuAnn Fletcher were also instrumental in the UMass win.

The first game wasn't as well played as UMass lost 7-6. There were many "mental" errors in crucial 6th and 7th inning play. Up until that point, the UMass team traded the lead with Boston in a tight game. Short-stop Sandy Lunt homered in the 1st inning to get UMass started in what Coach Joanne McGowan called "the beginning of UMass" hitting improvement."

The UMass women take on a strong Southern Conn today at 3:00, away.

Women's crew team lacks recognition

By TERESA HANAFIN

I'd like you to meet some people I know. They participate in a varsity sport on campus, but you're probably not familiar with their names. There are no individual performers. In fact, it's just about the ultimate in "team" sports. But the members work as hard, if not a lot harder than players of other sports.

I'm talking about the women's crew team, and I'll be damned if I'm going to let them go unnoticed.

Let's start with the varsity. The coxswain is Nancy Tompkins, a freshman. The co-captains are Debbie Kirchmer and Joanna Andreas. Debbie is in the stroke position, and is the most experienced member of the team. She's a senior and will be leaving after this spring. Joanne is only a sophomore, but will also be leaving when she goes on a junior exchange to the University of Idaho.

Next comes Anne Aronson, a freshman, who was recently elected secretary-treasurer. Heide Braun, in the number five position, is a junior exchange student from Germany, she too, will be gone after this semester.

Another freshman is next, Becky Love; followed by two juniors - Eileen Gallant and Mary Leonard. Bringing up the rear in bow is Joanne's sister, Barb Andreas. Barb is a senior who took a year off from crew when she went on an exchange program last year.

Sports news commentary

Now for the JV. The coxwain for the second boat is a sophomore, Kathy Sedlak. The stroke position is manned by Louise Romanow, a senior in her first year of rowing. Behind her sits Joan Zalenski. Joan is special in that she has graduated already, but can run because of the team's club status. A freshman, Mary Ann LaFosse, sits behind her.

A string of five sophomores follows. In order, they are: Polly Knowlton, Leslie Johnson, Ann Aldrich, Nancy LaFosse (Mary Ann's sister), and Trish Donovan in bow.

The spares currently are all sophomores -Kathy Guild, Jennifer Burks, and Laurie Gullion. Laurie rowed in the fall, but cannot now because of an accident.

Well, there they are. There are more coming up from the beginning boat, and those who have been turned away in the past because of lack of personnel will come back for a second chance.

Their coach, Bob Spousta, doesn't get paid, and there will soon be a team meeting because the third boat is concerned over whether or not women's crew will even exist next year.

Despite all this, the varsity has twice shown it is as good as the best by defeating BU twice and Dartmouth and Conn. College once each.

The very least they deserve is a little recognition.

Letter to the Sports Editor

Commitment to women a farce?

To the Editor:

Recently, Scott Hayes wrote an article entitled "Fairness on the Track" which could more accurately have been called "Farce on the Track".

The article said there would be "some type of women's program" in track and cross country next year. Depending on the amount of money alloted for equipment, travel, and coaches, however, the program may not be much of an improvement over the present situation at UMass where the only program is run on an R.S.O. basis by Tom Derderian and his wife, Charlotte.

Hayes accurately depicts Boyden's strong commitment in the phrase, "some type of women's program". Listen to more on this "type of program." "Assistant athletic director Vivian Barfield commented that there may not be enough money to provide uniforms for the team and hopefully the women will be issued shoes for running."

So UMass women runners, show an interest in this non-existent program which may or may not have money for shoes or it will continue to non-exist!

This article straight-faces its way through alternate stages of whimsey and farce to finally reach center stage in the theater of the absurd. How's this for Catch 22?

Quote "If little interest is generated by women harriers, and track competitors, the administration won't be to blame for a non-existing program for women in track and cross country." In the service we had an expression called C.Y.A. Apparently Boyden also believes in covering theirs.

UMass has a women's crew team. Can you imagine an article saying, "UMass women come out for crew! We may not be able to provide a boat, but we'll have some type of program!"

After reading this spirited-up beat article I can imagine hordes of excited female runners (shoeless) besieging Boyden for the opportunity to be patronized.

Perhaps instead of grinning and shuffling a run to the nearest courthouse would be effective in getting women a seat in the front of the bus.

Racketeers have SUNY day

UMass netman Barnaby Kalan hits backhand during today's match against SUNY on the Boyden courts. Kalan and teammates swamped their opponents.

By BILL EDELSTEIN

If you came late to the UMass-State University of New York at Albany (SUNY) tennis happening (I prefer not to call it a "match") yesterday, you missed the kill, as the racketeers stomped all over SUNY at Albany, 5-4, at the Boyden courts.

Although the adjective "stomped" might not seem to befit a 5-4 outcome, the modifier is, if anything, an understatement, for the Minutemen captured all five of their points in the singles competition, allowing coach Steve Kosakowski to do his Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde impersonation by experimenting with different doubles combinations. SUNY then swept the doubles segment of the happening to produce the final, misleading tally.

"After we got the fifth point, the rest didn't matter," stated the winning coach. "I'm glad the singles decided the match," added Kosakowski, "because they (SUNY) were a hell of a lot better than they were last year." One has to wonder just how badly the Albanians played last season.

Barnaby Kalan was responsible for the fifth and clinching marker as he strung out his match to three sets (6-2, 3-6, 6-3) at third singles while completing his undefeated season (12-0). Kalan had some anxious moments, and he voiced his concern after the contest. "When the score was 3-3 in the third set, I started worrying that I had come to lose my last match to a guy from SUNY. But he could really play tennis."

"Barnaby and Chris (Post) are playing great tennis," praised coach Kosakowski. "They've improved tremendously over the course of the season."

Speaking of Chris Post (nice transition, eh?), the racketeer captain was forced to make a sincere effort to combat drowsiness during his 6-2, 6-1 taking of the supreme court.

Art Cloutier, the racketeer's mystery man who started playing in mid-season garnered his fifth consecutive victory, this one at fifth singles, in a 3-6, 6-4, 6-2 come-from-behinder. Art's doing so well that one has to wonder why coach Kosakowski didn't use him earlier in the year.

"He kept telling me he wasn't ready," said the UMass tennis mentor, "but then he beat a couple of the starters, and I decided that whether he was ready or not, he was going to play."

Billy Karol had an easy (6-3, 6-2) time at second singles, while Marc Ouellet posted the Minutemen's fourth point with a 6-4, 6-4 fourth court, straight setter and Kevin Garrahan last at sixth, 6-1, 6-7, 6-0.

Tom Doyle and Cloutier got the nod at first doubles for the first and final time this year, and they were greeted harshly with a 6-4, 6-2 molesting.

At second doubles, the team of Newberger and Chingros, also first-time performers, were also dealt with harshly, dropping a 6-3, 6-1 decision while the duo of Garrahan and Rabinski was treated with even more disdain in their first stint together, 6-1, 6-1.

"I was pleased with the team's overall performance," approved Kosakowski.

UMass has scheduled SUNY at Albany again next season. You just can't get enough of a good thing...

FOOT FAULTS -The racketeers will lose the services of Barnaby Kalan (they'll even lose his returns) next season when he goes on exchange at Rutgers.

Losing string snapped, batsmen out to rope Chiefs

By BILL DOYLE

Having snapped its five game losing streak, the UMass varsity baseball team heads into today's 3 p.m. game with Springfield at Earl Lorden Field with new-found optimism.

Coach Dick Bergquist said that by whitewashing Maine in Saturday's second game, the team showed itself that it is capable of playing good baseball.

"They believe in each other now," Bergquist said. "They know that they can go out there and beat anyone. I honestly believe that we are capable of beating any team left on our schedule."

In playing Springfield College, the Minutemen will be trying to avenge an earlier season loss to the Chiefs in Springfield. UMass' Craig Allegrezza will be opposing Springfield's freshmen righthander George Ross, who has the nation's third lowest ERA in Division II. Ross is 4-0 and he has only allowed two earned runs in 32 innings for an 0.56 ERA.

"We always like to beat Springfield," Bergquist said, "because we have to live with them here in Western Mass. They always have a good team, too, so any victory over them is sweet." Springfield has a record of 12-2.

Allegrezza will be trying to come back from a subpar performance in his last start in Saturday's opening game. He set down the first eight men he faced but he was knocked out in the sixth inning.

One bright note about Allegrezza's play on Saturday, Coach Bergquist said, was his hitting. He collected five hits in the twin-bill, including a three run homer and a run scoring double.

UMass' pitching and defense finally lived up to Coach Bergquist's expectations in Saturday's victory over Maine. Jeff Reardon pitched a four hit shutout and the defense was error-free, turning three double-plays.

CHANGE-UPS: Bergquist said that the team has two goals: to finish the season over .500 (the team's record is now 7-12) and to win the Yankee Conference...Pete Backstrom and John Healy are definitely out of action for tomorrow while Jim Black may see some action, Bergquist said...MInutemen have stolen 25 bases out of 28 attempts...Backstrom's .355 batting average still leads the club while Allegrezza still leads the team in ERA despite his earned run average rising to 1.34....Despite moans over UMass' poor fielding, the MInutemen actually have a better team fielding average than their opponents, .939-.937....

Except for Backstrom, the highest batting average of any Minutemen outfielder is Steve Wright's .208... Every other outfielder is batting under .200... Springfield edged Northeastern Monday, 6-5, in 11 innings.....

Triples featured as JV batsmen gallop past Holyoke Community

By TONY CHAVES

The J.V. baseballers offense was in high gear yesterday as they defeated Holyoke Community College 9-7 at Holyoke.

The batsmen's theme for the afternoon seemed to be a slug a triple. Four different players, Scott Aye, Pete Bannon, Charlie Ciccone, and Bavel Cummings, all banged out three baggers. Mark Wyner, two hits, Charlie Johnson, two hits, and Bill Hendy, a home run, were also offensive standouts for the Minutemen.

Coach McKay jokingly referred to 40 or 50 errors in the game with three quarters of them being mental. It was good luck for the Minutemen that they chose to make all those errors in a game against a poor team when they could afford it.

McKay was not too happy with the base running of his team either, calling it "not very heads up". He was dead serious though when he said the team must get it together from here on in as the toughest part of the schedule is coming up. The pitching especially must perform up to its potential.

Yesterday the pitching left much to be desired as the three pitchers used were not very sharp. Tom Nigro, the JV ace, started the game and got his fourth win against no defeats but went only four innings and was rocked pretty hard.

Bob Black picked him up in the fifth and pitched ineffectively until the ninth when he was relieved by Gordon Smith, who got the save. All that McKay could say was that his pitchers didn't have their good stuff.

Pigeon droppings

To most people the word pigeon does not have a favorable connotation. It isn't unusual for a Boston commuter to return at 5:00 to see the remainders of a pigeon on his windshield. In fact one person on a hot August day was reported seen wearing two pair of Eskimo type gloves as he opened his car door. Yet there is a place where pigeons are certainly welcome, and that place is Fenway Park.

In 1926, this stadium was built and at times gives to thousands of fans the ultimate in the excitement of the game of baseball. But to the pigeons of Boston, Fenway Park offers the benefits of free housing, food, and comfort. To the owner of Fenway Park (Tom Yawkey), pigeons are a bargain to say the least because of their talent in cleaning up ballparks in such a short period of time.

Pigeons are known to have quite a talent in choosing the best food and the best places to eat. To these birds, Fenway Park is a pigeon's paradise for breakfast, lunch, dinner, and a midnight snack. On a summers day, it isn't unusual for a pigeon to gain a few extra pounds consuming burnt hot dogs made out of 3 per cent pure beef, rancid pop corn, and now the gourmet's delight -sauerkraut and beans. It has been rumored that the greatest number of pigeons suffering from indigestion, lumbago, dysentary, and Beri-Beri have often times eaten at Fenway Park. In return for this free food, pigeons offer their gratitude by spreading their own special kind of fertilizer on the grounds thus saving the landscaper a good amount of time and effort.

Having hordes of pigeons residing in Fenway Park not only saves the ballpark from a massive cleanup job, but they also serve another indirect purpose. Think of the money Mr. Yawkey saves by not having to install security guards and burglar alarms.

When you pass a deserted Fenway Park at night, you think you are watching a rerun of Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds" flash before your eyes. Rumor has it that Bugsie Muldoon and Fingers Smith (the best thieves in the business) have put Fenway Park on their list of the ten most hated jobs.

Yet the practical use of having pigeons residing in Fenway Park comes in the form of entertainment. If the game is being delayed by rain or is on the dull side, the order comes from the front office to release the "halftime entertainment". Within minutes, the pigeon aerial show blossoms into figure 8's, Power I's, and Fullhouse T's.

Proudly the Boston Red Sox gloat that their fans get a little more out of their money than most. In fact, the pigeon aerial show has been compared to the Jan. 25, 1952 edition of the Kilgor Rangerettes and the 1972-1973 halftime show of the Santa Monica High School majorettes.

Pigeons in Fenway Park have intense competition from the rats at Boston Garden. In recent years, rumor has been growing that Boston Garden is supposedly in the bidding war between the rats and the pigeons. Supposedly the rats at Boston Garden have grown into disfavor in part due to the number of rat attacks recorded in the 2nd period intermission of the Nov. 29 Boston Braves-Tidewater Tomatoes hockey game.

Take heed, Boston sport fans. Rats at Fenway Park on a hot summer's night combined with pigeons at Boston Garden in the dead of winter is about as tantalizing as the next dish of Fenway Park sauerkraut and beans.

For sexists only: On photographing women

The photo above of Karen Desmarais, when submitted to a wire service by the author, was run in papers throughout the country and resulted in letters from admirers as far away as the Philippines. The other women are Lisa Mindick (above, right) and Crystal Stinette (below).

STORY and PHOTOS
By DICK LEONARD

This article deals with what might be considered a touchy subject; photographing women as art. This article is not meant to be a guideline for men bent on exploiting women; rather a guideline for portraying what I consider the finest piece of engineering and art that ever graced this planet of ours. Enough said.

Before even picking up my camera, I find it essential to have some kind of rapport with my subject. How you develop this is up to you, the approach you take to her depends on her mood, outlook, etc. I cannot stress this too heavily: even if the relationship is just photographic, let her know that there is more to you than a camera, otherwise she is just a victim of your shutter and your pictures will reflect it. Other than that you are on your own. After a while you'll learn what it takes to make a woman feel relaxed in front of your lens.

Equipment is key also; my recommendation is an SLR because of its ease of use and availability. The degree of optical compression and slow speed (little depth of field) make lenses in the range of 80 to 150 mm very popular. Normal lenses and wide angle types often make for unflattering change of perspective, so for portraiture, stay away from focal lengths under 50MM.

Film is a less important consideration, but something that should be given a little thought is that ASA films are grainy and tend to have unbecoming contrast, while films in the range of ASA 32-125 are fine but require a lot more light for proper exposure. Color films are great if you have the capital to pay for the processing. The only concern here is the blue-based films, which can make skin tones somewhat unnatural.

Okay, you now have a good relationship with your model, have your camera, lens and film all set to go, but where do you go? Again the choice is yours. Choose a place that is mutually amenable; the beach or garden are common. My favorites are having my model sit on the hood of a fast car like a Vette or a Jaguar as this creates a sensuality of its own. Again, it's up to you and your model.

No treatise on photographing women would complete without at least some mention of nudes, so here it is. The subject must be approached maturely; if you keep in mind that your model is what you are photographing, not your girlfriend without any clothes on, you will keep you photos from becoming snapshotty. A choice of lens here is more critical than in straight portraiture. A long focus lens or a mild telephoto will produce playboy-type shots, a 21mm or 28 mm produces a more "surreal" image. Lighting is fun to experiment with. Harsh cross-lighting or side-lighting can make for very pleasing results.

Writing on a subject like this in a limited amount of space is like trying to describe the history of the world in twenty-five words or less, but in summary, just remember to look at your subject as your camera will see it. Your mind's eye will see it quite differently.

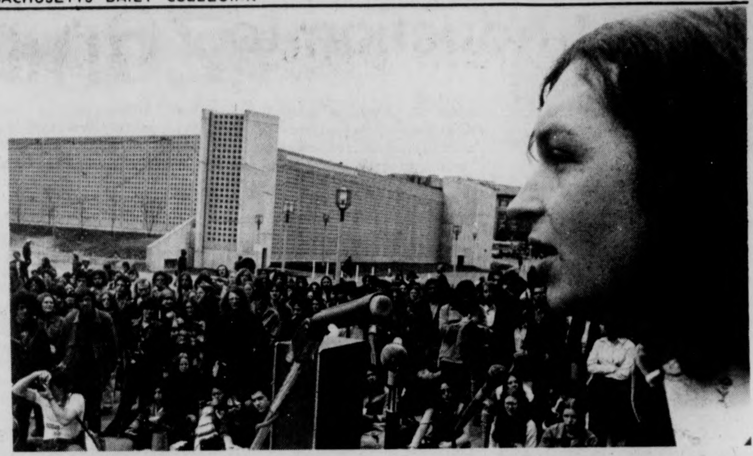
Of good photog's and newspapers

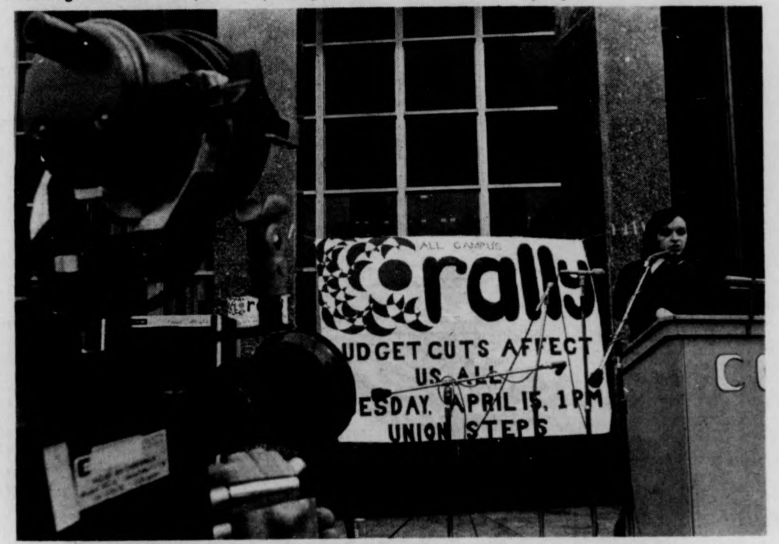
STORY and PHOTOS
By DENNIS CONLON

There has always been some percentage of good photographers who do not consider newspapers an acceptable outlet for their art. Some of the reasons for this attitude center around the quality loss in newspaper reproduction and the limitations on creativity of news photography.

It is true that in most large daily newspapers photos generally look considerably poorer than the originals. A closer examination of these photos reveals a pattern of thousands of dots, the reason for the quality loss. But since newspaper presses can only deliver full ink or no ink, grey areas in photos must be reproduced through the use of these dots. Spacing these dots closer together or further apart gives the photo the appearance of darker or lighter grey. This is accomplished by copying the photo through a screen with many fine lines onto photographic material which produces only dark black or clear areas; no middle tones. Depending on the time of exposure, darker or lighter areas of the original will reproduce black on this halftone.

Most smaller circulation (often weekly) newspapers, on the other hand, reproduce photos quite well. They also use this dot or halftone process, but instead of using a screen with about 65 lines to an inch, they use a screen with 100 or more lines to an inch, rendering the dots much less noticeable. So why don't the large dailies use a finer screen? The reason lies in the type of printing process used: letterpress or offset. Letterpress basically involves the use of molten lead poured into moulds, with raised type resulting. Offset uses a photochemical process in which light-sensitive metal plates are exposed through a photographic negative of entire pages. The type is not raised, but a chemical applied afterwards "tells' the ink whether to adhere or not. There are other limitations on how fine a screen can be used such as the quality of paper (which explains why magazines have better reproduction) and the speed of the press, but the letterpress process is the major obstacle to better photo reproduction in most large dailies.





Two alternatives to a "head and podium" shot: (above) move in close to the speaker and include the audience and (below) adding a prop.

The offset process, in its present state of development, is not suitable for use by papers with large circulations because of its lesser durability and the expense involved in changing to offset. Photographers very concerned with technical quality will probably not be drawn to these papers until they work out a way of using finer screens, perhaps through a better offset process. Until then, there are many smaller papers with very good photo reproduction.

Photojournalism does present certain limits on creativity, but the opportunities for and challenge of creativity far outweigh the limitations. For example, if a photographer for a large Boston paper takes great photos of a nude on a beach in South America on his vacation and then shows them to his editor, he would probably agree on their quality but say that they were inappropriate for publication in the paper because of the possibly offensive nature of the subject and the lack of relevance to the average Bostonian. On the other hand, many fine photos of people and events around Boston, unrelated to any news story, often run as feature or filler photos. The possibilities for creativity in these shots is almost endless.

Even more challenging is attempting to make the average news shot interesting or different. How many shots of someone's head and shoulders do you see in an average paper? Probably far too many. These head shots tell a reader what a person looks like, but they don't really tell anything about the person. The challenge in photojournalism today, which is being met to some extent already, is to break away from head shots and do something different, often by showing a subject doing something he often does. When a speaker gives a lecture it is difficult to do something interesting. What often appears in the paper the next day is a shot of some turkey behind a podium with perhaps some exotic hand-waving. This doesn't have to be the case. One alternative approach is to find the person before the speech. If a photographer could catch the person staring off into space, preparing the speech in his-her mind, this might be a very revealing shot. The subject is usually more likely to be himself offstage than on-stage, and the background is often more interesting. Even a group or team shot can be more than a dozen or two frozen people staring aimlessly out of the page if the photographer can get them to interact with each other in some way.

The best reason I can think of for good photographers to be drawn to photojournalism is "communication." Newspaper photos, depending on the circulation of the paper, are seen by anywhere from a couple hundred people to over a million. Hopefully, most of these photos affect most readers in some way. No matter how good a photograph is, if it is only seen by the photographer, it is worthless, an exercise in futility. It could be considered practice for better work, but if no other human being sees it, it communicates only to its author, and little or nothing is learned by the experience. If it is also seen by a handful of friends the photograph begins to have value. But if it is seen by thousands of people it becomes even more valuable. For better or worse, the photograph is then communicating something to many human beings.

So if you ever see a photo in a newspaper which has a noticeable or even powerful effect on you, remember that there are perhaps thousands of other people like you sharing in the same experience. And if one of your photographs ran in many newspapers throughout the world (it happens every day through news services such as AP and UPI) remember that you truly could move the world.

An introduction to Zones

By LAWRENCE HERSHKOWITZ

> The idea of previsualization is merely wonderful. The practice of previsualization is the master key to expressive-creative photography and Camerawork.
> Minor White

The Zone System, devised by Ansel Adams, is an advanced method of previsualizing photographs in order to insure proper exposure. In writing an introductory article it will be useful to draw information from an authoritative book by Minor White, The Zone System Manual, Morgan & Morgan Inc., New York, 1968. This photographer highly suggests White's book for a detailed, illustrated guide to the Zone System.

"To previsualize is to be led towards the essential resonances in photography: the resonances between subject and photographer at the time of exposure; the resonance between him and his print later; and finally the essential resonance between photographer and audience." To be sure, the Zone System is not for the neophyte photographer. It implies a functional knowledge of one's equipment; camera and light meter, in order to achieve satisfactory results.

There is a difference in the penatrating power of a photograph taken on the impulse of amaturish enthusiasm and one taken as the result of trained intuition. This difference cannot always be compensated for by the manipulation of darkroom technique, and for this reason it is necessary to maintain a systematic control over the medium at the time of exposure.

The nine "zones" of the system are based on the tones or values of grey which are fundamental to the medium of Black & White photography. The various values are arranged in a simple progression From Zone I, maximum photographic black, and Zone II, the first printable separation of tone, through Zone IX which is pure white. A "Zone" as a visual unit measurement is arrived at by altering a standard exposure by one "stop" more or one "stop" less.

The tool of the Zone System is the luminance meter. The luminance meter measures light reflected from surfaces on various scales which can be translated into zones.

Previsualizing a scene while using the light meter for determining zones allows the conscious photographer to look at a scene, person, place or situation and "see" the various ways photography can render the subject. Having developed this ability the photographer can then exercise his creativity in the manipulation of his equipment to select the desired effect. The skillful use of this procedure eliminates the need for guesswork in picturetaking along with the possibility of failing to capture one's original intentions in taking the picture.

The Zone System is also valuable in film development and photographic printing. In these processes the zone can be used as a unit of measurement for development as well as exposure. The fundamental effects that varying development time has over the entire scale of the film or print can be translated into zones. It is only through maintenance of control over all these variables that the "perfect" print can be achieved.

It should also be pointed out that this article is only intended as a basic introduction to the Zone System. To think that the high degree of quality that will result from its proper use can be attained in three easy steps is naive. In addition to studying the details of the system it is necessary to practice, for only through experience can previsualization become intuitive.

In considering whether the Zone System is for you, it is wise to contemplate the philosophy of Minor White:

"Photography will give anyone some kind of an image. The camera machine is made for those who are satisfied to let everything happen to them. Previsualization requires an effort, an act of will, therefore relates man to some form of higher 'do.' "

Printing:
Intermediate Course

By JOE MARTINS

There are two important concepts to be understood in order to print correctly and thus be able to judge any black and white print from a technical viewpoint. One is exposure, that correct combination of enlarger lens aperture and time upon the photographic paper that will yield correct tones interpreted from the original scene of picture taking. What is the correct exposure on the printing easel? The final test question to be asked when viewing test strips or blind guesses in the darkroom is, "Is there texture in the whites where there should be?" There should be texture in such things as white socks, shirts, etc. If not, more exposure time is necessary. All other tones should fall into place if the whites are textured.

The second important consideration is that of contrast, the range from blacks to whites found in the final print. A print may be perfectly exposed but too flat, thus having too much gray and no true black. Low contrast may be increased by increasing the paper grade contrast (paper grades of contrast run from grade 1 to grade 6, low to high), increasing developer strength, or stopping down enlarger lens. It must be noted that an increase in contrast will result in higher exposure times.

Too much contrast is found if there is detail in the thin part of the negative that doesn't appear in the corresponding shadow of the print. In this case contrast may be reduced conversely by lowering paper grade contrast, diluting the developer, or opening the enlarger lens. Again, watch exposure times.

Exposure and contrast go hand in hand in the printing process. The most important consideration is in the printing of a negative that has been exposed correctly. Only with a good negative can good or great print be made. It is not worth the effort to be meticulous in printing while salvaging a bad negative.

Getting back to basics: Everything you always wanted to know about printing

By DEBBIE SCHAFER

The act of shooting a picture is only the beginning of what it takes to arrive at the finished photograph. The success or failure of a photo depends to a large extent on how it is printed.

Dust on the negative or in the enlarger can ruin an otherwise excellent photo. Before placing your negative into the enlarger make sure it is clean and dust free. This will save you hours of eyestraining work, trying to spot out dust specks on the final print.

Remember — always place the negative into the enlarger emulsion (dull) side down towards the printing surface.

Set your easel to the desired print size and compose your photo within this frame. Focus with the enlarger lens open to the widest aperture. (If you are using polycontrast filters remember to focus with the filter in place.)

Determining proper exposure depends upon several variables. The contrast grade of the paper, density of the negative, and enlarger lens aperture all contribute to the time needed to expose a print properly. Use a test-strip of photo paper to determine a good exposure time.

The smaller the lens opening, the sharper the final print will be. Unless your negative is much too dense, make exposures at f8 or smaller for best results. Judging time for print exposure is learned through trial and error. Practice, practice, practice.

A properly exposed print should stay in the developing bath for 1 ½ to 2 minutes, no more and no less. Print exposure is determined primarily by the amount of light that reaches the photo emulsion, not by the length of time the print remains in the developer. A print which has been pulled from the developer too quickly or left for too long will lack a full range of tones. Don't settle for a mediocre print — if the print is too dark to too light, do it over. The difference in quality will more than make up for the cost of a few wasted sheets of photo paper.

Drain prints carefully when transferring from chemical bath to chemical bath. Mixing chemicals together because of improper drainage will weaken the chemicals and reduce their effectiveness. Use a separate pair of print tongs for each chemical bath.

Prints should remain in the stop bath for at least 15 seconds. Using an acid stop bath between development and fixing serves to stop the action of the developer and preserve the effectiveness of the fixer.

Fix prints for 5 minutes in rapid fixer, or for 5 to 10 minutes in regular fixer. Fixing insures print permanence by removing undeveloped particles of photo emulsion. Don't neglect prints in the fixing bath — agitate them and don't let them overfix.

After fixing, it is a good practice to use a hypo-clearing solution to remove excess fixer from the print. This increases print permanence and reduces washing time. Again, don't neglect prints in the hypo-clear — agitate and remove prints after 2 to 5 minutes.

Prints should be washed for at least 10-15 minutes. Make sure that your print washer allows an adequate change of water. Washing prints removes the traces of chemical processing and insures a long lasting print.

Processing chemicals and wash temperatures should be kept as even as possible between 65-75 degrees f. Extremes of temperature adversely affect the chemical processes, producing poor quality prints.

The most important thing to remember about printing is timing. Don't neglect prints during the processing stages. A sloppily processed print will eventually deteriorate — a well processed print not only looks better but last longer.

Tech Hi-Fi Now Brings Superscope to its Family of Fine Hi-Fi Components.

SUPERSCOPE
CD-302 Stereo Cassette Deck with Dolby Noise Reduction System

Features:
- Large VU Meters slanted for easier readability
- Sophisticated Styling integrates with Superscope component "family"
- Walnut Base included in price
- Dolby Noise Reduction System virtually eliminates tape hiss. You may use this Dolby system to record cassettes with Dolby processing, or to deprocess previously Dolbyized cassettes, or material from an external source, such as an FM stereo tuner, record changer, or even another stereo tape recorder.
- Limiter Pushswitch automatically limits the maximum recording level to avoid distortion. Especially important for recording music and meetings where different sound levels are to be recorded.
- Tape Select Switch allows for use of new Chromium Dioxide cassettes
- Illuminated Function Indicators for Dolby Limiter and Tape Select Switches
- Power Switch — rocker type
- Headphone Monitor Jack
- L&R Mic Inputs
- Separate R&L Record Level Controls for precise adjustment
- Record Mode Light to indicate recording in process
- Three-Digit Tape Counter with reset button
- Illuminated Tape Compartment for easy inspection of cassette
- Interlocked Piano Key Type Controls

SHOOTING CONCERTS

If you like to hear live bands, whether it be at the Bluewall or the Boston Garden, and you like to take pictures, it seems only natural that the two activities should somehow coincide. Maybe you've brought your camera to a concert once or twice but have been less than satisfied with the results. If so, don't despair.

While it's a lot of fun trying to capture a live performance on film, you'll find that half the "fun" is learning to overcome the photographic hassles with which most concerts abound. Concert photography provides a challenge to the photographer, and the possibilities for experimentation are endless.

Most concerts will provide ample opportunity to capture some outstanding shots, but always keep in mind that you are at the mercy of several variables — 1) freedom of movement that may be quite restricted, 2) lighting that can be either too harsh or too dim, and 3) a (usually) moving subject over whom you have no control or influence.

Many concert presentations are the open-seating type. It's best to arrive early, since first come get best seats or patch of floor space. Find a good spot to shoot from when you arrive since it is often impossible to move around once a crowd packs into the hall. Try not to position yourself directly in front of the stage, not too close, since this entails shooting upward at a sharp angle and producing distorted and unflattering images.

Ideally it is best to move around and shoot from as many angles as possible, but crowd size and seating arrangements usually limit this, somewhat.

Once you've found a place to stand, you are faced with the problems of dealing with stage lighting. Don't ever count on being able to use a flash or strobe, since it is usually not allowed. For best results, concert photography should be regarded as an available light venture.

Therefore, it is best to use a fast, versatile film such as Kodak Tri-X or Ilford HP-4. This allows for adequately fast shutter speeds and smaller lens apertures — all around sharper pictures.

Lighting conditions will vary, but most lights are harsh carbon-arc type and produce a very contrasty effect. A hand held meter can be used with varying degrees of success, depending upon one's distance from the subject. A through-the-lens metering system or a spot-meter is best since it focuses directly on the subject. Always be wary of placing too much trust in any meter — bracket your exposures to insure good results.

Another lighting factor peculiar to concerts is the many combinations of colors used in lighting. Red lights tend to be too dim for good exposures at hand held shutter speeds. Yellow light, being the brightest is usually best for photos. Concert lighting can be very tricky — keep your fingers crossed and bracket your exposures.

Travel lightly in terms of camera equipment. Too many lenses and gadgets tend to get jostled around or lost in a dark, tightly crowded situation. It is best to experiment until you find one or two lenses that are comfortable to work with and produce the best results.

Take along a few extra rolls of film and experiment with different combinations of lens apertures and shutter speeds. Write down your exposure information for future reference. The key word here is experimentation — through the experience of trial and error will eventually come good results. Shooting first rate concert photos is difficult, but provides a good chance to make and learn from your mistakes.

Getting started: Choosing camera and film

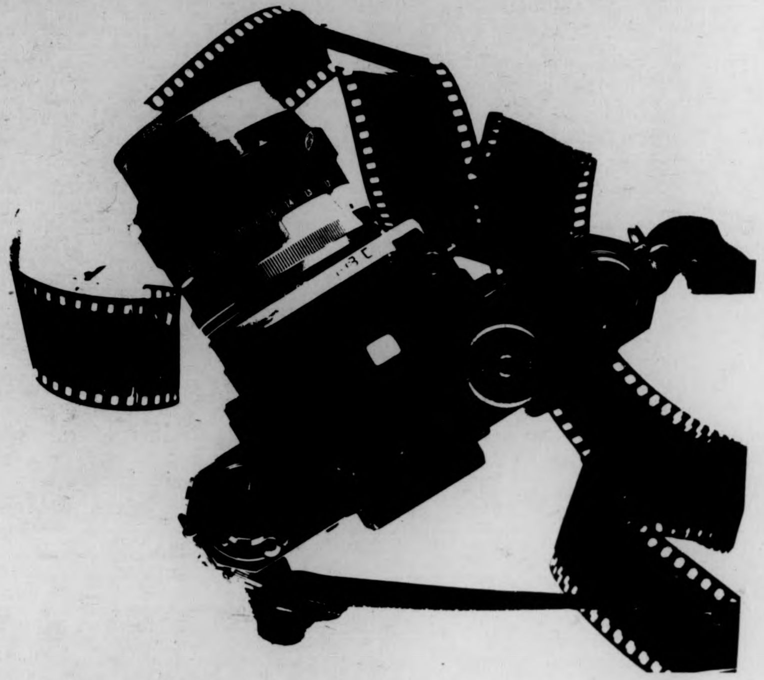
By DENNIS CONLON

You can't take photos without a camera, so this seems a logical place to start. To anyone just beginning in photography, I strongly recommend a 35mm rangefinder as opposed to a single-lens reflex. They are less expensive and less complicated, and more than adequate for learning about light, film, composition, etc. Too many people become fascinated by all the neat dials and buttons on SLRs, buy one, and then use it a couple of times a year or sell it. If you are really serious about photography, you will enjoy a rangefinder because most of your finished prints will look as good as or better than some of your turkey friends with fancy SLRs. Besides, when you get an SLR you will still have your rangefinder for such occasions as shooting the London Philharmonic Orchestra, where the sound of an SLR shutter would drive everyone present to distraction. One final hint: buy one of the brands which has been in the business for a long time and you'll have your camera for a long time. And oh yes, stay away from automatics! They amount to expensive Instamatics which give better quality but make important choices for you. Besides, they are easily fooled in many lighting situations.



You also can't take pictures without film, so here's the lowdown. There are many fine color negative and slide films available, but since very few people develop these films themselves, (and some must be sent out), and color film is more expensive, money being tight these days, I will limit my discussion to black and white films. I don't want to mention brand names, but if you stick to the bright yellow and red boxes, you are assured of consistently high quality and relatively low prices. (Not to mention helping a great American corporation.)

Films come in different speeds, identified by their ASA. Speed in film refers to sensitivity to light. A slow film requires a longer exposure than a fast film to correctly capture a given subject. Fast films are usually more grainy than slow films. Grain refers to the clumping together of the fine metal in the film which forms the image. The more clumping, the more grainy, the more coarse the photo appears. Choosing a film usually involves a trade-off between speed and grain. There are other factors involved, such as choosing a film which gives a wide choice of aperture and speed settings but here is a quick guide:

SLOW: ASA 25 - 32 is usually used in bright sunlight or when large reproductions (where grain becomes more noticeable) are desired.

MEDIUM: ASA 125 is usually used outdoors on any type of day and gives reasonable grain in blowups.

FAST: ASA 400 is almost always used indoors by available light (no flash) although many photographers use this film for most of their work. In blowups the grain can be quite a problem.

Because I did it, I imagine many beginners will want to go from film to film, experimenting even with infrared, high contrast and super fast (ASA 1000) films. This is alright for a while, but eventually it is best to get good with one type of film, so that you "know" it. This film varies from photographer to photographer, depending upon the type of work one usually does, but ASA 400 is very common because it can be used indoors and outdoors. ASA 125 is also popular, but those who stick with ASA 32 are considered strange. Watch out for them.

YOUR COLOR FILM

Examine your movies or slides with the help of this check list. It tells some of the common problems and how to correct them.
TOTALLY BLACK FILM—little or no image—Film was not exposed or seriously underexposed. Camera controls may have been improperly set or lens covered. Sometimes a roll of unexposed film is sent for processing by mistake—On 35mm, film may have slipped from take-up spool. Make sure film is securely attached to take-up spool before closing camera.
LIGHT PICTURES—Washed out appearance—lacking detail. Overexposure—Follow exposure instructions packed with the film.
DARK DENSE PICTURES—Underexposed—Follow exposure instruction packed with the film. On 35mm, possibly flash synchronization failure—possibly from weak batteries.
HEAVY SHADOWS—In pictures exposed with light coming from side, or behind subject. Failure to make allowance in exposure for side—or back—lighted subjects. Follow exposure instructions for side—or back—lighting—use supplementary flash or a reflector to illuminate shadow areas.
RED OR YELLOW STREAKS—Film light struck when loading or unloading camera. Always load and unload your camera in subdued light.
OUT OF FOCUS—Pictures not sharp. Incorrect focus, or distance too close with fixed focus camera. Possibly camera out of adjustment.
BLURRED PICTURES—On 35mm, possibly camera motion or subject motion. On movies possibly camera not held steady. Panoram on movies only rarely and very slowly. Use a tripod if possible.
JUMPY OR VIBRATING PICTURES—On movies—Incorrect threading and loop formation. If camera is magazine type, or designed to be threaded with loops, camera may be out of adjustment.
FLAT OR MISTY PICTURES—Oil, dust or moisture on camera or projector lens. Be sure the lens and any filters are kept clean.
DARK SPOTS—or shadows on film fragments. Dirt or film emulsion collected in gate of camera or projector. See your instruction manual for cleaning directions.
LIGHT CIRCULAR SPOTS—or curved streaks—Sun or light shining directly into camera lens or filter. Use a lens hood or shield lens from direct rays of light.
GREEN APPEARANCE—sometimes with dark spots or mottled. Film may have been subjected to excessive heat or humidity, or used after the expiration date. Store unused film in the original package away from heat and moisture. Never keep film in glove compartment or rear seat deck of automobile. Return exposed film promptly for processing.
EXCESSIVE REDNESS—If daylight pictures, film was exposed too early or too late in day. Make exposures in daylight from 2 hours after sunrise until 2 hours before sunset.
EXCESSIVE BLUENESS—Indoor color film used in daylight without the required filter. Daylight film exposed in open shade or on cloudy overcast days may give bluish results. Use a sky-light filter for such exposures.
PICTURES GREEN, RED, OR YELLOW—Filter for black and white may have been accidentally left on lens.
STORAGE OF PROCESSED FILM—Processed color film should be stored where it is dark, dry, and cool. Keep stored film away from radiators, steam pipes or other places where it may be subjected to high temperatures.

Students pressure State House

1,500 on Common, stress demands

By JAN ALEXANDER
and JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporters

BOSTON — Some 1500 UMass students blanketed the corner of Boston Common across Beacon street from the State House yesterday in a massive rally denouncing proposed cuts in the UMass budget.

The rally, on the second day of a two-day moratorium, was the largest congregation of UMass students ever to assemble en masse in Boston for political purposes.

Some 15 persons including Student Action Committee (SAC) members, UMass faculty and students, Boston area students and Speaker of the House David M. Bartley made concise speeches while 20 students picketed across the street.

Samuel Bowles of the UMass economics department spoke for a "democratic socialist society" in which our needs can be met without fighting for them every year.

"Capitalism is very sick, the system is weak and faltering. There is massive waste and injustice, and an inability to control the economy. We must move step by step, starting at UMass and other higher education institutions around the state," Bowles emphasized.

Ellen Gavin of the Student Action Committee (SAC) said that the rally was a good start but that, "We have to start raising Hell on campus. SAC will continue; we're not going to let the legislators pull tricks on us during the summer because we're going to be there."

Coalition for People's Budget (CPB) member Sherry Flashman read the nine demands which were being presented to campus administrators and state legislators and said, "We live in a system motivated by profits. We demand that this motivation go to human need."

"The argument that there is no revenue around is false," Flashman said. "Without changing the basic structure of taxes in this state, there are short term ways of generating more revenue," she added.

Basing her recommendations on a preliminary UMass economic department investigation, Flashman called for increases in inheritance, state and corporate taxes.

In a brief speech to the demonstrators at the end of the rally, Representative David Bartley said, "No I do not support the budget cuts."

Then, after the audience persisted in questioning Bartley on what he was doing and what his stand was on public education, he left the podium abruptly, saying he thought he had made, "a pretty good statement."

Student contingents from Boston State College, Boston University, Brandeis, Boston College, Harvard, and UMass-Boston all "expressed solidarity" for the budget protestors.

Throughout the rally, a circular picket line paced at the base of the State House chanting, "No budget cuts!" As the rally broke up at 2 p.m., more students joined in, increasing the number to over 200.

Capital and Boston Police blocked off the main entrance to the State House but no incidents developed. Small groups of students continually passed through the entrance to meet with State Representatives.

When the rally ended, the demonstrators headed back to to the waiting charter buses to make the 100 mile trip back to Amherst.

Parks after Wood budget

By MIKE IZDEPSKI
Staff Reporter

Massachusetts Secretary of Education Paul Parks said in a special interview with the Collegian yesterday that President Robert Wood only endorsed the student demonstration at the State House "because he (Wood) doesn't want anybody to go into that damned administration (budget) of his to look for cuts."

Parks basically supported students' right to demonstrate, though he doubted if the rally accomplished anything.

The Education Secretary re-iterated the unavoidability of a 10 percent ($24 million) across-the-board cut in the education budget. He pointed out that Governor Mike Dukakis went into office under the presumption of having to deal with a State deficit of $100 million.

Parks said, former Governor Francis Sargent never indicated that in fact the State was over $400 million in the red.

Parks argued, "It would have been immoral if we wouldn't have asked, including the universities, to participate in the necessary cuts."

He stressed the Governor's constitutional responsibility and duty to balance the budget and noted that "Mike Dukakis could literally be put in jail if he didn't try to get rid of that deficit."

The Secretary of Education repeatedly gave his assurances to UMass students that as far as he can go in proposing the University budget," students will not be injured. Nothing in my current budget proposals calls for a tuition hike, cutbacks in student programs or the imposition of any special fees."

He noted: "Even if a tuition increase should become necessary, it would be based on each individual student's ability to pay."

The Governor is to release the education budget proposals by May 30.

Parks admitted that, although he could make out the budget proposals, once the money is appropriated to the University, he has no power to force the UMass administration to use the funds in the ways he suggested.

He said, "Because we have fiscal autonomy, once the budget gets to them (the University administration) they can do what they want with it.

Parks felt however that students had the "right and obligation" to keep an eye on how the University spent its money. "After all," he said "through their tuition, students are paying for the administrative and faculty salaries."

"And if students feel like me, they can definitely have an impact in deciding where cuts should be made. I believe when I spend my tax money, I want to know exactly where the money is going to."

The Education Secretary limited his support for fiscal autonomy by demanding there be more "fiscal accountability" from the UMass administration.

Hearing about the difficulties students ran into in dealing with the University's Board of Trustees, Parks offered to push for a new ruling, which would permit students to be heard by the Board whenever important priorities demanded it.

Asked to comment on the State House demonstration which took place only two blocks away from his office, Parks said: "I have no problems with the demonstration. Students have the right to state their grievances, it's first amendment guarantee. I myself have been in enough jails in my life protesting a cause I believed in. Especially during the civil rights movement with Dr. King."

As for the effectiveness of the rally, Parks thought the timing was wrong, because there aren't any exact figures available yet on the budget.

Reflecting, the Education Secretary said: "My commitment to higher public higher education is a very intense one. If I had my way, public higher education would be a basic human right. We haven't reached that stage yet, but we're coming pretty close."

Viet Cong ride victoriously into 'Ho Chi Minh City'

HO CHI MINH CITY, South Vietnam — The Communist army rode victoriously into Saigon in Soviet-made tanks and captured U.S. jeeps yesterday, ran up the Viet Cong flag atop the presidential palace and announced the capital had been renamed Ho Chi Minh City - "the city which Uncle Ho dreamed of."

Shooting erupted at the palace, now Viet Cong headquarters. Last ditch government defenders fought several suicide battles around the city.

But the war — 35 long years of it, against American, French, Japanese and South Vietnamese forces — was over.

The Viet Cong in Paris said it would follow a neutralist policy and hinted privately the two Vietnams may soon be reunited. It was divided into North and South Vietnam after the victory of Ho Chi Minh, the late president of North Vietnam, over the French at Dien Bien Phu in 1954.

A representative of the Provisional Revolutionary Government — PRG — the political arm of the Viet Cong, said in Paris all foreigners in Saigon would be protected by his government.

Most Americans were gone and their once formidable embassy, ransacked and burned by resentful South Vietnames, in ruins. With them went about 60,000 Vietnamese, many of whom feared for their lives under a Communist regime. Duong Van Minh, the two-day president who surrendered, was reported in custody.

surrendered, was reported in custody.

President Minh, in a mid-morning broadcast, ordered the South Vietnamese armed forces to turn in their arms. The 51-year-old Minh, who was taken into custody after his broadcast, was later returned to a microphone by a Jeepload of North Vietnamese soldiers, and he issued another order for the Saigon troops to turn in their arms. His whereabouts afterward was unknown.

Many former soldiers tried to lose themselves amid the civilian population. A police colonel walked up to an army memorial statue, saluted and shot himself. He died later in a hospital.

Hanoi radio, in a broadcast monitored in Bangkok, proclaimed Saigon was "totally liberated" at 11:30 a.m. 11:30 p.m. EDT Tuesday. Saigon radio returned to the air under new management and announced Saigon, "the city which Uncle Ho dreamed of," henceforth would be called Ho Chi Minh City.

About three and one-half hours after the last Americans were flown out by Marine helicopters, Communist tanks rumbled into Saigon, smashed through walls at the presidential palace and crunched down Tu Do Street — its name means "Freedom Street" — chewing up the asphalt.

"Hello, comrades," the smiling, laughing Communist soldiers shouted to bystanders.

The only Americans left in Saigon were a handful of newsmen and missionaires.

The first day under Communist control was comparatively calm, but there seemd to be little joy among the populace. Government soldiers discarded their boots and uniforms and tried to fade into the civilian crowd which, slowly at first, made their way into the streets to watch their erstwhile enemies realize the dream they had had all those years.

They watched the Communist victory parade down Tu Do. Some waved, perhaps a bit apprehensively, to the smiling Viet Cong troops.

Aspects of license in question

Cable TV coverage uncertain

By BRIAN COYNE
Staff Reporter

Representatives of Pioneer Valley Cablevision (PVC) have questioned several aspects of the proposed cable television license to be awarded by the Amherst Board of Selectmen in July.

In a meeting with the Amherst Cable Advisory Committee II Tuesday night, PVC officials said they disagreed with the requirements for the number of channels to be provided in the new system, the duration of the license period, fines and penalties for nonperformance of the contract, and the availability of service.

During the meeting, PVC officials said the wiring of the UMass campus would not take place for a long time, after extensive marketing and engineering surveys and negotiations with UMass administrators have taken place.

Robert Moser, PVC spokesman, said "We hope that campus subscribers would enjoy the same rate structure as the rest of the system, but we would have to wait until we take our surveys before deciding."

PVC officials said they would be able to provide a system receiving 20 channels starting July, 1976. The original requirements established by the Amherst Board of Selectmen last fall called for a system capable of receiving a minimum of 30 channels, but PVC said it would be economically unviable to provide 30 channels since it would entail entirely rebuilding the system.

Albert Bloom, president of PVC, said, "We guarantee 20 channels in July, 1976, and with available equipment, we will probably be able to provide up to 26 channels."

PVC is seeking a license for 15 years in length, although Massachusetts state laws prohibit any renewed license to run in excess of 10 years, according to John Peterson, chairman of the committee.

Bloom said his company considered this to be a completely new license since PVC has made increased capital outlays and expanded its services.

The selectmen proposed a system of fines in the event PVC does not meet the construction schedule or provide the selectmen with the required data and reports.

William Arnold, of PVC, said there was no legal precedent for the fines and were unenforceable. He said customers could simply terminate their subscriptions if they were not satisfied with the service, or the selectmen could grant another license to another operator.

Speaking in support of the fines, committee member Prescott Smith said, "The local community should retain as much control as possible, and it must have some means of recourse if the operator does not perform."

Concerning the availability of service, the committee is hoping that PVC will be capable of providing 100 per cent of the homes in Amherst with service, while PVC says it can only provide 90 per cent availability.

The committee also expressed concern over the rules governing the operation of the public access studio PVC is required to provide. Bloom said PVC would retain discretion in the rules governing the operation of the studio and would have a "designated official" directing the studio.

Following the meeting, Peterson told the Collegian the committee anticipated no further meetings with PVC and would submit their final recommendations to the selectmen later this month. A provisional one-year license will be granted in July before the final license goes into effect in July, 1976.

Senate dissolution proposal dropped

By BILL PARENT
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night heard two announcements in the course of a two-hour session which subsequently adjourned for lack of a quorum.

Chairperson of Rents and Fees Jack Marciniec announced early in the meeting that student funds will no longer be used to finance such events as the annual trustees' breakfast.

It was also announced last night that the senate has recommended that the dormitory telephone fee for next year be raised by $1 to $20.

A motion was then made that the Senate dissolve itself and a "friendly amendment" was added that the question go to a campus-wide referendum. After debate on the legality of the amendment, it was defeated on a 14-7 vote.

Shortly after, while affirmative action guidelines were under discussion, a quorum was called. There was no quorum, and the meeting was adjourned.

There will be a meeting tonight at 7 of the entire Student Government Association to attempt once again to elect a president. The SGA has been unsuccessful in this endeavor three times in the last nine days; tonight's session is in Thompson 104.

Dicara critical of budget cuts

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

Boston City Council member Lawrence S. DiCara said the proposed University budget cuts are "not realistic, not good government, and not good politics" in a speech last night in the Campus Center.

DiCara, the youngest person ever elected to a major U.S. city government post, said a 10 per cent across the board cut will keep people on the payroll but not give them any money to work with.

"Governor Dukakis," he added, "should realize that not everybody grew up in Brookline or Amherst."

DiCara said the budget cuts are also "counterproductive."

"Someone has to pay," he explained. "The burdens are going to fall on local government and private sources."

As examples of "counterproductive" government policies DiCara cited welfare and health.

If the government's welfare programs go into effect, people will turn to Veteran Services, DiCara said.

"We cut Veteran Services $2 million in the past year," he added. "People will now turn there and the same situation is going to exist."

DiCara said there is "a tradition" for people to go to city hospitals when they can't pay their bills.

"There is a $10-$13 million deficit there now," he continued, "and it will go up because there's going to be less coverage available."

DiCara also discussed the Boston busing crisis, saying the schools should be economically integrated, as well as racially integrated.

"While they're satisfying the letter of the law," DiCara said, "all they're really doing is placing a black child, near a while child, not giving him a better education."

Officer Lewis B. Anderson of the UMass police, who is the desk officer on the day shift, was commended for his excellence in performance in the various tasks he has been called on to perform. The award was presented to him by Captain Robert Joyce.

Officer Andrews honored by peers

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

UMass police officer, Lewis B. Anderson, was selected as "outstanding department employee of the quarter" by the Department of Public Safety, yesterday.

Anderson, who has been with the department in various capacities for fifteen years is responsible for desk officer duties on the day shift, (7 a.m. to 3 p.m.).

His duties include working in the communication room at the switch board.

"He is the link between the officer on the street, and whatever is happening out there. It's a job where expertise in communication is essential.", said Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass Police.

Prior to working in communications, Anderson handled "every phase of operation" in the department", Joyce said.

"I've been a regular patrolman, up until last year," said Anderson.

According to Joyce, Anderson was recommended for the award by his shift commander.

"He was selected because of his excellence in performance, and is well thought of by all in the Department. If I could sum him up in one word, it would be: gentleman.", commented Joyce.

The selection process is conducted by a board of peers and secretaries in the Department.

Before coming to Amherst, Anderson worked as a base supplier in the Air Force for twenty years.

Anderson lives in Amherst, and has two sons are students at UMass.

"It's a nice thing, since he is one of our older employees, that the members of the department have recognized the excellent service Anderson has done," said Joyce.

Student concern appreciated, but...

Legislators unsympathetic to demands

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

While more than 1000 UMass students gathered outside the Boston State House to protest a higher education budget cut at Massachusetts state colleges, legislators inside the State House were both "appreciative of student concern" and unsympathetic to the students' demands.

A spokesperson for Governor Michael Dukakis said yesterday, "Students outside (the State House) have a zero sense of the financial crisis."

Representative Jim Collins (D-Amherst) said the UMass student rally in Boston was "very, very good and the legislators were impressed." Even though Collins believes Dukakis will go through with the 10 per cent budget cut proposed by Education Secretary Paul Parks, UMass "will fare through cuts," Collins said.

According to Collins, Speaker of the House David Bartley will "be the one to put money back into the university." Bartley, a staunch supporter of higher education in the state and who has helped UMass in the past, said, before the students at the rally yesterday, he does not support the budget cuts.

When Bartley's State House office was contacted before the rally yesterday, Tim Taylor, spokesperson, said that Bartley believed the student moratorium on classes will only hurt the cause of the university and that it "might erode possible tenuous public support."

Taylor said the students are just "taking a nice couple of days off in the balmy springtime."

Later, Taylor called the Collegian and said Bartley warned the students about a rally that may be "counter productive." The students milling around inside the State House were "quietly effective," according to Taylor.

Dukakis' press secretary Mary Fifield said the Governor has not received any alternatives to the budget cut from the students. "I think the students outside (the State House) have a zero sense of the financial crisis," Fifield said. Fifield believes students are not looking at the situation "squarely in the face."

"If the Governor begins to cut student programs," then the students have a legitimate gripe. But right now," Fifield said, "the students don't have a responsible cause and are not acting in a responsible manner (referring to the rally outside)."

John Abbott, spokesperson for Senate President Kevin Harrington, said the moratorium and the rally aren't the "right ways to go about it. You're talking about cutting welfare funds and Aid to Families with Dependent Children. As far as I know the legislators will not be as sympathetic with the students this year as they would have been in past years."

Abbott said if the Governor began restricting student enrollment at UMass, then the legislators would "look for other ways" (to solve the state financial crisis).

When asked if Harrington had received the Student Action Committee demands, Abbott said he had, but Harrington "was turned off by the fact that they were placed as demands. It would have been another story," Abbott said, "if the students sent in suggestions or recommendations."

Abbott said education has been a "real pet" to Harrington, but the time has come where we must "tighten the belt."

Collins said students should come back in the summer and talk with their respective legislators. "It would be very productive if we could develop a yearly presentation to the legislators because right now I'm more concerned with next year's budget cuts," Collins said.

Summing up the rally in Boston yesterday, Collins said it was a "positive day."

> "I am proud of the students from the University of Massachusetts who took their concerns to the State House and expressed them in a constructive and orderly fashion. We are grateful for their support. Those who participated in the demonstration and the thousands of others who are equally concerned should remember that the effort to gain enactment of responsible budget for the University have scarcely begun. The views expressed today on Boston Common should be repeated throughout the Commonwealth over the next several months to legislators, to parents, other students, and the general public."

Locke meets students, indecisive about vote

By DAN LaBONTE
Staff Reporter

Amidst the cheers and applause of some 2,000 students rallying on Boston Commons yesterday, many students took the opportunity to talk with their representatives about the proposed budget cuts.

State Senator and Assistant Minority Leader David H. Locke (R-Norfolk and Middlesex) was one of the legislators who provided time in the afternoon to meet with students and discuss the economic situation facing Massachusetts.

Before he could vote either way on the proposed budget cut, Locke said that the specifications and ramifications of the budget would have to be made more clear to him. The proposed cut is scheduled to go before the House next week. From there it goes to the Senate.

Although he is unsure whether or not he would vote in favor of the proposed cut, Locke said a possible alternative to the cut would be an increase in tuition, but he said he realized this was not a popular alternative.

A second possibility, according to Locke, would be to provide more money to more students, an option similar to the present government bank loans. The loan would allow students an extended period of time before repayment of the loan would begin and also extend the payments over ten or twenty years when "the student is financially more secure and able to handle the payments without feeling a devastating economic crunch. Ideally, the loan would be interest free," he said.

When asked about a tax increase, Locke said, "I would not say I am definitely opposed to tax increase."

Higher institutions of learning across the state are feeling the effects of money situation.

At Amherst: The rally that wasn't

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

The rally scheduled for noon yesterday in front of Whitmore Administration Building did not take place, due to lack of participants. Mike Federow, and Doug Stanley came to Whitmore carrying signs, remained for approximately fifteen minutes and left.

The rally, which was supposed to show support for the demonstration in Boston yesterday, and to support the "nine demands" was decided on Tuesday night, by SAC members who felt it would be a good idea.

The reason for the "no-show" according to Federow was due to the unavailability of sound equipment for use at the rally. Federow said they first checked the Campus Center, but could not get a megaphone since the only one they had was previously checked out for use in Boston. They also requested equipment from the UMass Police, and the Athletic Department, but were told none was available, Federow said.

He added they checked out University audio-visual and were told they could not get equipment, "especially for the kind of thing you're doing," although Federow said they had not even identified themselves, or the reason they wanted the equipment.

Another factor for the failure of the rally was due to lack of time to organize and sufficient people to put up posters in the Dining Commons and other campus areas, Federow said.

General concensus-rally was worthwhile

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Campus administrators and UMass students interviewed last night expressed "positive" reaction to the Boston Common rally held yesterday.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery felt the rally is "going to have some effect on the legislators' handling of our budget."

"Evidently it worked out very well, the students got their message across to the legislators," he said.

Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage said, "I'm delighted that it went off smoothly, but I think it'll be a while before we can assess the impact.

"The rally is a real credit to the students," he said, "that it was organized in so short a time."

Student Action Committee (SAC) members attending the rally were also pleased. Future actions will be decided at a meeting in Senate Council Chambers at 10 this morning.

Sheila Butcher, SAC member, said, "People have to keep in touch over the summer months. We are going to concentrate on organizing possible tuition and fee boycotts.

Steve D'Amico, another SAC member, said the rally was "unanimous and strong support for demands of no welfare and human service cutbacks.

SAC member Dick Dassatti felt good about the rally but said he also felt frustrated by the "runaround" given by State House staff in seeing legislators.

Steve Hanson, a UMass junior, said there was "no accurate way to measure" what the rally accomplished. "It was a clear demonstration that students were seriously concerned with the future of this University," he said.

Henry Doyle, UMass student who was not in Boston, said the major effect was in educating the people of the state through media coverage of the rally. "As far as legislators go, I feel they already had their minds made up before the rally," he said.

Student Organizing Committee Chairperson Sue Rivest, also not at the rally, said, "I hope that this level of solidarity and activity can be maintained by students."

Thousands of Vietnam refugees flood into US

Speculation grows about place here

By The Associated Press

Slowly, but steadily, more than 50,000 refugees from South Vietnam made their way toward the United States yesterday as officials worked out details of organizing and financing the massive relief effort.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said the Ford administration will ask Congress for money to care for as many as 60,000 or 70,000 refugees.

Kissinger said after a closed door meeting of the House Appropriations subcommittee: "We consider we have a moral obligation to tens of thousands of people who worked with us . . . "

He gave no specific amount, but Asst. Secretary of State Philip C. Habib, at a Senate Judiciary subcommittee hearing, agreeded with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., that it probably will cost the United States $500 million over a year's time to resettle the South Vietnamese who fled.

No one seemed to know just how many refugees there were en route from South Vietnam, through the Phillipines to Guam and the United States where preparations are being made to house up to 20,000 persons each at Camp Pendleton, Calif., Ft. Chaffee, Ark., and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

An estimated 55,000 refugees are already in relocation camps, but Kissinger said, "We don't know how many additional thousands may have come out on ships."

An American official at the United Nations said the United States has asked other countries to open their doors to refugees.

There were just over 28,000 refugees on Guam as of early yesterday morning, with new arrivals coming at the rate of 4,000 to 6,000 a day for processing en route to the United States.

Ships of the U.S. 7th Fleet carried about 1,000 Americans and 6,000 South Vietnamese evacuated by helicopter during the final U.S. pullout that began late Monday.

In addition, a Pentagon spokesman said about 18,000 South Vietnamese refugees who made their way to sea in sampans, rafts and other boats have been picked up by Navy ships, some of which are headed for Subic Bay in the Philipines and others of which are remaining to pick up any additional refugees.

There also are several thousand refugees who were flown to Thailand by South Vietnamese pilots and who are being ferried to Guam aboard U.S. Air Force planes.

Officials worried over everything from polio inoculations to paperwork for the refugees, some of whom lacked indentification documents. There were offers of help from several private citizens.

Officials at Clark Air Base in the Philippines processed the last of the more than 26,000 refugees flown to Clark from Saigon in the airlift that started April 5 and prepared the tents, dormitories, trailers and hotels for the arrival of the shipborne evacuees.

Indochina developments

Viet assets frozen

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Treasury Department yesterday placed a freeze on all South Vietnamese assets in the United States.

The order, effective at noon EDT, means that no one in South Vietnam can withdraw funds from a U.S. bank account without the permission of the Treasury Department.

Also, no American can send money to South Vietnam, even for humanitarian relief, without the Treasury's approval.

Panel approves relief

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Congress revived the Indochina aid issue yesterday with proposals to offer millions of dollars in relief for war victims in Communist-controlled South Vietnam and Cambodia.

In the Senate, the Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved a proposal authorizing $50 million in relief for war victims in Cambodia. Senators said the committee decided to hold the proposal, however, until the House either kills or passes the original $327 million Vietnam humanitarian aid bill.

Secret documents held

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford has formally refused to give Congress copies of Richard M. Nixon's confidential correspondence with former South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu, saying the documents hide no secret U.S. support commitments.

Ford's decision was made public yesterday shortly abefore Thieu's former executive assistant, Dr. Nguyen Tiem Hung, was to hold a news conference on the subject of the Nixon-Thieu aide correspondence.

Viet Cong to pursue policy of neutrality

PARIS [UPI] — The Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government said yesterday it will practice a neutral policy and work for the peaceful reunification of Vietnam. It said it soon would decree a nation-wide amnesty and that it would protect foreign residents and their property.

The official policy statement was delivered at a news conference by Dinh Ba Thi, PRG ambassador to the still-born Paris political talks with South Vietnam.

Thi said the new regime will accept foreign economic and technical aid from whatever quarter it comes, and establish diplomatic relations with all nations irrespective of their regime.

Communist Vietnam officials said privately the PRG statement offering the establishment of relations with all nations raised the possibility of an ultimate normalization of relations with Washington.

Communist Vietnamese officials said this also was a feeler put out by the PRG towards the Western countries that might be willing to help the war-ravaged South pull itself out of its economic difficulties.

Thi said the PRG was ready to practice a policy of a "great national union and concord." But it did not make any mention of the provisions of the 1973 Paris peace agreements calling for a National Concord Council that would include elements from the Saigon administration and neutralists, thus indicating the PRG would remain sole power in the South.

"In the international field, South Vietnam will pursue a foreign policy of peace and unalignment," he said. "It is ready to establish relations with all countries, irrespective of their political and social regime, on the basis of mutual respect of independence and sovereignty . . . "

Senators feel relief, sadness after war's end

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The evacuation of Americans from Vietnam and the surrender of Saigon brought sadness and resignation to official Washington yesterday – but, above all, relief.

Congressional leaders pledged, and largely observed, a policy of looking to the future without recrimination as President Ford urged.

"Let's start afresh," said Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, long-time opponent of U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., said the end of the war "does not abrogate our responsibility to help rebuild a land and a people so utterly torn asunder.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., also said U.S. aid should be provided to the war's victims in Indochina "in a diplomacy of reconciliation and normalization."

Brandeis students defy court order

Students not evicted from campus building

WALTHAM [AP] — Brandeis University obtained a temporary restraining order from a Superior Court judge at Cambridge yesterday to evict students who took over and occupied Pearlman Hall at the university.

An estimated 25 to 40 students seized the classroom and office building Tuesday morning to protest planned cuts in the university budget. They said the cuts would make the student body "richer and whiter."

About 50 students spent Tuesday night in tents and sleeping bags outside, but the number grew during daylight hours to 250 to 300.

Brandeis President Marver H. Bernstein issued a statement to the students in the building yesterday saying the university would not seek sanctions against the students if they left the building by a deadline "without damage to university and faculty property.." "

A brandeis spokesman said the ordered was delivered to dormitories of three leaders of the protest. The leaders were named in the order. University officials were awaiting a response from students who remained in the building.

The spokesman said the order, signed by Judge Raymond R. Cross, was directed at three students named, others "unknown" in the student committee and those acting with them.

He said it ordered them to leave the building but set no deadline.

The spokesman said if the students would not leave, the university would seek a contempt of court citation, and if that were issued, it would be up to the judge to clear the building.

The spokesman said the three students named were: Jaime O. Perez; Martha Hernandez, a senior from Chicago, and Lawrence Rothbard, a freshman from New Hyde Park, N.Y.

Perez' home town and class were not immediately available, but the spokesman said he is a student.

A spokesman for the students in the Brandeis building, who called themselves the Student Action Committee, said before the court order was issued that they would not leave until serious negotiations began and that they were willing to be arrested.

A university spokesman, Jeffrey Osoff said on Tuesday, "We have no intention of negotiating with any group that is occupying the building at any time. We have every intention to clarify, to explain, to listen."

Gun law said to cut crimes of passion

BOSTON [UPI] — One month after Massachusetts put into effect the toughest gun law in the nation, law officials believe it has reduced crimes of passion, but they say professional criminals have ignored it.

The law carries a mandatory one year prison term upon conviction of carrying a gun without a proper permit. Judges have no discretion in sentencing and there can be no parole, no probation, no suspended sentence and no furloughs once a person is in prison.

"I think it's a good law," said police Sgt. Dennis Kuzia of North Adams, where one of the first convictions was made under the law. "It will make people think twice before going out and carrying a gun.

"It helps keep the criminals off the streets. They're not going to get off with light sentences, you know. If people are aware of the law, they won't be so apt to carry guns," said Kuzia, a lawman for eight years. "And if they're not carrying one, they won't be so apt to pull it and shoot someone."

The young man arrested in North Adams drew the one year term upon conviction, but has appealed the sentence.

The legislature passed the law last year and it took affect in April.

If the average person is going to think twice about carrying a gun, the professional criminal is likely to ignore the law, a member of the organized Crime Strike Force of the Justice Department said.

"From a practical point of view, if the kind of people we deal with are going to carry, they're going to carry," the lawyer said of criminals and their weapons.

Report says 'the pill' safe for most women

NEW YORK [UPI] — News for the 150 million women who have taken "the pill" since its development 15 years ago: a new Rockefeller Foundation report finds it a "highly effective and generally safe" method of birth control — but not for all women.

The report by Dr. Elizabeth Connell, based on a review of oral contraceptive research from medical centers worldwide, was published yesterday in Family Planning Perspectives, the journal of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

The major points:

— Oral contraceptives are "highly effective and generally safe" for most women.

— The risk of developing serious illness as a consequence of taking the pill is small.

— Deaths associated with the oral contraceptives "is of a very low order of magnitude."

— The pill's long-term side effects, unknown at this time, must continue to be monitored closely to safeguard women using it.

— One hundred and fifty million women the world over have used the pill. About 50 million currently are using it, some 10 million in the United States.

When the pill first became generally available, it was hailed as the first contraceptive that was safe, virtually 100 per cent effective, simple to use and reversible.

Dr. Connell, associate Director for Health Sciences of the Rockefeller Foundation and chairman of the National Medical Committee of Planned Parenthood, warned, however:

news summary

State taxes may rise

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts residents soon may find that their federal tax rebates are offset by higher state and local taxes.

Massachusetts taxpayers, in fact, may soon be hit with a double dose of state tax increases.

By next week at the latest, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is expected to ask the legislature for authorization to float a bond issue to pay off this fiscal year's deficit and for increased taxes to pay off the bond issue.

A decision on whether new taxes will be sought to help pay for the next fiscal year's budget will be made in the next several weeks. Fiscal 1976 begins July 1.

Paychecks increase

WASHINGTON [AP] — Beginning with paychecks dated today, workers will get a few dollars more in their takehome pay as part of a government effort to perk up the economy by adding $17.6 billion to consumers' buying power.

The bigger paychecks will be the result of an adjustment of federal withholding tax tables to reflect tax cuts approved by President Ford last month. The Internal Revenue Service anticipates that because of the short time permitted for employers to change to the new tables, some workers will have to wait another week or so.

Energy policy sought

MONTPELIER, Vt. [AP] — Hoping to strengthen their position with the White House, New England governors will meet next week in an attempt to become the first region in the nation with an energy policy, the chairman of the six-state Governors Conference said yesterday.

Democratic Gov. Thomas P. Salmon of Vermont said, "We are attempting to sit at the head table while important decisions are being made. If we are going to be dealt in, we have to have a program.

Fresh air wanted

NEW FAIRFIELD, Conn. [AP] — The bicentennial commission in this rural community is proposing that America celebrate its birthday by making fresh air and clean water inalienable rights under the Constitution.

"We'll have flags waving and speeches. But we should celebrate our bicentennial by doing something for future Americans," said commission chairman, Dr. James S. Mellet.

RUSSIAN READING COURSE I, II

Aim of the course: To develop the student's ability to read scholarly Russian prose and literature. No attention will be paid to the other language skills. This course should be of particular interest to students who need to develop a reading knowledge of Russian as a tool. The first two semesters will concentrate on providing the student with an introduction to problems of Russian grammar, word-building, and sentence structure.

Topical outline: Presentation of the basic elements of Russian structure (declension, conjugation, word formation) primarily for recognition and understanding, rather than for active control. Introduction to those aspects of sentence structure necessary for reading through the use of simplified reading selections

Requirements: Quizzes, 2 one-hour exams, and a final.

Text: Dewey and Mersereau: Reading and Translating Contemporary Russian.

Prerequisite: No previous language training required.

Prerequisites: Completion of Russian 120 or equivalent.

RUSSIAN 139 Prof. Stawiecki
RUSSIAN READING COURSE III

Aim ofthe course: To develop the student's ability to read scholarly Russian prose and literature. No attention will be paid to the other language skills. This course should be of particular interest to students in the sciences who need to develop a reading knowledge of Russian as a tool.

Topical outline: Reading and analysis of carefully selected texts with the aim of developing both a basic vocabulary as well as enough sensitivity to the way in which Russian sentences are organized to enable the student to read in his field with the aid of a dictionary.

RUSSIAN (con't)

Topical outline: Elements from everyday life in the Soviet Union will serve as a basis for a whole series of drills and exercises, will provide a stimulus to classroom discussion, and will constitute a major source of new vocabularly. In addition, discussion ofthese elements will provide the student with some indication of the Soviet way of life.

Requirements: Two or three oral exams, and an oral final.

Text: to be announced

Prerequisite: Russian 140 or equivalent.

RUSSIAN 281 Staff
RUSSIAN STYLISTICS

Aim of the course: To help the student achieve maximal proficiency in Russian and to be able to write on a variety of subjects with ease and some feeling for the style of the language.

Topical outline: By means of selected readings with drills and exercises based on these readings, as well as through classroom discussions, written assignments and detailed presentation of more complex morphological and syntactical problems, the student should be able to achieve a high degree of sophistication in his command of Russian Requirements: Home assignments, weekly exercises in syntax and/or compositions on free or assigned subjects. Short quizzes, several hour exams and a final.

Text: to be announced

Prerequisite: Completion of Russian 262 or equivalent.

INTRODUCTION TO RUSSIAN LITERATURE

Aim of the course: Various works of major authors will be read in the original with the following aims: 1) To acquaint the student with these major authors and their works; 2) To develop in the student the skill of discovering the value of a literary work; 3) To instill in the student a feeling for the style and language of different authors.

Topical outline: A discussion and analysis of each author and his major works followed by an intensive analysis of a single work of each author. The student will be expected to write in Russian weekly reports indicating his understanding of each work and of the place it holds in the Russian literary tradition.

TEXT: to be announced

Requirements: Weekly reports, short exams on the completion of each writer, mid-term and final exams.

Prerequisite: Completion of Russian 262 or equiv

RUSSIAN 365/665 Professor Levin
STRUCTURE OF RUSSIAN

Aim: To analyze the morphology of Russian in a way that makes it possible to demonstrate the order and simplicity of a system that is traditionally presented in an unnecessarily complex and inefficient way. The two major areas of declension and conjugation will be treated in reference to morphophonemic notation rather than to the Cyrilli alphabet so that certain regular patterns hidden by the orthography may be discerned.

Topical outline: First two weeks: Introduction to simplified morphophonemic analysis, an understanding of which makes it possible to examine the whol system of Russian flexion in a manner not possible in terms of a traditional approach.

Subsequent eight weeks: Thorough analysis of declension (nouns, adjectives and pronominal adjectives) and conjugation (all verbal forms, including verbal adjectives and adverbs) making use of morphophonemic principles to demonstrate the basic simplicity and orderliness in a system which is too often mistakenly viewed as being chaotic and full of irregularities.

Remaining three to four weeks: Selected problems in derivational morphology, again with the major aim of helping a student find an orderly system where generally he sees only chaos.

No text required.
Requirements: Two one-hour take-home exams, one take-home final.

Prerequisites: Proficiency in Russian.

RUSSIAN (con't)

Requirements: Quizzes, 2 one-hour exams, and a final.

Text: D. B. Johnson: Eyewitness

RUSSIAN EXPOSITORY PROSE

Aim of the course: This course is designed to continue the work of either R 139/439 or of R 130. Coming from either of these courses, the student who is interested in developing only his reading proficiency will, by concentrating on problems of translation, be able to achieve a higher degree of skill in this course than he could in the normal 140 course with its divided emphasis on all four language skills.
Readings: To be announced
Requirements: No papers, hour exam, final.
Prerequisites: Three semesters of Russian or the equivalent.

RUSSIAN 259/559 Prof. Rothstein
THE SLAVIC PEOPLES, THEIR LANGUAGES AND CIVILIZATIONS

Aim of the course: A survey of the historical, social-intellectural and cultural evolution of the Slavic Peoples from the earliest times to the present. Conducted in English, no language prerequisite. This course is designed to give some understanding of the historical experience of the Slavic peoples, especially as manifested in their cultures. Emphasis will be on the non-Russian Slavs, since Russian history and literature are covered in other courses.

Readings: to be announced

Alternative to NUKES ?

Much has been written and said about the energy crisis and the subsequent need to build new and bigger electrical generating facilities (especially nuclear). But, are nuclear plants the only alternative to solving the energy crisis, or are there others?

Tonight, Prof. William Heronemus, of the Dept. of Civil Engineering, and one of the leadeing proponents of wind-powered generating systems will talk and give a slide show on "Alternate Energy Sources". This event is being sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality and will take place in Thompson 102 at 7 p.m.

If you are applying as a Change or New, you should come into the Parking Office as soon as possible. The Renewal and Change deadline is May 16.

Alumni office sponsors seminar

Professor Thomas Arny will deliver the second of three alumni seminars by the UMass Alumni Office today in Worcester.

Arny will discuss . . . what else . . . the weather. His area of study is astronomy, particularly the gas clouds near young stars, but he is also interested in the many beautiful and curious "weather signs" which can be seen in the sky.

Many of these signs are often overlooked, including haloes and "sun-dogs", although they can be seen without a telescope.

Arny feels the world's weather and climate is poorly understood because it is complex. Yet, the gradual accumulation of data by observers of the weather signs is increasing knowledge in the field.

Locke indecisive

★ cont. from p. 3

According to Locke, private colleges and junior colleges, operating under a deficit for the past few years, are simply folding "facing serious financial difficulties."

Where junior colleges are failing, "we often see community colleges receive large sums of money to expand their facilities. Often in areas where there is a lot of political muscle," he said.

Commenting on the Dukakis Administration, Locke said, "The new administration is energetic and well educated. Essentially they are receiving their training through on-the-job experience."

Locke believed the meetings between students and legislators was a good idea, since it provided students an opportunity to have their voices heard and also gave legislators and students a chance to see each others perspective.

Boston City Councilor Lawrence Dicara called proposed budget cuts "not realistic, not good government, and not good politics" in a speech last night at the Campus Center.

Of the 84,000 people enrolled in the Boston school system, he added, half of them qualify for Medicaid, half of them qualify for free breakfast and lunch, and two-third to three-fourths of them are poor "in the simplest, nonanalytical sense."

DiCara said, "The Municipal Plan is the solution. Those people in the economically advantaged areas say that black children don't want to go to school there, but if black children don't want to go to school in Wellesley, they won't want to go to school in South Boston either."

There is a lot of hypocrisy because of the function of economic class, he added.

"Racism is racism whether you're rich or you're poor," DiCara said. "Suburbs are hypocritical. They like selective integration as long as they get to pick who is selected."

DiCara said Boston also has a "grave" unemployment problem, 25 per cent of the black population and 40 per cent of the Spanish population are unemployed, while 50 per cent of the people under 25 are unemployed.

Awareness of rape problem due to 'women's movement'

By ANNE MELANSON
Staff Reporter

The women's movement deserves most of the credit for making rape a serious issue of social concern, according to a panel of experts who spoke Wednesday on issues concerning the problem of sexual attacks on campus and in the Amherst community.

Sarah Wolff, counselor at Everywoman's Center and the Mental Health staff of the University Health Services, was one of the three speakers who cited in their discussion of "Rape and Other Aggressive Behavior" the change in public views since the fifties.

The attitude that "rape is inevitable, so relax and enjoy it" is no longer acceptable to the public, she said.

The new awareness of the seriousness of the problem is reflected in programs now under the direction of the University Health Services and the UMass police.

Dr. Thomas McBride, director of the Division of Medical Care, UHS, revealed some of the new directions taken on campus toward the rape problem. The Health Services now performs a "dual role", first in treating and counseling the rape victim, and second in obtaining and recording evidence helpful to her if she decides to take action in the courts.

"If we are subpeonaed, we stand ready to assist the victim and police in the conviction of the assailant," McBride said.

The doctor said a rape victim comes to the University Health Services "about once every other month." While the general policy there is to leave the rape issue to the courts, he said the victims are encouraged to report the assault.

Policies of the local police have likewise changed in recent years, according to UMass policeman Saul Chafin, who also spoke on the panel.

Chafin said "the department recognizes that the rape victim needs support and our first intent is to be concerned with the victim."

A new 1974 law requires that the department have female officers to remain with the victim through questioning and in court, that counselors be available to the victims, and that a 24-hour "Rape Line" be in service.

Although the rape victim has in the past been inhibited about reporting rapes because of unscrupulous methods used to question her reputation, Chafin cited changing attitudes in this respect. A decision of the California courts, he said, has established a recedent of prohibiting any evidence of past activities of the woman in a rape case, and this will affect cases all over the country.

Both the police and Everywoman's Center offer programs in self-defense. Wolff noted that knowledge of self-defense gives a feeling of self-confidence that the rapist may sense and shy away from.

The discussion was sponsored by the Women's Health Series of Everywoman's Center.

DC's fall offerings- 10, 14, 19 meal plans

Food services will offer three board plan for the next academic year. They include a ten meal, five day plan; a 14 meal, seven day plan; and a 19 meal, seven day plan which will cost $656.00, $736.00 and $806.00 respectively. There will be no 15 meal plan offered next year.

A student may eat any ten meals in a five day period with the first plan, any 14 meals out of 19 offered in the week with the second, and all 19 in the week with the third plan. This is a departure from the previous policy of having specific tickets for individual meals which were wasted if the meal was missed. Under the new system the student will be able to eat as many meals a day as he-she wants up to the use of the number of tickets for that time period.

The best plan for the student who previously bought the 15 meal plan and went home weekends the fourteen meal-seven day plan is the best to buy. Students who are satisfied with the board plan and stay on campus on weekends would do well to buy the 19 meal-seven day plan.

These figures represent a $39.50 annual increase over the fiscal year 75 ten meal plan and a $45.50 increase over the fiscal year 75 meal plan. No comparison can be made for the nineteen meal-seven day plan because it is new.

The budget for the residence halls represent a $25.00 to $30.00 Food Services increase over last year's cost. This budget is predicated on holding rents to a minimum and continued efforts to improve the overall efficiency of the operation. Maintenance is expected to continue at fiscal year 1975 levels.

Unrenovated dorms in Northeast and Central areas will cost $645.00 per year and renovated dorms in the same areas will cost $705.00. Sylvan will continue to have the highest rent at $725.00 for the year. Orchard Hill and Southwest dorms will cost $705.00.

If this is Wednesday it must be Boston

"It was a positive day!"

With those words Representative Jim Collins of Amherst aptly summed up the second day of a campus wide moratorium, the demonstration in Boston.

The day had indeed been positive. The weather was perfect for a demonstration. Upon our arrival we were greeted by the budding trees and well tread lawns of the Common. The State House dome radiated intense light in the pleasing noontime sun. The scene was typically Boston. Bums, workers and vendors littered the park.

Standing at the foot of the halls of law-making gave the crowd a feeling of actually having a voice in what was being pondered inside its confines. No longer were we addressing the deaf ears of puppets in Whitmore or the deceiving cameras of the Eyewitness News Team. The legislators had the opportunity of seeing first had the unity and size of our movement.

The Student Action Committee had formulated a unique lobbying effort. Telephone calls and poison pen letters had preceded the massive car and bus caravan to Boston.

Yet it was the personal contact, the one-to-one exchange with each lawmaker that put legitimacy into the cause. Inside the building the representatives and senators seemed impressed by the force and eloquence of the students' arguments. Throughout the day they were confronted by lobbyists in their offices and outside their respective chambers. It was the beginning of an attempt to secure grass roots support for the future of public higher education.

Across from the State House steps the grievances poured out again. For what seemed to be the one-hundreth time in the past few weeks the 9 demands were read and applauded. Hopefully they will not be left echoing over the Common never to be heard again.

For most it was the first exposure to state government or a large scale media demonstration. I for one was amazed at Speaker Bartley's attempt to draw the attention away from the students and channel it into a publicity effort complimentary towards himself. All the T.V. heavies were there and unfortunately they fell for it. Their arrogance was perceived by many in the crowd. Their eyes, cameras and microphones passively surveyed the scene as if what we had to say had little or no meaning. Soon they could return to the utopian confines of their "beautiful" news rooms.

But to those who stood applauded and cheered for a little over two hours it was indeed meaningful. Many saw it as the first step in a student inspired movement to better our society.

Traveling from Amherst to Boston was like returning to reality. The filth, pollution and degradation of the city was obvious everywhere. As I listened to Sam Bowles talk about a society "we could all fit into" I couldn't help but notice a vagrant, victimized by a bottle of Port wine, passed out on the Common lawn. I thought of a society which would not breed individuals like him.

Who needs this?

By two-fifteen p.m. the demonstration had reached its peak and was beginning to die down. Speaker of the House David Bartley (D-Holyoke) appeared suddenly at he steps of the State House and strolled casually across Beacon street to the waiting microphone. The incessant chant of "No budget cuts!" and "They say cut-back; we say fight back!" came to an abrupt halt.

Reporters had been anxiously pacing back and forth in front of the heavily policed, iron gates of the State House in anticipation of his appearance from within. He finally came out, and having never met the man before, I couldn't distinguish him from the rest of the double-knot delegation and quickly reached out to the closest blue suited gentleman and inquired, "Hey, is that Bartley?". He turned to me in utter confusion and replied hesitantly, "Ah, yah." I later discovered he was representative Jim Collins (D-Amherst).

Bartley did not deliver any speeches as he wasn't "running for anything next election" but proceeded calmly in responding to a number of questions fired at him from the crowd. "No, I do not support the budget cuts," retored the ex-UMie. After this statement a student stepped forward and requested an apology for the rash scolding that the Speaker had levied on UMass students a few days earlier.

"GO POUND SAND!" he graciously advised the student. Bartley then descended into the crowds for personal interviews.

I was out of film and Bartley was out of talk. By two-thirty the last act was in progress across Beacon street where dwindling numbers of demonstrators were engaged in a chorus of "Goodbye Michael — goodbye Michael — we'd love to see you go."

Meanwhile inside the State House, Collegian reporter Mike Izdepski was preparing for an interview with the Governor.

It had taken a good deal of negotiating that morning for Izdepski to arrange the interview and he was in poor spirits when he entered the conference room only to find David Sugarman, who claimed to be the "voice of Governor Dukakis". Needless to say, we wanted it straight from the horse's mouth, but took what we could get. The first and last question was asked by Sugarman, and not the reporter, it being, "Are you enjoying your spring vacation?".

So this is the "voice" of the Governor; this is the attitude of the Governor? Izdepski declined the interview in much the same manner that Speaker Bartley closed his rap session outside on the Common: "I don't need this," they replied simultanously. E. Commons' Comment

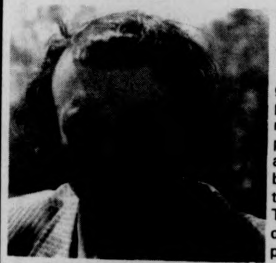
At yesterday's State House rally in the Boston Common Park, passersby were asked: "What do think about the student demonstration, it motivation and the effects it will have."

Dianne Curry, from Beacon Hill world traveler:

"The students are justified in their demonstration. It's the only way they can make a point. Dukakis had better step down, because he is causing a lot of dissention. He is hurting the poor, who need him. I wanted him, but he's no good."

Jonathan Joseph, from Roxbury, unemployed:

"The students have a good thing going. We've been hearing from the government long enough, now lets hear from the students. I don't know, if this demonstration will help with the legislators, but the public will notice. Reducations in welfare and education are simply no solution."



Dale Buckley, health planner from Middleton, UMass class of '71:

"I think the demonstration is going to be ineffective. Dukakis pretty much has made up his mind, regardless of student protests. I don't feel students are just trying to take a day off, but are really concerned and trying to motivate change. Tuition wouldn't have to rise, if certain people in higher positions were paid less."

Janice McCarthy, housewife from Roslindale:

"The demonstration is all right. After all, kids should have to pay less for their education not more. Calling and writing representatives is okay, but I would never have known about this whole thing, if it hadn't been for this gathering I saw while going shopping. Now the public is more aware."

Joe Wascalis, computer programmer from Binghamton, N.Y.:

"Students should be heard and in a different time and economic situation I might agree with them. I just saw a sign 'Universities should be open to the masses'. What students don't realize is that the masses aren't supporting higher education. It's us middle class taxpayers that are being billed."

Concerning the moratorium

We of the Veteran's Coalition are deeply disturbed by the recent news reporting by the Collegian of the Student Action Committee and the student voted Moratorium. The lack of coverage of some events, the incorrect nature of some stories and the placement of insignificant issues at a high priority indicates that editorial opinions of some of the staff have affected adversely the fairness of the MDC's news reporting. This is purely and simply shoddy advocate journalism.

The PNS has tried repeatedly to disseminate information on the progress of the Student Action Committee and related student groups. Every effort at publication in this supposedly student newspaper has been met with resistance on the part of the editors and charges of advocacy journalism.

The two most recent front page articles credited to the former managing editor, Bill Densmore, currently an MDC reporter and stringer for the Boston Globe, are indicative of this kind of bias.

In the first, of Monday, April 28, Densmore received front page coverage of House Speaker David Bartley's negative reaction to student organization and moratorium planning. Page five of the same issue gives confirmation of the fact that Bartley, at the same time the current UMass students are confronting the state and administration, is applying for the presidency of Holyoke Community College. Bartley's quote: "I've always been interested in education."

The two stories together draw a picture of an interest in education just so long as the administration and state maintain complete control over student interests.

In Tuesday's Collegian, Bill Densmore again received front page space for an erroneous and totally misleading story regarding permitting and planning for Wednesday's demonstration in Boston. This slanted reporting must end.

We of the Veterans' Coalition call for a complete reevaluation of the Collegian's policies and restructuting of the Collegian staff, eliminating the person or persons responsible for anti-student advocacy journalism.

David O'Connell spokesperson

Front page articles in both Monday's "Collegian" and Tuesday's Hampshire Gazette devoted considerable attention to the opinions of House Speaker Bartley, who expressed a strongly critical view of the moratorium. Both articles failed to mention a recent UPI release [carried on a later page of that day's Collegian] which reported Bartley's announced candidacy for a position as head of a nearby college.

This is a serious omission. One need not accuse Bartley of a crude, hypocritical and self-serving attempt to gain the academic post to see how his interest in this position affects his status as a news source. For example, quo [potential] academic administrator it is only natural to have an interest in maintaining "business as usual" at the Academy. Qua administrator a person no doubt has special interests and a special perspective. While "special" need not imply "evil", it does suggest the viewpoint may be limited, or biased

Unfortunately the failure to mention Bartley's candidacy obscures this possibility. As the only elected representative quoted in these articles, and as Speaker of the House, Bartley is naturally seen by the reader as representative not only of his consituency, but as an indicator of the mood of the legislature. The very real possibility, that perhaps his special interests color his opinion, making his views neither a good legislature, is obscured by this omission. Bartley may be an honest man, and a friend of the university, but this does not guarantee that the views he expresses are either objective or representative.

Prophets of power

Norman Vincent Peale says he has seen the light. He says that he has learned through God the way to make himself a better person and he's glad to pass it on to you, yes he is.

Why, he could tell you how to wake up in the morning and brush your teeth and run into work and feel just great about it. He could tell you how to find your way when you're lost in life's busy shuffle. He could even tell you how to make love — that's right — make love and not feel guilty about it.

'Norman Vincent Peale could even tell you how to make love - that's right - make love and not feel guilty about it'

And you know what he'd tell you? He'd say "Brother, you've got to have faith. Faith is the word that makes fear tremble and removes sin from your minds." And brother, you've got to listen to Norman Vincent Peale because that man has seen the light and he'll be the first one to tell you. And you've got to have faith in him because he's only telling you what he knows to be tried and true.

You can ask Rex Humbard and he'll read from his prodigious notes and sing you songs about God and Christ and fear and all the things a Christian" can afford to do. Why that man will get you saved if it takes everything you have, because he knows the way.

And if you don't believe Rex, then you've only to try the great Reverend Billy Graham, 'cause he is the most impressive, impeccable, incomparable and overall amazing country preacher of them all. Why he could have a bunch of high-falutin' businessmen crawlin to the Power of God after a single sermon.

Why Elmer Gantry must be green in his grave watchin' the style of some of these men. They can have a crowd howlin' like country coyotes before you can change the station. They can make you want to be a better man, give up sex, stop smokin' cigarettes or jump out the window on a single Sunday and they's still have a little bit left for commercials.

'Praise be the Lord and his accountants for they maketh out well in the Land of the Free and the Home of Whopper.'

You've got to believe in these folks 'cause they have found the way. Let me give you the example of the poor bum who was saved by an evangelist for ten dollars a month on the installment plan. That man suddenly felt the need to go back to work and resume his place in society, and it was the evangelist ohat did it for him.

You can't deny the Power of od and of his disciples, who distribute the Power amongst them. Praised be the Lord and his accountants for they maketh out well in the Land of the Free and the Home of the Whopper.

And praised be that person who can resist the temptation — repeat, resist the temptation to booteth thee tube of thy Sabbath morn.

Let us rally behind these orators of faith and wisdom and search for the light. Let us seek out God in every house and hotel lobby. And let us call to him and ask him which one of his worldly prophets is truly speaking with the voice and authority of the Lord. And when he has spoken, let us go out and kill all the false prophets. It's all right 'cause God will be on our side, yes he will.

Retroactive activism

Pollution, racism, and corruption in government, where have all these problems disappeared to?

Once, issues deeply embedded in American consciousness, they are, now, no longer fashionable to protest.

Some scientists predict that the world may soon be out of breathable air, but it is no longer "vogue" to bring attention to the problems of ecology. Though in the late sixties it was a topic of great concern, now it has all but been abandoned by even its most staunch advocates.

What happened to the old cry of equal rights for equal pay? Equality has far from been achieved, but white society has forgotten the black problem.

After Watergate we were about to rebuild our government. We were inspired to make a real impact on corruption. Now, our determination has dwindled, and we are nowhere near a satisfactory conclusion.

We cry so loudly when we see an injustice. Why does our guilt diminish before a satisfactory conclusion is determined?

Are we just easily discouraged or is it boredom?

We do not have the persistence to see a problem to a satisfactory conclusion. If we find that results are not easily obtained, we tire of a problem.

The blame of our fickled nature may lie in the lack of substance in our minds. Our wills are like clay — weak, characterless, and easily molded.

Have our voices become just parrots? Have our thoughts become just reflections?

The courage of conviction comes only with the belief in conviction, and belief in conviction comes only when one has made his own conclusions. No one can follow the thoughts and ideas of others, forever.

Are we so weak willed that it has become the fashion to let others lead us in protest?

Are our beliefs determined by styles, just as clothes are determined by styles?

We meekly follow the leaders, the ones who think and act in protest of whatever injustice attracts at the moment. But we can only make people aware of problems, we do not seek solutions.

We are too easily convinced of rectitude, without contemplating the convictions in our own mind. We use the reasoning and arguments of others, without really deciding for ourselves. Too often, we are swayed by a convincing argument and fail to determine what it means to us.

Support for the injustices of the world have become dependent on the temporary guilt of liberals.

The world cries out in protest, and when they see how difficult it is to achieve results they abandon the struggle. And those who really suffer, the victims of injustice, go on suffering long after the world has become bored with their problems.

Benita Pullara is a Collegian Columnist.

The supreme misunderstanding

As you are reading this, a young girl is sleeping somewhere in another corner of the world trying to understand what has just happened in her country. The men in the green uniforms with red white and blue patches have suddenly left. Her mother is sitting in another room talking to her father whom she hadn't seen for a very long time. The girl knows there is something different. She can sense her parents relief and nervousness and she wonders what will happen next. She hopes that they will not find out her father was a soldier, she does not know why. Before her mother had told her to be proud of him, but still she shares the fear in her parents' eyes.

Maybe she is thinking that since her father returned her older sister will too. She had gone off to the city a few years ago, and her mother never spoke of her again. And when she asked of her sister, her mother turned away and told her that if she ever sees her sister again not to talk to her. She had brought shame to the family.

She is remembering to pray for her brother who is in the hospital. He lost his arm and a leg when a bomb went off somewhere when he was playing. What could he have been doing that was so wrong?

Her parents are going to bed now, she will hear their breathing again. They are tired; there has been much excitement lately, but the noise has been happy noise, not the loud gunfire she had grown so used to.

But she will try to go to sleep now and forget about everything. She doesn't understand.

And while you are reading this, a family sits somewhere in another part of the state. There is coffee on the table and people speak in teared whispers. They have lost their son, their brother in the war; he was a marine and he was the last to die.

Newspaper clippings with worn edges about high school heroics cover the table. Friends and relatives have been dropping by for the past few days. They try to be strong and comforting but they cry and turn away.

They will try to carry on now and lead their lives like they did before. But they don't understand.

Tonight in an Amherst bar a man sits nursing a bourbon and a cigarette. He will be watching the news while all too familiar scenes flash across the screen. He remembers Da Nang, Saigon and Quang Tri all too well. He was there not long ago and the children screaming, the bloody scenerios, and the smell of death has never left him. His friends back home went on without him, they are married now and they, like his country, don't recognize him when they see him on the street.

He orders another drink from the bartender who fought a war before him. He doesn't understand.

And tonight the author of this column will clip it out of the paper and put it in the folder besides columns written about corruption in the University and in the Government. He knows that it is his duty to observe. But having spent his life observing Vietnam this column will be different.

He still doesn't understand.

'Outer Space' band from area to play Susan Ford's senior prom

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

A six-man rock band from Wendell which has played at UMass and area nightspots will be one of two groups performing at the White House May 31 for Susan Ford's senior prom.

A White House spokeswoman yesterday confirmed that "Outer Space" has been contracted for $350 to play at the prom with another band from Richmond, Virginia.

Five of the group and their manager, Eric Weiss, are in their mid-twenties and recent graduates of Trinity College in Hartford, Conn., according to Weiss.

Wendell is a small town about twenty miles northeast of Amherst. The group has lived there for several years, Weiss said.

He said the band's bass player, John Koehler of Washington, D.C. is a personal friend of the Ford daughter's class president at the preparatory school she attends outside Washington, the Houlton Arms School.

Weiss said the group plays country , rock, rhythm and blues, swing-era jazz and their own compositions. He said they have performed professionally for three years, including at UMass November 22 and at "Springfest" last spring.

"I think this is going to help us out," Weiss said in a recent telephone interview. "This is a good break for us, but it isn't going to be the ultimate break.

"I know it's not going to get us a record contract, per se," he added.

Susan Ford's prom will be like any other high school graduation prom except it will be held in the White House, a spokeswoman there said. It will include food and dancing.

The group is also scheduled to play at the Campus Center tonight in a concert sponsored by Pierpont dormitory, he added.

TA's organize

Last week T.A.'s formed a group called the Teaching Assistants Organizing Committee [TAOC]. Members have since visited many departments to begin establishing contacts for a unionization drive. The goals of this union are job security, anti-discrimination, cost of living compensation, equitable work load, and graduate student unity. TAOC remains in the planning stages and urges graduate students to attend today's meeting at 4:30 in the Campus Center room 168.

Schlitz-A-Rama slated for Saturday

Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity will present its 4th Annual Beer Fest Saturday. People from the Five College area are invited to attend.

Activities will get underway at noon and end at 1 at the house. "If the success of past years continue, we can expect an estimated crowd of over 5,000 people," said organizer Harry Sherman.

Featured will be Fate playing in the afternoon and Live Lobster late at night. Rounding out the music during the day will be a D.J. from New York providing good Discotheque music.

The day will be very satisfying, with Joseph Schlitz Brewing Company serving UMass its favorite beverage. For those who enjoy a hamburg or a hot dog, food will be served throughout the day.

There will be many prizes given away and trivia contests to enter. You can guess the weight of a live Schlitz Malt Liquor Bull, who will make his long-awaited reappearance.

Schlitz-a-rama signifies something else. Proceeds from the Royalty Queen Contest, and other activities go to Muscular Dystrophy. The crowning of the Royalty Queen is expected to take place sometime during the evening. The fact that the party has a philanthropic purpose is often lost in all the partying, but it is a major concern for the members of Phi Sig.

The rain date is scheduled for Sunday. For more information call 5-0174 or 256-6863.

Special exhibit at Mead Gallery

The Mead Art Gallery at Amherst College will present a special loan exhibition of French military life in the latter part of the 19th century entitled, "War a la Mode: French Military Pictures of the Belle Epoque," tomorrow through May 28.

The paintings and drawings are part of the Forbes Magazine Collection and have been specially assembled by Christopher Forbes. They are being exhibited for the first time at the New York Cultural Center and at Amherst College. The collection includes works by Meissonier, Detaille, de Neuville, and Berne-Bellecour. Of special interest is a large watercolor version of Meissonier's famous "Battle of the Freidland," done as an enlargement of the smaller oil painting of the same subject now in the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 12 noon to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Springfield YMCA seeks Outreach workers for summer

According to the 1970 census of the Springfield population in the North End Brightwood Community of Springfield, there are 632 14-18 year olds of which 50 per cent were of Puerto Rican birth. Presently no social agency is working with teenagers in the North End community other than the YMCA. Since then there has been a significant increase in the abuse of alcohol and drugs.

What can a UMass and Five College student do to help?

The Center for Experiential Education can place you in a pre-professional position as YMCA Teenage Outreach Worker for the Metropolitan Springfield YMCA. You can earn a full year of academic credit and a small living allowance.

If you are seeking an unselfish learning experience, act immediately. The internship program begins in June 1975.

Pre-professional positions are open to UMass students and students of the Five College Consortium. Minority students are urged to apply.

The Center urges faculty members to refer students to the Center.

For more information call Larry Scott at 545-1381 or come to the office between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. The Center is located at 315 Arnold House, UMass-Amherst.

'Sweetpie' arraigned for shoplifting

By BRUCE FREDERICK
Staff Reporter

Paul A. Wiener, better know as "Sweetpie" to the UMass community, was apprehended Tuesday shoplifting in the University Store.

He was taken into custody by UMass police at 11:45 a.m. and was arraigned later in Hampshire County District Court. After being taken into custody, UMass police also issued a "trespass" on him. A trespass is issued when a person who has no official affiliation with the University gets involved in a situation requiring police involvement. Thereafter, that person may not come on campus unless on official business.

Sweetpie was scheduled to perform at the Campus Center this Friday, Saturday and Sunday, but at this point, it appears that his performances will be cancelled. Campus Center Director John Corker was unavailable for comment.

Sweet Pie was trespassed once before for sunbathing nude in the Orchard Hill area.

Also on Tuesday, a movie projector was reported stolen from Boyden Gym. The room had been left unlocked, and the value of the projector was placed at $1,000. UMass police presently have no suspects in the larceny.

New theatre guild premieres this week

The Amherst Players Guild, a new community theatere will have its first production at the Regional Junior High School in Amherst on May 1, 2 and 3 at 8 p.m. The three one-act plays, all comedies about family life, range from the dark humor of Edward Albee to the one liners that Bologna and Taylor made famous in "Lovers and Other Strangers".

"The American Dream" attacks the suppressiveness of the American middle class family, directed both at the old and young.

"Bea, Frank, Ritchie and Joan" by Bologna and Taylor, humorously portrays an inarticulate Mom and Pop trying to ward off a divorce in the family.

"I'm Herbert" by Robert Anderson shows that the "memory of the flesh remains even when the names of marriage partners are long forgotten."

All tickets are $2.00 and are available at Augies in Amherst, Daniels clothing store in Northampton and at the Box Office. Ticket information can also be obtained by calling 253-5204.

Project Self to sponsor workshops for women, about women this summer

Project Self is a series of workshops, by for and about women, sponsored by Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. This Summer 30 eight week workshops and three Days and Weekends are being offered to area women.

Project Self and Days and Weekend workshops are designed to serve as alternative educational experiences for women who simply want to explore some skills and experiences with other women. The workshop atmosphere is supportive and friendly and the structure is loose. Project Self rests firmly on the assumption that the more we learn and share with other women, the more we know about ourselves as women, about our past and present, and the more we encourage one another to stretch into the future, the stronger human beings we will be. And our strengths can work to change our world toward one based on equality, openness to differences, and support of all kinds of individual needs and gifts.

The workshops to be offered this Summer include a wide spectrum on exploring skills for living, cultural identity for women, and personal and political identity. Some of the workshops which explore skills for living are: Bicycle Repairs, Demystifying Our Cars and Carpentry.

In addition to the series of eight week workshops, Everywoman's Center is offering two weekend workshops and one day workshop. These are: Life Planning and Creative Outdoor Living Weekends and Body Work and Movement Day. The cost of these specific workshops vary and they are scheduled throughout the summer.

All eight week workshops are twenty-five dollars and a limited number of scholarships are available. Workshops begin the week of June 23rd and end the week of August 11th. Registration is on a mail-in basis from May 19 through June 13. For more information call or drop by Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall on campus, or call 5-0883 and we will mail you a brochure of comqlete listing of summer workshops.

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, MAY 1 — Born today, you possess a tremendous amount of energy and a great deal of determination and ambition. These are traits which, in combination, make it all but a foregone conclusion that success will not be denied you. On the other hand, they are also traits which may make it extremely difficult for you to wait, to take your time, to put in the period of apprenticeship necessary to really learn the fine points of your chosen business or profession. Your climb to success will in the long run be swifter if you start at the bottom and work up!

You have a fanciful imagination and a delightfully explosive sense of humor. When you feel laughter within, there is nothing that can keep you from expressing that laughter with your voice, your eyes, your general demeanor. By the same token, when you experience inner sadness, you have a compulsion to let that sadness be known to the outside world through tears, sobs and a general downcast attitude. Such emotionalism protects you from many of the pitfalls of your own ambition.

You are an idea-man, a promoter. You know how to plan, how to direct others in carrying out your plans. You are a trouble-spotter, able to see where difficulties will arise well before they do, able to foretell the future through the judicious application to present situations and circumstances of knowledge gained through both intellectual and emotional responses.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Friday, May 2

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take your own self-interest into deepest consideration when making decisions today. Don't play the martyr unless you're really willing to lose.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Cooperate with others on the employment scene and you should be able to see present projects of long-standing through to successful completion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Success comes today for the Cancer with a knack for buying and selling. Make an effort to balance your own personal budget by day's end.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You can gain much by talking another into sharing his experiences with you. There is little to gain by insisting on going it alone in the afternoon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Keep dealings on a friendship basis, even though they may have a business origin. This is no time to overlook personal obligations to others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You should have time for pleasure during evening hours. Until then, keep nose to the grindstone and shoulder to the wheel!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Keep dealings with others on the light side. Though working toward serious goals, you will find that smiles gain you more than tensions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you are wise, you will keep from straying too far from the home front today. Keep your involvements well within the limits of your patience.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You may need to give some quick and serious attention to personal relationships on the employment scene. Jealousy among co-workers causes tension.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You can gain as much through the exertion of your personality upon present difficulties as you can through the application of knowledge.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you can charm another into doing your budding, so much the better. Otherwise, you may find that you have many promises to keep.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — It is the early bird that catches the worm this morning. Turn your attention as soon in the day as possible to achieving your goal.

JV batsmen soar; improve record to 12-1

By TONY CHAVES

Coach Jeff McKay was not ready to compare his JV team to the 1927 Yankees, but yesterday the Minutemen played like the old time Yanks as they took a double-header from A.I.C.

The first game (a 2-1 squeaker) was the continuation of a one-all, eleven inning tie that the two teams were unable to complete a week ago. The second game was a total rout as the JV's pounded out ten runs to A.I.C.'s two.

A.I.C. looked like it would win the game when UMass' right fielder Tom Shilale lost a fly ball in the sun for a triple with only one out. Chris Kirby, who started the game, was able to pitch out of the jam, though, with some fine defensive plays by his catcher, Mike MacLoughlin. In the bottom of the twelfth, UMass quickly put together a triple by Shilale and a single by Kevin Finucane to win it.

In the second game, Kirby starting again looked like Sandy Koufax while fanning six batters before running out of juice in the fourth. He was well ahead though as his mates were busy tallying two home runs, two triples, and two doubles. Bill Hendy led the team offensively with three hits in four times up.

Charlie Johnson, the Minutemen's gagster, had his moment too. After striking out in the first, he was complaining about his inability to hit the A.I.C. pitcher. On his next at bat, of course, he hit a home run to deep center field.

By the end of the game, the Minutemen were hitting the ball so hard that Tom Nigro was walking around exhibiting a ball that felt like a sponge and the A.I.C. centerfielder was playing so deep that the fans were looking for him with binoculars.

After the game, McKay had only one comment, "We're just great, that's all!"

The JV record is now 12 and 1.

Stickwomen romp, 10-2

By RON ARENA

The women's lacrosse club, in their most impressive display of the season yesterday, routed Smith College in a 10-2 upset at Smith.

The Smith clan, which had been regarded as the toughest foe on the Minutewomen schedule, was completely overwhelmed by UMass, and trailed at halftime 6-1. Propelled by Elaine Senosk's four goals, the offense ruled Smith's defense to the point where the visitors adopted the role of spectators. "Some of our plays were so pretty that the defense just stood around and watched us. We were passing really well", claimed player-coach Lori Nazar.

In support of Senosk's output, Evie Sneeden, who seems to score in every game, added two goals. Another high-scorer, Sally Boy chipped in with a tally, as did Judy Kennedy and Laurie Bruce. Goaltender Mary Murray also enjoyed a fine game for UMass.

Last Saturday, the women were invited to Stoneleigh for a game, as it was Parent's day at the host school. If Stoneleigh had visions of impressing their parents, they chose the wrong sport, as the Minutewomen earned an 8-0 shutout.

Star of the game honors went to goalie Karen James. Noted Nazar, "Once our goalies get confident, they have the skill to stop everything. After they let up a goal, they tend to get nervous."

James offered the best solution to that theory by never letting up that first goal.

Tomorrow, in a continuation of their busy schedule, UMass hosts Springfield College. The B-team plays a 3:00 p.m. contest, with the A-game immediately following at 4:00.

Perry five-hits Sox

BOSTON [UPI] — Boog Powell drove in three runs and Gaylord Perry tossed a five-hitter Wednesday night to lift the Cleveland Indians to an 8-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Powell singled home a run in the third and rapped his fourth homer of the season into the centerfield bleachers with George Hendrick aboard in the fifth as Cleveland took a 7-0 lead. Hendrick had three hits and two runs batted in on the evening.

Perry, now 14-1 lifetime against Boston, struck out eight to move into 13th place on the all-time list with 2,337. He now is 4-2 on the year.

The Indians scored two unearned runs in the first inning off Luis Tiant. Lead-off batter John Lowenstein reached on an error, Frank Duffy singled and Lowenstein scored on Hendrick's roller in front of the plate. Charlie Spikes singled to score Duffy.

Cleveland built the lead to 5-0 with three more runs in the third and Powell sealed the game with his 400-foot drive two innings later. Boston's only run came in the fifth on a Dwight Evans single after a hit by Doug Griffin and a walk to Bernie Carbo. Cleveland added a run in the eighth.

In other baseball action, the Chicago Cubs put an end to the New York Mets winning ways.

Bill Madlock's two-run homer and Manny Trillo's two-run double highlighted a five-run first inning to spark a 7-4 triumph over the Mets, ending a seven-game New York winning streak.

The win, fifth in the last six games for the Cubs, stopped the Mets string that equalled a previous Chicago streak that was the longest in the majors this season.

All of Chicago's runs came off Jon Matlack, losing for the second time in four decisions.

Geraghty - jumping's his game

By MIKE BERGER

For a long and triple jumper, the indoor track facilities here at UMass are comparable to the number of Red Sox pennants — few or none. So outdoor track is where guys like senior tri-captain Mike Geraghty get to show their wares. And given the chance, Mike is certainly proving that given proper facilities, he is one of New England's top triple and long jumpers.

What is most impressive about Geraghty is his rate of improvement in each of his 4 years here. Perhaps one of the reasons he was chosen tri-captain is his great attitude toward working hard and improving in his event despite nagging knee injuries and lack of proper facilities in the winter.

Geraghty came from Hingham High School with an average of 20 feet in the long jump and a high of 44-2 in the triple jump. Those efforts were good enough for second place in Class B of the state high school championships.

In indoor track, Geraghty did not have the proper facilities to train adequately. Unlike several Yankee Conference schools such as UConn, Maine, and New Hampshire, UMass does not have an indoor track facility or in Geraghty's case, jumping pits. During the winter, the senior jumper can only work on building up his leg strength by working out with weights and running up flights of stairs. According to Geraghty, "The only time I got to really practice the total event (spring and takeoff) is in a meet."

Perhaps the following quote reflects Mike's desire to improve, which has made him one of the steadiest point getters on the indoor and outdoor teams. "We can't relax and say we have the Yankee Conference sewed up, because the competition gets tougher and tougher as the season gets along. That's why we have to work just as hard in the end as we do in the beginning."

It's do or die; Habs down 2-0

MONTREAL [UPI] — It's do or virtually die for the Montreal Canadiens Thursday night in the third game of their Stanley Cup semifinal series against the Buffalo Sabres.

The Canadiens returned home Tuesday night following their 4-2 loss to the Sabres, leaving them down 2-0 in the best-of-seven series.

"Tomorrow's it," said Montreal Coach Scotty Bowman after an hour-long practice Wednesday.

Junior varsity lacrosse team brushes Brown

"It has to be the biggest win since I've been here." —Coach Russ Kidd.

By BILL EDELSTEIN

The UMass junior varsity lacrosse team edged Brown, 11-10, yesterday, at Brown, behind Wally "Putter" Goodwin's four goals and the stellar netminding of Jim Kenney.

Late in the third quarter, with the tally knotted at seven, Larry Heaton flung one in for the mini-gorillas (chimps) to finish off a fast break. The marker put UMass ahead to stay and ended third period scoring. The two teams then netted three goals apiece in the fourth stanza to account for the final score.

The chimps had stormed off to a 7-1 halftime advantage, but Brown opened the third quarter with some fire of its own, in the form of six straight goals to produce the 7-7 tie.

"We came out smoking in the first half," said coach Kidd, but they (Brown) got every face-off in the third period and just kep pumping them in."

It was obviously time for a change of face-off folks, since the people on the field were continually dropping their draws (sorry about that lacrosse fans) and Kidd, the head chimp, spotted this immediately.

"I put Pat Grant, face-off specialist, and he won five key draws in a row." One of those was culminated by Heaton's fast break, Moe Mentum swinger.

Goodwin added three assists to his four goals in his first game at the attack position and made coach Kidd into an unequivocal genius with his performance.

Paul "Pit" Martin garnered three tallies and an assist, while Heaton's two goals and one help-out, Mike Gongus' couple of markers rounded out the UMass scoring. Les Wade contributed three assists and coach Kidd deemed him responsible for many a fast break, chimp goal.

CHIMP CHATTER — The Minutemen were assessed nine personal fouls to Brown's three...coincidentally Brown was the home team..."Our man-down defense played extremely well," lauded the UMass JV mentor...goaltender, Kenney regained his senses after the third quarter shell-shocking and once again became tougher than a hippotamus in heat to help keep the chimps ahead the rest of the way...the JV's next contest is away, against Mount Herman on Friday..."I don't expect much opposition from them," predicted Kidd...The game with Amherst on Tuesday, May 6, has been rescheduled for Thursday, May 8...The chimps record is now 4-1.

Gene Hardiman has one of his shots deflected by a defender. Hardiman and the Gorillas hope to be as successful against Brown next week as the JV stickers were yesterday. They JV's nipped Brown 11-10.

Owls stop softballers

By GREG LEVINS

The UMass varsity softball team after leading 4-0 for the first three and a half innings, dropped a disappointing 9-4 decision to the Southern Connecticut State College.

The Minutewomen rallied in the third inning sending nine players to the plate and scoring all four of their runs. Carolyn Shea started things rolling by reaching second base on a throwing error. After Nancy Anderson sacrificed her along to third, Cheryl Meliones drilled a single to left field for the initial run. Sandy Lunt was next in line and reached first on an error with Meliones stopping at second. After a force out Lu Ann Fletcher clouted a mammoth three run homer to deep left field. Karen Dolphin kept things alive with a single to center, but following a walk to co-captain Chris Basile, Nancy Barry filed out retiring the side.

Southern Conneticut began their comeback in the fourth inning when they tallied three runs. Carolyn Shea preserved the lead by gunning down the tying run at the plate with a bullet from right field.

Control problems began to plague UMass hurler, Fletcher in the fifth inning. After walking the bases full, Fletcher whiffed Mary Wasi and it seemed she was back in the groove. But former UMass basketball and softball star Jenny Edminster rapped a single to drive in the tying run. Fletcher worked her way out of the jam by getting the next to batters to ground out.

In the sixth, Southern put four more runs across to send the game out of reach. With runners on second and third and one out the Owls sent a pinch hitter up to bat for their pitcher. She responded by lashing a sizzling grounder that went right through shortstop Sandy Lunt for two runs. Fletcher walked the next two batters to load the bases for Edminster. Once again she hurt her former teammates by singling home two more runs. Fletcher got the next two batters on strikes to end the inning.

O'Brien named NBA boss

NEW YORK [UPI] — Lawrence F. O'Brien, Post Master General under Lyndon B. Johnson, was officially confirmed today as commissioner of the National Basketball Association.

The 57-year-old politician and author, who has no background in basketball except as self-confessed fan of the Boston Celtics, will succeed outgoing President Walter Kennedy June 1. The appointment of O'Brien culminates a two-year search by the NBA Board of Governors to find Kennedy's successor.

Although terms of the contract were not announced, it was speculated that O'Brien would be paid $150,000 a year for a three-year term.

O'Brien is only the third person to head the NBA. Maurice Podoloff served as commissioner from 1946 to 1963, at which time he was replaced by Kennedy.

Mittmen bumble away ballgame, 8-3

By BILL DOYLE

Second-guessers had a field day as Springfield College used three home runs to drub the UMass varsity batsmen, 8-3, yesterday at Earl Lorden Field.

The most questionable play came in Springfield's half of the third inning, when the visitors went ahead to stay. UMass starter and loser, Craig Allegrezza, gave up a single, walk and double to tie the score and put Springfield runners on second and third with one out.

With Steve Matthew up, and first base open, coach Dick Bergquist disdained the intentional walk and allowed Allegrezza to pitch to Springfield's top hitter despite the fact that Matthew was a lefty batter and a .239 right handed hitter was due next. Matthew then proceeded to hit the first pitch over the fence in right-center for a three run homer to send Springfield on to victory. Bergquist used this strategy even though he had ordered an intentional walk (o Phil Elhage) with first base open the previous inning.

"You can second guess me," said the UMass mentor, "but I didn't have Matthew walked because he hasn't hit us in the past and I don't usually order many intentional walks. I had Elhage walked because he usually hits us pretty good."

Another play that had fans shaking their heads was a first inning home run hit by Springfield's Vaughn Smith on an 0-2 pitch.

"Craig tried to throw the pitch high and tight but he got it over the plate and Smith creamed it," Bergquist explained. "No excuses for those hits on 0-2 pitches. They also got a single and a double with two strikes and no balls on them."

At least one other play gave the Monday Morning Quarterbacks of baseball a chance to second-guess UMass. With the score 7-2 in the bottom of the sixth, the Minutemen had runners on first and third with one out. Jerry Mondalto hit a grounder to third which resulted in a force at second base, but Mike Koperniak, the runner at third, cost UMass a tally when he broke late for the plate. Koperniak managed to scramble back to third, just beating the throw from the catcher, but he dislocated the little finger on his right hand and was forced to leave the game. His replacement, Joe Marzilli, was left stranded at third when Allegrezza struck out.

Coach Bergquist reluctantly admitted that Koperniak should have scored. "They were going for the double-play and the correct play would have been to break for the plate as soon as the ball was hit," the coach said. Koperniak could miss Saturday's double header because of the injury.

Down one to nothing because of Smith's home run, UMass came back in its half of the first inning with two runs to take the lead. Al Lopriore led off with a screeching triple over the center fielder's head and scored on a sacrifice fly by Koperniak. John Seed then singled up the middle, went to second on a grounder, and scored on Allegrezza's single through the shortstop hole.

By giving up two runs in the first, Springfield starter George Ross doubled the amount of earned runs that he had allowed for the entire season. In 32 previous innings, he had an ERA of 0.56, the third highest in the nation.

After Allegrezza's run scoring single, Ross set down the 13 of the next 14 batters. He allowed a walk to Jim Cullen during that stretch but Cullen was out stealing.

UMass scored its final fun in the sixth when Steve Wright hit a high drive over the leftfield wall.

John McManus relieved Allegrezza at the start of the fourth inning and set down Springfield on only one earned run during his five inning stint. He also gave up an unearned run in the fourth when Jim Cullen fielded a two out grounder, stumbled trying to tag second, and received an error when his throw to second was dropped by Koperniak's bare hand, allowing a run to score from second base.

Springfield scores its final run on Kevin Keith's mammoth home run to right off reliever Rich Kelly.

CHANGE-UPS: Koperniak had a ball explode at his feet for his ninth error of the season ... Cullen's miscue was his tenth ... Coming into yesterday's game, Springfield had a team batting average of .217 with five homers ... the Chiefs hit three homers off UMass pitching ... Matthew's home run was only the second of his college career and he has hit both off Allegrezza at Earl Lorden Field ... Ross is now 5-0 and Allegrezza is 3-3 ... Springfield's record improves to 13-2 while UMass' drops to 7-13.

Hitting and pitching are the fundamentals of baseball. Both of these facets of the grand old game escaped the UMass baseball squad yesterday, however, as the Minutemen dropped one game (8-3) and a few balls on their way to an error laden loss to Springfield College.

Golf squad returns to Stow; seeks Mass state title

By RON ARENA

Confidence is one of those words commonly associated with sports, yet no one can accurately define the concept behind it. In conjunction with momentum (and what is momentum?), confidence supposedly reacts as the major catalyst in a winning team. Philosophers spend lightyears in offering theories of the word, and one can easily picture Johnny Carson, turban and all, stating "confidence is ...".

I offer no Aristotelian definitions of confidence, but substitute an example instead. Are you ready? Confidence is "expecting to win when you don't even know who your opponents will be." (Carson never would have thought of that one.)

But the UMass golf team finds itself in that predictament today in the Mass State Tournament at Stow C.C. Seventeen teams will participate in the affair, and if the friendly confines of Stow (remember the YanCons?) prove as hospitable as last week, the Minutemen may very well capture the tourney. (No, if they win, it won't count as sixteen victories in the win column.)

The last time the best four scores were used for UMass was last fall in the New Englands. UMass romped by moré than 20 strokes with a 303 score. If the best four were added in last Friday's YanCons, the linksters would have had a 301.

In this area, 999 times out of 1000 (add another nine if you want), a 301 will win. Coach Gaudette realistically knows that "it'll be difficult to duplicate that score." But he is hoping for a 310, which should probably earn them the victory. One advantage, of course, is that UMass has played the course just last week.

Hayes, Chenier deadly as Bullets maul Celtics

LANDOVER, Md. [UPI] — Elvin Hayes and Phil Chenier whipsawed the defending champion Boston Celtics with a combined total of 54 points Wednesday night to carry the Washington Bullets to a 117-92 victory and a 2-0 edge in their NBC playoff series.

The Bullets took an 11-point lead in the first quarter of the second game of the best-of-seven series for the Eastern Conference Championship and never let the Celtics get back in the contest as Hayes wound up with 29 points and Chenier with 25 before fouling out.

When Chenier encountered foul trouble midway in the third period, Nick Weatherspoon came off the bench to take up the scoring slack and keep the Bullets comfortably in front. The second-year Washington player finished with 18 points, 10 of them in the last quarter.

Don Nelson was high for Boston with 23.

Before a sellout hometown crowd of 19,059, the Bullets took command late in the opening period as Chenier produced 12 points to boost them to a 31-20 lead.

Hayes sanks a pair of free throws and got a layup after a steal in the final seconds of the period to key an eight-point Bullets' surge that gave them their big advantage.

Hayes, matched against the Celtics' Dave Cowens, began clicking in the second quarter as Boston, the defending NBA champion, tried to catch up.

Just before the half, Boston's John Havlicek fouled Chenier and was called for a technical foul. Chenier converted all three free throws to propel Washington to a 60-44 advantage at intermission. At that point, the Celtics had shot only 34 per cent from the field.

Cruising with the UMPD

by Bruce Frederick and Roberta Martone

(INTRO)

The UMass Department of Public Safety runs a program known as the Ride-A-Long through which interested parties can ride in a cruiser for a shift, and see police work first hand. Collegian reporters Roberta Martone and Bruce Frederick took advantage of this program and rode the 3-11 shift on April 21 and 24, respectively. The following is an account of those rides, plus observations made during their regular assignment as Collegian Police reporters. On neither night did anything exceptionally "exciting" happen, but this is important in itself, since so much of police work is routine and dull.

5-4-75 — Frederick

The shift starts at three in the afternoon. The cops going off duty mingle with those coming on, and gradually the 3 to 11 people head downstairs to roll call. No Adam-12 spit and polish here. The room looks like a classroom; was a classroom before Dickinson Hall became H.Q. Three cops and three I.P.M.'s (Men in green) slumped casually in lecture hall desks. Looks like a discussion group in uniform. At a typical instructor's desk sits Sergeant Richard Grader. He actually looks more like a professor than a cop. (Sorry, Dick, but ...)

Assignments are given — Ray Marrero, District 1 (Southwest); Eliot Kabachnick, a UMass grad of '74 gets District 2 (South of N. Pleasant); Jon Schmitter gets a Collegian reporter and District 3 (North of N. Pleasant). Patrolwoman Deb Engle is on the desk this shift. Announcements are read, and after a few minutes of joking and talking, everyone heads for their cruisers.

Schmitter checks the lights, siren and mileage, and we head off for District 3. The first hour or so is spent checking out the assigned area; checking cars in parking lots, making mental notes of the embryonic stages of dorm parties, and keeping an eye on gatherings that may be sources of trouble later. Past Grayson once, twice. "At night, it can be a good idea to go through an area once, and then again immediately afterward with the lights out," says Schmitter. "Sometimes you'll get a surprise."

Around 4 p.m., convinced that his district is secure, Schmitter begins to concentrate on rush hour traffic. UMass cruisers are not strictly delegated to their districts, and Jon takes up a stationary position on Mass. Ave. in front of Whitmore .. "I like this spot because it offers high visibility. It slows people down and it keeps pedestrians from getting creamed." It's true. A ped merely looks at a crosswalk, with a cruiser sitting there, and traffic screeches to a halt.

After a while, we head over to the campus pond to watch the cement canoe. While there, a woman runs up to the cruiser to ask if her car is going to be towed, and Jon tells her it isn't. Inquiries about towing come up several times during the night, and Schmitter later said, "I don't particularly like to tow cars. I mean, I see cars in a fire lane or in front of a hydrant, and I'll tow them in a second. But general towing ... Well, the word comes down from upstairs that it's supposed to be one of our priorities, so it becomes one of my priorities."

A call comes over the radio to investigate a larceny from a car behind Van Meter, and about ten minutes is spent examining the car and taking down the report from the owner. This is immediately followed by a money transport from Franklin Munchies to a bank downtown. While standing in Munchies, waiting for the money bag, some funny things are noticeable. First of all, a cop gets stared at a lot. And a person of no obvious identity standing next to a cop gets stared at a lot. And a cop does a lot of staring himself. Captain Joyce of UMPD has mentioned a couple of times that even out of uniform, a cop can be picked out of a crowd because he tends to gravitate towards places that allow him good peripheral vision, and his eyes are constantly scanning the surroundings. I tested this theory, and observed Schmitter standing n3ar a corner with his back against the wall. His visor is pulled low, creating a dark shadow above his nose punctuated only by eyes that are almost abnormally wide open, and moving constantly. That police hat is a strange thing in itself. It's the first time that Schmitter has worn it today, and it changes his appearance. Jon is a tall man in his thirties, and up until now he hasn't looked much different from any other tall guy in his thirties. But when that cap goes on, he becomes a cop, with all the connotations inherent in that word — positive and negative, true and mythical. When a cop puts on his hat, he seems to lose one identity and gain another. But that's only in appearance. It can be a problem if it changes the personality under the cap, too. I've never seen that happen to a UMass cop. If it did, he probably wouldn't stay a UMass cop for very long.

6:00 p.m. — Clear from the bank, and heading in to the station for dinner. In front of Pierpont, a call comes for an intrusion alarm at the Fine Arts Center. The FAC is a pain in the, uh, neck. Twenty-seven outer doors that never all seem to get locked, and automatic alarms that are constantly being tripped accidentally. But this is an alarm that hasn't been tripped before, so Jon uses the blue lights and speeds to the scene. Doing 80 down University Drive, Schmitter somehow manages to fit by a Torino, a bus, and a curb that a Vaseline-coated VW would have had trouble negotiating. We take the corner and defy Newtonian inertia theory simultaneously. ("I raced sports cars for a couple of years," he mentions later. "That's nice," I reply.) The alarm turns out to be another false one.

Before we get back to dinner, another call comes through for a money transport; this time from Hampden Munchies.

A huge amount of UMass cruiser time is spent on these transports and other "service calls" — transporting students to and from the infirmary, or transporting drunks to their dorms if they can't crawl from the Bluewall on their own.

We finally get back to the station and boxes of fried chicken. Still on call, though. Lots of nights the cops don't eat.

We eat with Deb and Ray. The dinner conversation pretty much centers on syphilis, Marcus Welby, and bald people who grow their eyebrows over their heads. And combinations thereof.

Back on the road at 7:45 and heading for gas. The new UMass cruisers use unleaded gas, and some shifts sometimes have to go as far as Belchertown to find an open station that's got it. Tonight we only go as far as Colonial Village.

Returning to Campus, Jon checks out his district again. Sylvan looks like it might cause some trouble later, but it never does.

After finishing the district, we sit stationary again, this time in front of Hamlin House. A car with a headlight out goes by.

"I'd stop him if he had another light out, but with just one, I'll give him the benefit of the doubt and assume it just went."

A junky looking sports car goes by; the sticker is taped to the windshield and doesn't look quite right. Jon watches it very closely. "Now that looks a little leaky." The lights turn green and the car bangs a right on Eastman lane and starts to pour on the speed. "I think I'll check him out," says Schmitter as he pulls out. At first it looks like the guy might lead us on a chase, but he soon pulls into Sylvan and stops.

The usual 'license and registration please', then Jon pulls the sticker, and examines it closely with a flashlight. It turns out to be

NICK PALERMO
An Exhibition of Prints and Drawings
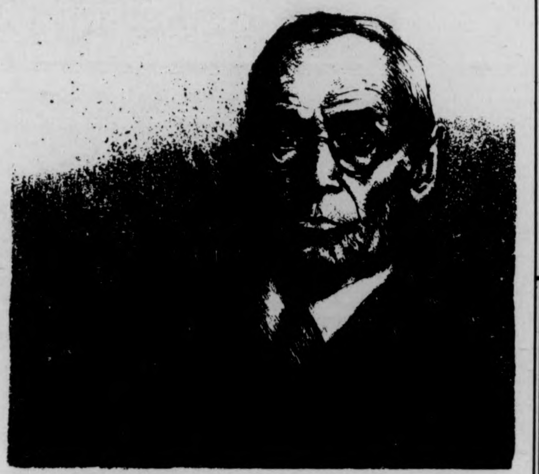
Student Union Gallery
April 27-30

by Kit Browne



This past week a series of fine works making up Nick Palermo's BFA show has been on display. The prints are etchings, lines cut into a metal plate using acid, then rubbed full of ink and printed.

The various processes are much more complicated than that, and Nick has shown his skill and taste in making use of their versatility. A portrait of the German Expressionist artist, Kathe Kollwitz, shows a variety of textures. There is the pattern of a bit of lace in the lower left, strangely ironic when one thinks of the stark agony Kollwitz can portray in her own prints. One can also pick out the textures of burlap, netting, finer cloth...To achieve these affects, the piece of cloth or other material is actually used on the plate, and it is all too easy to leave these textures not unified into the image. That is not a problem here — it is worth studying such work up close.

Standing back, Nick's drawing skill is obvious. His style is that of a slow defining of the figure by many lines, creating a softness of edge and a richness of tone in the modeling. A series of pencil-drawn heads illustrates this process of building up the image from bare outline to solid form.

One of the finest pieces, in my opinion, is "After the Rain", a large interior scene. The room itself is quite dark, delightfully subtle, especially the light flow of the curtains. The strong light on the model is Rembrandtesque in its contrast.

The last work, "Night Tree", is somewhat beyond the rest of the show. There is a figure in it, hard to locate immediately. Somehow this print gives the impression of being not quite defined. It is a new problem, not yet resolved, leading Nick, and those who see his work, from this into the exhibitions of the future.

Dancing to the Duke

by Susan Doskocil

The Alvin Ailey City Center Dance Theater, located at 131 West 55th Street, New York, New York has been premiering 2 new of 13 new ballets to Duke Ellington's music (as part of "An Ellington Celebration" in the makes for 1976) for almost 3 weeks now.

One of them is "Night Creature" the music for which Ellington was commissioned to write for Symphony on the Air in 1955. Divided into 3 movements, it should become a well-used part of their repertory. The other I'm anxious to see, entitled "The Mooche".

Portrait of Billie", choreographed by John Butler, was a beautiful tribute to that incredible woman artist. Recordings of Ms. Holiday's own voice provided the background, in "Miss Brown To You", "Gee Baby, Ain't I Good To You", "What A Little Moonlight Can Do" and "No More" for this dynamic and dramatic duet danced by Sara Yarborough and Ulysses Dove.

"Feast of Ashes" choreographed by Mr. Ailey to music by Carlos Surinach and inspired by Federico Garcia Lorca's "The House of Bernarda Alba" brought forth the powerful forbidding Judith Jamison in the title role as the unquestionably all-dominating God of her five daughters. Tina Yuan as Adela, the youngest one, and Clive Thomson as Pepe El Romano, the eligible young bachelor of the village, were the star-crossed lovers, fated to drastic deaths due to Pepe's previous engagement to Angustivas, Adela's oldest sister, danced by Donna Wood.

Ms. Jamison, whenever on stage, commanded and flatteringly filled all of it. With long tapering and bewitching arms, fingers, legs and toes, not to mention the carriage of some proud, fierce and terribly intimidating superhuman, she asserted her unquestionable reign by lashing out with monumental kicks, extensions, gigantic leaps and mile-long reaches. She figuratively topped it all off with scowls calculated to freeze and defy the combined governmental rulers of the United States and the Soviet Union combined.

In that same piece, Ms. Juan's performance lacked not a thing, in fact so capably did she handle the theatrical aspects of her role that, seeing her later, I almost didn't recognize her. She's so flexible, yet completely in control of her faculties at every moment, that to see her languidly stretch her body, then snap back into a high energy level run or a series of concerned animal movements with all the resilience, and fresh bounce of a new rubber band leaves the mouth dryer than D.C. turkey.

The highlight of the evening, however, was "Revelations" which brought the audience bounding to its feet for wild applause, enthusiastic shouts of "Bravo!" and "Encore!" and at least 7 curtain calls.

Consisting of ten beautifully sung spirituals that melted together to form the 3 parts — "Pilgrims of Sorrow", "Take Me To The Water" and "Move, Members, Move" — it was a product of Alvin Ailey's choreographic magic.

Ailey picks up on the ecclesiastical exuberance of the early North American south. Then, he succeeds in slyly trapping the whole audiences excitement and interest in following the moods with their undivided attention. For the weary who have spent most of their energy already in the overwhelmingly energeticness of the evening's vivid colors, he triples the tired remains of their vigor and coaches it to a feverish pitch that provides the loudest clapping.

The best part of "Pilgrim of Sorrow" was Sara Yarborough and Clive Thompson dancing to "Fix Me Jesus". On one of his bent knees, she executed a 360 degree range of near-ceiling extensions. Just as effortlessly, she later performed a straight-to-the-ceiling extension while bending over into a backend where her head nearly touched the floor...The murmurs and soft applause attested to the audiences' unbelieving amazement.

"Take Me To The Water", comprised of "Processional", "Wading in the Water" and "I Want to be Ready" was performed in bouncing, floaty-white by males and females. To add to the beautiful cool floatiness, each dancer carried a banner, pom-pom or parasol. The inimitable Jamison was now vivacious and flirty, warmly winning the wounded, cowering hearts of those whom she'd struck terror into in the previous dance.

"Move, Members, Move" had the audience clapping and wishing they were participating in the revivalist meeting being emotionally re-enacted before their eyes, from the first through fourth and last song of the piece. The women, all dressed in full length heavy, sassy, yellow and gold brocade gowns, topped by smashing broad brimmed and beribboned hats, stole the dance from their partners. And, of course Ms. Jamison stole the show from the other women-with her super-type floor stomping (which everyone else on stage stopped to watch) and her unquenchably zealous if somewhat hammy gestures to be savored.

At last, a terrific dance company that's worth every cent and more of the tickets! "Mr. Ailey, I remove my hat..."

PHYSICAL Criticism

To The Editor:

After reading Ross Nerenberg's review of the new Led Zeppelin lp, Physical Graffiti, I must question his criteria for criticizing music. He seems to judge albums by their success, rather than musical content. And Led Zeppelin has been thought to be heavy on record sales, yet light on talent and innovation.

He blithely says, "So why argue with success? They have no reason to change, no new hills to climb". He doesn't seem to realize that this kind of reasoning is killing so many artists. Once they hit the height of popularity, they lose the urge to innovate and experiment, and they come out with endless "formula" albums with guaranteed sales. Indeed, the most innovative idea on Physical Graffiti is that you get four sides of Led Zeppelin raunch instead of two.

So if Ross wants to seriously criticize music, he should focus on the points that should be criticized — the creative drive of the group, the willingness to try to put out something better — instead of something as misleading and irrelavent as record sales. After all, Ross, John Denver and The Osmonds sell a good share of records too, don't they?

Abortion:

Death by convenience?

as reported by Steve Masse

Part One In A Three Part Series ...... "...that the results of the EFA experimentation shall draw the answer to the question of Humanity, and to the Controversy over Abortion and Women's Rights. This shall be undertaken without persuasion of previous moral or scientific belief. The results shall with fairness serve as evidence in the influence of future legislation..."

—Policy of Fair Play
EFA Constitution 1973

Do unwanted pregnancies and offspring pose a burden to our society? Most of our conscientious population feel that the legislation of Abortion on demand was a necessary legal step in preserving the lives and well-being of many thousands of people.

There is still a great controversy among various religious, ethical, and humanitarian factions over the subject of Abortion. Whereas the Supreme Court has failed to quell the uproar any further than the Dred Scott case did, concerning Slavery in America; the Euthanasia Foundation of America has seen fit to call upon science to intervene in the interest of deciding the issue once and for all.

Monies for research have been liberally provided by the Feminist Liberation Front. Funds have been entrusted to the Euthanasia Foundation of America, an independent judging organization whose deicisions are final. The research of the Foundation has been for the sole purpose of settling the Abortion controversy.

THE CONTROVERSY: Before any conclusions can be drawn, all arguments against Abortion shall be fairly mentioned. The reason is for the clearest possible direction of this document.

The opposition to Abortion on demand comes from two basic factions. One claims that Abortion at any stage is murder. This shall be called the Abortion-Murder school of thought. The Catholic Church subscribes to this belief, and it is suspected that many other religious and ethical factions also do.

The philosophy of the Abortion-Murder faction is this: "Since a person is Human from conception, and since deliberate termination of another Human Life constitutes murder; then it can be concluded that Abortion is murder."

The Abortion-Murder faction justifies its argument this way: "DNA and chromosomes are the basic components of all life. DNA determines phylum, class, genus, species, and characteristics of every living thing. This goes for human beings, too (this faction contends). The point is also stressed that DNA is both unique to an organism and constant to that same and only organism. Thus the argument goes as such: If a Human has DNA, than a Human has constant Humanity, directly from the instant the first cell of 46 chromosomes is complete, until the termination of (his) existence."

The Euthanasia Foundation of America has decreed that the subject of Abortion is no place for the incidental mathematics of genetics, especially when the well being and future of an inconvenienced woman is at stake in the hands of the illegal abortionist.

The second faction of opposition to Abortion on demand is much milder in its ideolgoy. This faction bases its philosophy on more popular arguments. The premise of the Abortion-20 week philosophy is this: that even while granting the DNA theory, the first cell of 46 chromosomes is only a Human egg, to be likened with an acorn. If you squash an Acorn you do not kill an Oak Tree, as the argument is written.

Hence this Abortion-20 week faction derives its oppositions of Abortion on one basis: That the Human characteristic becomes present when the Fetus is in the twentieth to twenty-fourth week of gestation. It is at this period (claims this philosophy) that we can begin to grant a Fetus any qualities of Humanity, for the Fetus begins not only to appear Human, but also to move.

People who subscribe to this philosophy regard Abortion as wrong after the twentieth week gestation because "since a twenty week Fetus is Human, and since murder is applicable to Humans, then termination of life after the twentieth week gestation can be considered unethical."

The EFA recognizes two flaws in the Abortion-20 week philosophy, however. Firstly, that anyone can so arbitrarily assign Humanity to another organism based on its appearance is questionable. Secondly, members of the EFA agree that there exist Human beings who, because of paralysis, can not move, yet they still remain Human. Thus the idea that motion determines Humanity renders itself absurd by a single example.

THE QUESTION OF HUMANITY: Many individuals involved in defense of Abortion advance the theory that Abortion does not concern the Question of Humanity. The EFA steadfastly disagrees with such a theory. There would be no controversy if the question of Humanity were not a prime concern. Abortion emphatically concerns the question of Humanity.

The term "murder" is applicable only to Humans (though some believe it could be applied to certain dogs, cats, etc.). If Abortion is a question of murder, then of course it is a question of Humanity. Deliberate termination of another Human life by one (or more) Human(s) constitutes murder. The planning or direct involvement in the deliberate termination of another Human life (by one or more Humans) also constitutes murder. Thus Humanity is exactly the question which the Euthanasia Foundation has been funded to answer, and is exactly the question which shall be answered as this document progresses.

THE QUESTION OF BIRTH AS A CRITERION: There are a few persons who believe that Humanity is granted at birth. (Birth occurs after nine months gestation, when a Fetus becomes "new born.") These persons contend that upon the moment of birth a Fetus becomes Human, and is from that moment on entitled to Legal Protection of Human rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Conversely (these persons believe), any time before birth, the Fetus, if inconvenient, is dispensable. A great controversy exists among some people of this belief, that being: Whether "birth" shall be construed to mean the beginning from the uterus, or the separation from the unbilical cord." The recognized leaders of this belief settle that controversy with the definition: "Birth shall be construed to mean complete delivery from the uterus, before the cutting of the umbilical cord, after nine months in gestation."

Any Fetus which is delivered prematurely, is of course less Human than a Fetus which is born after nine months gestation. Accordingly, any premature arrival is dispensable up until the expected date of its birth.

Leading active members of this Belief are petitioning the Government to enact a law to place a drug on the common market, which would induce premature delivery, so that either parent may take the time to decide whether the arrival will be wanted after its projected birth date, and if not, that either parent may exercise the (legally recognized) choice to eliminate the premature arrival.

This philosophy assumes that Humanity (and therefore the protection of human rights) may be granted after nine months gestation. The Euthanasia Foundation has exposed two flaws in this philosophy. First, whether nine months gestation is an accurate and ultimate consideration in determining Humanity, or whether nine months is just another arbitrary measure. And secondly, whether birth is a true symbolic representation of the Humanity of a Fetus. Some persons argue that "birth" is no different from such criteria as "appearance" or "motion" or "quickening," in the arbitrary determination of the Humanity of a Fetus.

Next week many of the problems within this sphere of study will be ironed out, as the Euthanasia Foundation of America reports the results of landmark experimentation.

The Other Side

MEN'S LIBERATION
Penguinn Books
331 p. $2.50
Reviewed by Philip D. Zitowitz
by Jack Nichols

Men's Liberation sets itself the task of creating a new definition of masculinity. The author, Jack Nichols, works with such question as, "Why should men remain passive as well as active? What has mens' traditional toughness done to society and to politics? Why, since the advent of Women's Liberation has there been a startling documented increase in male impotentcy? Why are many men afraid to be gentle, caring, loving and sharing?"

The socialization process shapes human behavior by taking the wide gamut of behavioral possibilities open to the homo sapien and whittling them down into a role with its accompanying set of norms. The role defines when sexuality can be expressed and when it must he concealed. Laws, conditions in the workplace, peers, education, codes of the society and the community, are all those external influences which take a baby with XY chromosomes and dress him up in a cultural straightjacket.

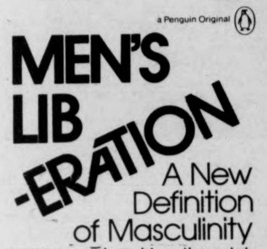
The author asks what the possibilities are of the human creature given a state of tabula rasa If the supporting institutions of masculinity were different, would the male mirror these changes in envirnoment? In that imaginary state of nature where we might have been saints or sinners, benevolent or homocidal wolfchildren, what are the human potentialities before the heavy hands of the multiple gods assault us and shape our souls into human nature. The internalization of traditional sex roles may have been functional in a society of stability where clear definitions in the division of labor made life easier. In our present society these roles seem to fail.

In the socialization process there is always a gap. Changes have taken place at a greater pace than the adaptive abilities of most people. We are still bringing up our men and women without calculating for the concommitant changes in the new world. Nichols suggests that as Americans we must ask ourselves if we want our relations chosen by the rule of what has always been done and by religion or by the light of reason. We must ask our social actors the males and females, if they like the roles cast upon them. If the actors say "no" there must be room within a given social group to change the rites and initiation. The scripts given to us, the variations that we as males can rehearse with them, and the possibilities of improvisation are discussed in a clear and systematic way by Nichols. His writing is less original than synthetic, but his words are wise, the message is worth repeating, and the subject matter smacks of a healthy contemporaneousness.

Most importantly, he is asking the right questions. The fact that his answers are a bit too glib and stylized, that he glosses over the real complexities of the battle of the sexes for what sounds like an admixture of old wisdom and common sense, that his tone is didactic, cajoling and chiding, are deficits in his very important book.

Nichols takes as his starting point the fact of Women's Liberation. Given the feminist movement, how can we as males, conform to the new expectations of women? He sets aside old world definitions of manhood for a New Masculinity before examining the foundations and complexity of what he desires as the male mystique. Dominant is a word he uses over and over again to describe the relation of men over women. This word represents one of those concepts that is deceptively simple to understand, but much more difficult to impute in a fluid, emotionally-charged relationship. Emotions of jealousy and possessiveness by men are not feelings that can be exorcised by the use of reason and good sense, nor can the simply be ignored by speaking about them in clinical language. For example, many psychological theories explain jealousy as a form of personal inadequacy. Yes and no. Jealousy also comes from the human need to consume objects and persons that we love.

The establishment of a new definition of masculinity is a Promethean task; I would be loath to accept the solution of any social scientist. At least, Kate Millet, in Sexual Politics tries to establish a realistic image of man as represented in literature before she gives the axe to Henry Miller, D.H. Lawerence and Norman Mailer. Norman Mailer, in a reply and attack to that book, The Prisoners of Sex pursued her inquiry with a different perspective and sensibility. Culture and sexual revolution is a post-technological culture is problematic, complicated and perhaps not a desired thing. Mailer claims that the language of liberation, couched within the concepts of social science, is confusing. Roles and norms, institutions and revolutions are useful rubrics for describing society. Taking these abstract qualities, and making them into human entities or the real brute facts of nature, is idiotic. Mailer does not follow his own advice. In the debate centering around Lawerence's novel Lady Chatterly's Lover, Millet claims that Constance was submissive and Mellors was dominant; Mailer says no. What Mailer, Millet and finally Nichols have failed to see, is that the question may be besides the point.



When Nichols deals with the practical side of the liberation, he is most effective. He gives useful suggestions for men who wish to liberate themselves, "from the fear of being called effeminate, from the terror of sexual failure and the nervousness and fears of homosexuality which prevents the cultivation of close male friends." When he extrapolates from this material and pleads for an androgenous state and a sexual and cultural revolution, his arguments lose strength and persuasion. Nichols is a babe in the woods when he enters into this theoretical landscape. He makes grand assumptions about the social nature of man without asking the troublesome questions that need to back up this inquiry. For example, the author does not discuss the possibility that men and women may be born with a secular original sin and even the best-intentioned prodding might lead to all forms of mutation.

The first two chapters of the book entitled, "Intellect", and then, "Sensuality," set the tone, style and state the assumptions and prejudices of the author. He argues that reason and the many forms of logic and rationality have overwhelmed the antithetical forces of intuition, sensuality and feeling. Apollo has finally won his battle over Dionysus, to the great detriment and possible destruction of us all. If this argument has been heard before, and the aphorisms, "Lose your mind and come to your senses," and "The mind is the whore of the intelligence," are the intellectual vogue — it is still a message which is unheeded and is worth repeating. Nichols' special contribution to this discussion lies in his mature commentary on the traditional mapping of the sexes on the intellect versus intuition scale. Women are supposed to perceive the world through the pitter-patter of their hearts and men through the palpitations of their cerebrum. He exposes the fatuousness of this belief and suggests how; the sexes might profit from the best of both worlds.

His chapter on sex might prove to be the most useful to men. He suggests that the relationship of men and women are becoming increasingly politicized. Ideologies of sex have entered into the intimate world of two people in much the same way that ideologies influence and govern relations between countries. Several studies show a startling increase in the sexual impotency of young men. His advice to those wayward men and women keen upon political castration is to take their politics elsewhere. Lovemaking is a personal act between two consenting adults and should follow only those laws established by two bodies moving together in their rhythms of sensuality.

The author criticizes the nuclear family on the grounds that they stultify their members because of the huge sexual delimitations that married men and women bring to those outside their merry circle of marriage. He suggests that, that an extended family and commune might be ways to extend the love we have within us. He exposes the pitfalls of being forced to take our self-image and self-respect from the idiosyncratic judgement of one individual. His arguments are persuasive, but he never examines the impulses that have made most human beings throughout history monogamous. How would he respond to the candid admittance of a young woman with whom I was speaking. She confessed shamefacedly, "I'm oldfashioned because I'm faithful to my partner and I would be hurt if he slept with other women." Monogamy and the nuclear family may not be a perversity.

While the author eschews quickie solutions to male liberation, his general directive is sound, — men must learn how to play. Deep resentment and aggressions can harmlessly be vented in imaginative and joy-producing frolic. Everything does not have to be done in the deadheaded seriousness of men at work. We must learn how "to be" and not only how to do. Instead of dueling and performance mongering, with women in bed, ~~with men at~~ work, why not give way to play and all-round body sexuality in the celebration of life through imagination and the body? The shackled male can free himself only if he allows himself to be somewhat imaginative. He must dance with the poetry and music of life.

WHEN WORDS FAIL TO DESCRIBE

TOMMY
By the Who Directed by Ken Russell
Reviewed by Jeffrey Polman

You emerge from the side exit door and look around you. If it is in the daytime you find it shocking to see objects standing motionless for yards about; if it is night you swear that the streetlamps are pulsating. You have just seen Tommy, and you are a different person. The effects are temporary, perhaps, but what you have just seen and heard might be the most difficult thing you will ever try to repress.

Ken Russell is a director who will most likely be studied after today, if not in film history seminars, then certainly among Orson Welles Cinema cultists. But some of us, yours truly among them, were getting off on his work long before. Our first glimpse was Women in Love, a splendid adaptation of D.H. Lawrence's portfolio of turn-of-the-century English romance. There was something about the film which pleasantly disturbed us, but whatever it was, it proved to be insensible jargon when put into words. Then we saw the ad for The Devils in our local newspapers: "... it is likely to be hailed as a masterpiece by many. But because it is explicit and highly graphic in depicting the bizarre events that occurred in France in 1634, others will find it visually shocking and deeply disturbing". Advertised as another witchcraft gross-out, attended to by leery-eyed kids hoping for one, but in reality a bleeding masterpiece. Astoundingly original in its shot construction, sets, script, and score, but one had to be artistically inclined to see through the bizarre nightmares and subsequent tortures. Russell next churned out The Boy Friend, an attempt at a 1920's musical which fell flat because it wasn't commercial enough. Then we were fed two "film-biographies" of famous artists, the first being The Music Lovers about Tchiakovsky, and Savage Messiah about the sculptor Henri-Gaudier Brzeska. Each was substantially Russellized: mixtures of beautiful photography, tight scripting, and unusual imagery.

This brought him to the making of Tommy. After extensive meetings with Pete Townshend, the singer-guitarist-songwriter of the Who, it was agreed that the world-famous rock opera would be filmed without one word of spoken dialogue. This was attempted once in a French film, The Umbrellas of Cherbourg during the 1960's, but the material was too cliche-choked and dull to arouse anybody's interest. In Tommy, three factors have spelled instant success for Russell: 1( a good financial and spiritual backer (Robert Stigwood), 2) rapid-fire camera shots to keep you awake, and 3) Peter Townshend's genius. This musical machine, who could probably compose a rock opera with a harmonica and a pair of spoons, took the time to completely re-record the music of Tommy, adding synthesizer bits to keep the sound interesting when there is no singing, and generally sparking the mind of Russell. The Santa Claus-bearded director has created another barrage of extraordinary pictures, but now they hug the story so tightly that it is hard to believe the film is the work of two men.

Tommy is the first film which gives you no time to breathe, no time to talk, no time to even look into your box of candy. Just remember how ridiculous it seemed when Rex Harrison or Julie Andrews broke out in song without warning during an apparent dialogue scene. Now try to imagine the result when you are seated smack in front of a non-stop film which is accompanied by one two-hour song! This is the hypnotic effect you receive from Tommy. There is so much energy radiating from the screen that you almost have to grit your teeth to withstand it. But surely it's the most satisfying torture you'll ever contend with.

Nobody -- but nobody gives a bad performance. There really isn't any room for one. Ann-Margret utilizes all her singing and dancing talents, and if you once thought of her as only a sex symbol, you better tell your groin to pack up and leave. As Tommy's mother, she stretches her mind and body like a piece of licorice, blasting out her stanzas like someone who has never sung before. Oliver Reed, as her lover, is not a great singer, and for that matter neither is Jack Nicholson, as the Doctor. But somehow Russell makes them do it: the subject matter is so loose, the visuals so brilliant that if they're really not singing well you can't even notice.

But the rock stars are the ones who steal the show. Elton John produces the best number and most likely the best scene in the film. As the ten-foot-high Pinball Wizard, he screams out his angry lyrics at Tommy, while playing a keyboard atop his machine simultaneously. If there is any song in the film which could make old ladies jump out of their seats and dance, this is it. Tina Turner is the Acid Queen, and she is just as good. Writhing through her attic-roofed tenement where she brings Tommy to turn him on, she comes through as not only powerful but downright frightening to watch. Eric Clapton has been called a "deadhead" for his scene, but once again, if this is true, Mr. Russell knew what to do about it. Clapton is a preacher in a lavishly-dressed church where sinners and unfortunates come to pray to Marilyn Monroe. The satire is very clever, but it's a little too bizarre to laugh, and although Clapton strolls down the aisle rather drearily, the loud, heavy music undercuts anything which might be "boring" about him. The roles of Cousin Kevin and Uncle Ernie are probably the funniest moments in the film, with Paul Nicholas as Kevin, the wild-eyed, black leather-jacketed sadist who does things so absurd to Tommy (drags him around by his hair while wearing a stocking over his head, irons his clothes while he's wearing them, etc.) that laughter comes surprisingly easy. Keith Moon, the Who's drummer, plays perverted Ernie like no one else could conceive him: hands clothed in brown surgical gloves, mouth breathing into a telephone, the true deviant. And how can we forget Tommy himself, Roger Daltrey? Although he only sings in about one-third of the movie, his voice is so powerful and exhilirating that if he sang more than four or five songs the audience would start melting into their seats.

Tommy is not only the best musical film ever, (it improves on the original record at least ten times over) but there is also much to be learned from the story. Russell and Townshend are talking about us, not just about one deprived child. Their enormous droves of crowds are present in scene after scene, idol-worshipping whatever they can grasp onto. First there is Marilyn Monroe, then the Pinball Wizard, and finally Tommy. But in each instance the people eventually get fed up and rebel. Nothing seems to work. No one is perpetually authentic for them. Only Tommy, by becoming "deaf, dumb, and blind" can see the inner strength which lies inside all of us. But when he tries to preach his word on a society infested in greed, destruction, and paranoia it is fruitless. Those with all their senses are using them for the wrong things, so maybe it is better to be like Tommy once was. Only by returning to his soul can he win in the end.

When the Academy Awards come around again next year, Tommy should be nominated for a handful of them. But if all goes well it should not win; Tommy is so far ahead of anything else being produced today in film that an Oscar would be lowering its image. Oh, of course we will have sequels sooner or later, or a few nauseating attempts at copying what has been achieved here. But you need a genius or two to make them work, and Tommy has rounded most of them up. Ken Russell and Peter Townshend have given us a lesson in how to create art through music and film. No, Peter Bogdanovich, you don't try to re-create another genre by casting Cybill Shepherd and Burt Reynolds in singing roles they can't handle. No, Barbara Streisand, you don't jump into a follow-up musical to an earlier success. YOU DO SOMETHING THAT HAS NEVER BEEN DONE. For Ken Russell it has paid off in the long run. Tommy is a landmark, the true beginning of (hopefully) a new cinema. The Woodstock Nation is finally coming of age.

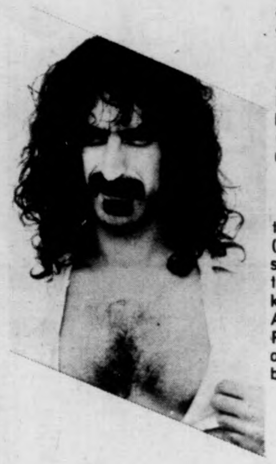
Zappa/Mothers

In Concert
Frank Zappa — The Mothers Of Invention
James Montgomery Band
27 April (10:00 show)
Boston Music Hall

Yanking themselves back from the peril of stilted mediocrity, Frank Zappa and Captain Beefheart let us know last Sunday night that there are still plenty of demented cells operating inside their brain bombs. Zappa led his boys through a two-hour exercise that gave everyone in the house a taste of the Something or Anything they wanted from the clever Mothers.

Before this goodness, the patrons rode out the boogga-chugga of James Montgomery's band (another great pairing with Zappa — last time it was Wet Willie). The Montgomerys certainly aren't bad, but their simple-minded "Less pahty tunnite" is not in keeping with the spirit of a real Mothers' evening.

Yes, a little for all: "Camirillo Brillo", "Penguin In Bondage," "Montana" and one of those empty slop-funk Napoleon Brock versions we've come to fear and despise, a horrible tackle of "Let's Make The Water Turn Black," "an old, sentimental song about people who save snot." Captain Beefheart, a Mother at last, sat in a chair behind Zappa, drew pictures in a book, crawled about the stage and did the peculiar movement he would probably call a dance. The Cap sang four of his own songs, all new items (one about a trailer "Where the torture never stops," and another went, "Oh Debra, Al-gee-bra, Abracadabra... There's nasties crawlin' my way, I gotta get in under it.") and showed he can still blow up cyclones with his seven octave voice.



Zappa shows new-old guts.

But it was, finally, Zappa's willingness to expirement that made the night. He brought his troops (finely skilled as always), through some odd changes and exchanges that recalled the brilliant explorational days of Uncle Meat. The Band was Geo. Duke, Brock, the Fowler brothers, a new drummer (quite a power packer) and rhythm guitar.

Although they still sagged at times into over long solos (guitar solos, Frank) and silly simple blues bits, it gladdens the hearts and livers of all who know to say that not only can America hear "Willie The Pimp" done right, but that once again along the Zappa border, anything goes.

Aerosmith

In Concert
Aerosmith
Springfield Civic Center
April 25

Contrary to whatever I had imagined beforehand, Aerosmith put on a very creditable performance last Friday night in the Civic Center. As was expected, the typical rowdy junior high-high school cliques were very much in attendance, leading to some of the most engrossing concert fisticuffs I have ever been witness to. As for the musical aspect, Aerosmith impressed with old and new material, (the latter from Toys In The Attic). Naturally, the biggest audience response was evoked for, as Steve Tyler put it, "a bit of nostalgia," which was "Dream On," complete with colorful smoke-filled stage. The group rocked on continuously, receiving enough of the crowd's plaudits to return for two encores. It was fortunate that Aerosmith came through so well, for the opening act, a German group called Atlantis, couldn't play their way out of a paper bag. They're a mediocre, garage-type band. But then again, wasn't Aerosmith once the same? They sure were, but not anymore. They've come a long way, at least in regards to their stage act.

—Ross Nerenberg

SEWERS IN & PAID FOR

This group is really a laugh and a half, though if you can cut through the bullshit, you might find yourself appreciating the way Stevie Tyler has every little nuance smoothly choreographed and the myriad fashions in which he projects his extended tongue. Very intriguing how devoted some of the high school crowd seem to be. Put yourself in the shoes of the kid's mother whose first born has decided to do everything in his power to look like a rock singer who apprently is Bianca Jagger's twin. That, my friend is one facet of this marvelous group's influence on teenagers. Less frightening is the fact that, apparently, Aerosmith likes to play to an appreciative audience and I'll take that to mean that the boys are going to keep working for their audiences at the risk of getting very tired of reworking, "The Train Kept A-Rollin" every show. (If they paid you, would you do it?).

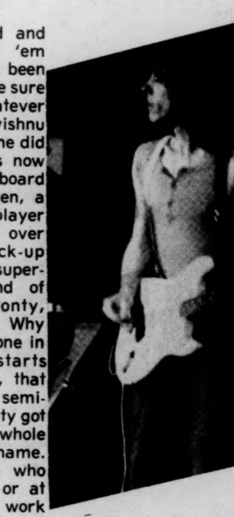
Beck/Mahavishnu/White III

In Concert
Jeff Beck
Mahavishnu Orchestra
26 April
Springfield Civic Center

Well, praise the Lord and pass the incense, tell 'em Johnny-boy is here. It's been said before, but let's make sure everyone's heard it: Whatever it is the new Mahavishnu Orchestra does, the old one did it better. Mahavishnu is now touring with two keyboard players, drummer Walden, a reasonably fierce bass-player (the only improvement over the old Ork), a back-up violinist, two highly superfluous sax players, and of course Jean-Luc Ponty, looking very decorative. Why is it that as soon as anyone in McLaughlin's band starts showing signs of talent, that person is immediately semi-retired? I don't think Ponty got more than two solos the whole show, and that's a shame. McLaughlin is the one who should be semi-retired, or at the very least he should work for some band where he is not the leader. He is an excellent guitarist; he is not an excellent composer or arranger. Boogie is Boogie, no matter what scale or time-signature it's played in. Beware, Johnny, lest your imitators become your betters.

At various times last Saturday night, Jeff Beck said to us: "Here's some of the funk we got fer ya."; "I like Springfield"; and after a half-hearted call for an encore: "This means a lot to us. It really does." His performance was in the same kind of rut.



"I really like Springfield."

It was much less than gripping to see Max Middleton go "waht-a-waht" on the clavinet all night and to watch Pretty Purdie try to be a rock drummer. And what brought the entire deal down was watching Mr. Beck orchestrate and lead this evening of dull funk and overly sensitive, gutless tripe, the likes of which were only slightly more compelling on Blow By Blow. Oh, we got a few sparks of excitement from the big-beaked tweaker, but he remained in his funk most of the eve.

Local Music
Andrew White III
with UMass Jazz Workshop

Just a short word about a segment of a free concert and a guest conductor-saxophonist who stunned the shee-itt out of an incredulous Bowker Auditorium crowd. Mysterious music Master Andrew White conducted the Music Dept. student band in his own "Coltrane Medley," directing with elastic arms and hands, then whirling to his mike during the "Giant Steps" section and wheeling out with a heart and time-stopping alto solo (Braxton analogy) at omnigodno warp speed. Leaps he back to conduct band, then around again to music stand, but with tenor, and blows entire transcribed exact Coltrane original solo, perfect yet faster (what?). And super-drummer Charlie Persip playing upbeat symphonies on one ride cymbal in perfect anticipation. This really happened, too!

Chicago VIII
CHICAGO
(Columbia PC 33100)
Total Time: 39:09

That group with all of those highly-imaginative album titles has struck again. And, it would appear, they have pulled through with another successful venture. The music of Chicago VIII comes from compositions by four of the eight men in the group (Peter Cetera, Terry Kath, Bobby Lamm, James Pankow), so it's pretty much a total group effort featuring the familiar Chicago sound: those fancy horn arrangements and tight vocal harmonies. The only dull spot on the album is Kath's two compositions, which are dismal letdowns. The other three men's compositions are all first-rate, forming a soothing blend of easy listening.

Side one starts off with Cetera's "Anyway You Want," a positive work whose calm, smooth-flowing feel gets the record off to a good start. Then comes Pankow's "Brand New Love Affair," split into two parts. Part 1 is slow and plodding, but the time change of Part 2 is much more effective, as the song speeds up and moves into higher gear, highlighted by the fine horn section. Lamm's "Never Been In Love Before" features good pounding piano, with light and catchy chorus lines. The group can still rock, and this heavy side is exhibited on Cetera's "Hideaway," emphasizing some of Chicago's better guitar-bass workings. Then there's Kath's "Till We Meet Again," which, as previously mentioned, is quite a bomb.

Side two starts right back at you with Lamm's "Harry Truman." It may be a bit ostentatious, but it works in keeping alive Chicago's tradition of being a fine hit-producing singles band. "Oh, Thank You Great Spirit" is Kath's other bomb. It's very long and monotonous, and more thought should have been put into it. Next we hear Lamm's "Long Time No See," a tune which pleases with its all-around consistency. Another Lamm song is in store, "Ain't It Blue?", a funkier piece with nice dual vocals from Pankow and Cetera, partially reminiscent of an earlier Chicago effort, "Dialogue." Finally, the album closes with Pankow's "Old Days," an enjoyable tune of youthful nostalgia which unfurls in typical Chicago fashion.

So, there you have it. The new one. Chicago VIII. A very fine album, as good as, if not better than, quite a few of the group's earlier works. It may take a few repeated listenings, but believe me, it's worth it. If you're a true Chicago fan, this one's a sure shot. If you're not a true Chicago fan, and are apt to balk at shelling out the high price for any of their previous double albums, this is a single album which should not disappoint. I'd give this one a 'it's tough to put a good group down' B+.

—Ross Nerenberg

Editor's Note: We here at the SALT office are shocked and dismayed to see that Chicago has beaten the mighty Soft Machine at the numbers game. The score was tied at seven (7 to VII) when Columbia foolishly dealt the Softs to Capitol Records for Pink Floyd. Chicago's VIII was released, and the Softies, obviously disorganized and unable to deal, announced that after nine years of VOL. 2, THIRD, SIX, etc., their next album was to be called BUNDLES. Well, that's how it Gomes.

Tom Cat
TOM SCOTT & THE L.A. EXPRESS
(ODE SP-77029)

Veteran studio musician and arranger Tom Scott is becoming more and more popular these days, probably as a direct result of his association with Joni Mitchell. But he was certainly deserving of recognition a long while before that.

Scott has released several recordings under his name, and this is his second with the L.A.Express. The new L.A. Express includes Max Bennet on bass, John Guerin on drums, Robben Ford on guitar, Larry Nash on electric piano, organ and Arp synthesizer and Scott on saxes, woodwinds, Moog synthesizer and various etc.'s. Very pleasant effects are achieved with this new use of synthesizers.

The quality of the music and each of the musicians is still top-notch. The group's funkified sound combines the best elements of jazz, soul and rock, producing an uncluttered, truly professional approach to, and execution of, the material.

The songs (all penned by various members of the band) show subtly simple yet strikingly effective "quirks" (for lack of a better word) in arrangement that make listening undemanding and agreeable. Listen, for example, to "Rock Island Rocket", where at the absolute peak of the guitar solo, the sax blows the identical guitar notes simultaneously and uses them as the basis of a sax solo. Like the album itself, it's simply yet nicely professional in quality.

The Myths and Legends of King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table
RICK WAKEMAN
(A&M Records)
Time: 42:58

Rick Wakeman is a highly talented keyboard player, but he seems hell bent on destroying that reputation. Wakeman's solo career started with promise with the release of The Six Wives of Henry VIII. Six Wives is a fine example of Wakeman virtuosity and musical intelligence. Everything seemingly went out the window with Journey To The Centre Of The Earth, a banal piece of classical upsurdity.

This latest record, King Arthur, is vastly better than Journey. Rick seems to have regained some of his senses here, but it all ends up as so much garbage. He shows an awful lack of creativity (Again an adaptation of classical music, rather than something new and inventive. Plus two ripoffs: 1 from his Strawbs piano solo — his best solo piece to date and from Six Wives), abysmal lyrics (Rick has no business writing lyrics, he's an instrumentalist, not a lyricist) and the ultimate dumbness of the Journey-King Arthur concept. Granted there are some great moments on King Arthur (And we do appreciate them). Wakeman's tenure with The Strawbs, Yes and his encore last year ("Now A Word From Our Sponsor") look like a passing of an era. C

Mind Transplant
ALPHONSE MOUZON
(Blue Note BN-LA 398)

File this one under party sides, kiddies. The blend of rock, rock & soul, and a couple of jazzy time-signatures here has a lot of vitality to it, but once or twice through and you've heard all it has to say. Even so, Mouzon's hard-hitting...uh, funkiness, in conjunction with the gutsy, if not especially tasteful, guitars of Tommy Bolin, Jay Graydon, and Lee Ritenour, as well as a general lack of pretension to anything more sophisticated, put this album somewhat above the average jazz-funken. I'd rather listen to this than most of Billy Cobham's over-productions (That's what you were waiting to hear, wasn't it Alphonse?). (B-)

time 32:52

In which the 'Jays get along much more on grit and gut than their sweeter, more melodic hits of the past. There are a few bring strong songs in this style ("Survival", "Where Did We Go Wrong", "Rich Get Richer"), but lots of Gamble-Huff TSOP Soul cliches too. Not too substantial.

The World of Duke Ellington Vol. 2
DUKE ELLINGTON
(Columbia)

On (or near) the birthday of the American music genius, too. The man's musical world was so full, it's staggering. The period here, from '49-'51, was of the great orchestra in flux — Barney Bigard, Jimmy Blanton, Joe Nanton all gone, but with Louis Bellson, Paul Gonsalves and Russell Procope as some of the new blood. The band is experimenting more here as well and their synchronized looseness is what makes this double album so excellent. Listen to: "The Hawk Talks", and "Ting-a-Ling", "Creole Love Call", a near perfect jam, "Let's Go Blues," Billy Strayhorn's "Snibor" and evreethang.

Be True To You
ERIC ANDERSEN
(Arista)

One of the lingering folkies spawned by official fad of 1965, Eric Andersen has paid enough dues to be a blues singer. This label, Arista, is his third since he started on the folk path with Vanguard. Side by side, the cover photos show little if any change in the dark eyed face that stares back; neither picture has the sensitivity of the heart and mind behind those eyes. If anything, this newest album, Be True To You, is the equal of his last, Blue River, which was called a classic by most critics, and I feel that this is even better.

Part of the goodness of this album comes from those people that have aided Andersen on this album. Tom Scott and John Guerin from the LA Express, Joni Mitchell, Jackson Browne, Maria Mulduar, Jennifer Warren, are some of the best here. But most of the substance to this album lies in the songs themselves. Included in the album is a straighahead version of "Ol' 55,", Tom Waits' suddenly popular song. The rest of the songs are all by Andersen, who is one of the very few writers who can write a message without preaching. He is able to write about the suffering and changes people go through in life and love with honesty and not sentimentality because he's writing of his own experiences. Like Joni Mitchell, Eric Andersen is able to take moments in his life and distill the essence into a song that has validity for many.

It is "Time Like a Freight Train", a song full of standard Andersen moods and pictures that summarises this album and point of life best, as Andersen closes, "There's nothing left but mercy now for...the poet who pawned his mystery in turn for some relief."

A Little Knight Music
GLADYS KNIGHT & THE PIPS
(Soul S6-774S1) time 30:51

A little unexpected delight here. Unlike so many of the after-the-fact records issued after a group leaves a label, this collection of scraps forms a strong album that will stand with most any Pips product.

Although this isn't, as some have said, the best Gladys album ever, the fine backing band, arrangements and fine fine work by G. Knight and T. Pips keeps enough rock and sock flowing to make you forget the few gaffes like "Sugar Sugar".

A 'run from the middle of the road' B+.

Time & Tide
GREENSLADE
(Mercury Records)
Time: 32:13

Up until this album, Greenslade was one of the best "all-keyboard" rock bands to surface in the seventies. Their three albums; Greenslade, Bedside Manners Are Extra (Import Only) and Spyglass Guest, were sheer delights. This trio assured the band a secure place in keyboard rock importance.

But now Time & Tide all too quickly appears on the scene. There's no doubt that it would be a good album for another, average group, but it's a definite step backwards for Greenslade. Time & Tide is unavoidably limp, forced and contrived. For a group with so much potential, they surely missed the boat. The blame falls equally on the band and their record-management companies. You see, English groups are hot stuff for the American market. Greenslade's tour promotor has gone as far as to state that he will break the band in the States. They've been billed with Kraftwork, whose current lp is in the top ten album charts in Billboard. No doubt the boys are seeing dollar signs looming overhead, and it's unfortunate to see them grab for them.

Greenslade has gone as far as to change their musical style. Now they play uptempo rock n roll, interspersed with shallow old Greenslade ramblings like "Catalan". This "uptempo" music works only once, in "The Ass's Ear". Bassist Tony Reeves has now left the group due to their change in material. His replacement, Martin Briley, is a good musician, playing some fine guitar. It's a pity he's wasted on such unworthy material. Its a pity the whole band is wasted! How disheartening to see one of your favorite groups go from being one of the brightest hopes of the year to one of the disappointments of the year '(C)

"Unrewarded genius is almost a proverb" says that vile McDonald's ad of "Persistance" that goes a long way in explaining why so much of America is like it is — [illegible] making short-term, near-sighted greedheads. Most the Quickest. We've always come up with neat, easy solutions (Vietnam, busing, capitalism) that simply do not work over the period of time. And the next generation has their own quick-result fads [illegible] technology grows [illegible] music? You wanna make people dance? My name is Larry Welk, and we gotta nice bandaleer...

Sun Ra is one of the long-range answers, which is why his records are seldom heard on the radio, and why they are reviewed in cryptic [illegible] terms. MONTY PYTHON
(Arista 4039)

I have long held doubts about the singing abilities of Mr. Python, and this album only serves to confirm them. As on all of his previous albums he not only persists in talking his way through the lyrics, there is also, even more than usual, an almost complete lack of music behind his vocals. I mean, after all, it doesn't make much sense for a singer to hire a back-up band and then not have them playing when he's trying to record his songs, now does it? (Ahem. — Music Ed.) Why, I'd go so far as to say that his musical problems are rooted in that very situation. (Uh... Excuse me. — Music Ed.) What? Well, I think it's a safe bet that if he'd just have them play while making the recording his songs would be 100 per cent better, especially if he'd say the words in different pitches so everyone would know it was a melody. (Excuse me, but they're not a music group. — Music Ed.) What? (I said, they're not a musical group — Music Ed.) Speak up, will you? I can't hear you through the parentheses. (THEY'RE NOT A MUSICAL GROUP, YOU TWIT! — Music Ed.) Oh. Well... I knew that. I did, really. I did. Why are you looking at me like that? You don't think I'm fibbing just to get out of an embarrassing situation, do you? (I'm afraid so. — Music Ed.) What? (I THINK YOU'RE A LIAR, AND A CLUMSY ONE AT THAT! — Music Ed.) Oh. Well... it's your fault if I am, now isn't it? You didn't have to correct me in front of everyone, did you? Have you ever been called a twit in front of 20,000 people? No, of course you haven't, you're too busy hob-knobbing with record company representatives and saying, 'Oh thank God the vinyl shortage is over' and pinching their secretaries' behinds with your free hand as you walk out with an armload of the latest releases that have been heaped on you by those big-shot media bastards who probably give you all sorts of drugs and payola in return for raving about their teeny-bopper spew in print, while you go to sorority parties with all your hoity-toity jazz-buff friends and stand around making snide comments about Cat Stevens, "Oh, they don't make much good music in this country, do they?" Aha! If Monty Python isn't a musical group, then what is this review doing on the music pages? I've got you there! (NO YOU HAVEN'T. — Music Ed.) Oh yes I have! Either they're a musical group and I was right all along, or they're not and they don't belong on your pages. What's it going to be then, eh? Eh? (Oh all right. Go, then. — Music Ed.) What? (GO, YOU TWIT! — Music Ed.) Oh, the vindictive bastard! All right! I'm not going to stay where I'm not wanted, I'm going to another page, a page where I'll be appreciated! And don't come crawling to me if most of your readers leave with me. I dare say a lot of them have been waiting for the chance. Yes, you out there, reading this! This is your chance to break away from the tyranny of his narrow view and name-calling! If you're ready, then take your courage in both hands and follow me into the great beyond! On to the next page and glory...

(Look at that, will you. Just up and crashes through my border. I guess I did hurt his feelings, though. I'd better go after him. HEY, WAIT UP! — Music Ed.)

... AND HERE WE ARE, HOME, SAFE AND SOUND. (Oh, thank goodness. You've saved my life. (THINK NOTHING OF IT.) No, really, and after I'd walked out on you without a word of thanks (FORGET IT.) No, I won't. I owe you my life, and I'll never leave these pages again, only... please don't call me a twit again, I can't stand it. (ALL RIGHT.) Promise? (YES, YES.) Cross your heart and hope to die? (YES, DAMMIT! NOW GET BACK TO WORK! JESUS...) Well you don't have to get huffy about it, just because I happen to be a very sensitive person. (OH, YOU'RE SENSITIVE AS SHIT.) I resent that! I am extremely sensitive! (IF YOU'RE SO SENSITIVE THEN WHY HAVEN'T YOU NOTICED THAT WE'RE STILL UPSIDE-DOWN?) Oh. Well... I knew that.

Sneakin' Sally Through The Alley
ROBERT PALMER
(Island ILPS 9294—English import)

Last summer when the mighty Little Feat were beginning their 'comeback', their first show was right here in the Ballroom. After two hours of stingingly tight rock & funk, they called up this dandy dude to sing along and play some limp harmonica on "Sailin Shoes". "This is our friend," announced Lowell George. "Robert Palmer. He's got an album coming out on Island. Watch for it."

Why? I dunno. This record, like Palmer, is as bland and faceless a disc as you find on either side. And given the fact that he's managed to negate the talents of the Feat on it, as well as two Allen Toussaint songs in the process, I suppose that makes Sneakin' Sally almost viciously faceless.

A Quiet Storm
SMOKEY ROBINSON
(Tamla T6-337S1) time 34:57

A quiet delight in places. The only problems come when Smokey's soft style cancels whatever true meaning his art has. That is, doing everything the same way, the same style, calls for subject matter consistently sympathetic to the genre. When it works ("A Quiet Storm", "Love Letters", "Coincidently"), it's brilliant and quite moving. When it doesn't, it either goes down without offending or else seems forced or plain filler. And thus the listener is forced from Robinson's mellow mood into stomper's heaven. And there are too many "Smokey" songs on here, rather than songs done by Smokey, for this to be as good as it could of should be.

A 'backatcha' B-.

Cold On The Shoulder
GORDON LIGHTFOOT
(Warner Bros. MS-2206)

What can be said about an album when the cover has a picture of the artist playing his guitar wearing a metal studded workshirt completely open down the front with a gorgeous "chick" standing behind him? Commercial? Just a bit. When you take a singer who can run the gamit of emotions and images, whose work everyone who is anyone in folk music has recorded, and decided that he is going to make it big, you are going to lose something.

The music on this album is pleasant, good background music for a meal. But it is bland enough that you do not have to worry if the person you are having dinner with has an ulcer. Lots of background instruments, including one point where Lightfoot plays the piano.

I should not really put it down. This album is a lot better than 75 per cent of the albums I have heard recently. But when you know a steak is capable of Fillet Mignon, why ask for it as hamburg?

Dickey the Dam: musical power play

— Mark Cuddy

On May 1 at 4:00, May 2 at 4:00 and 10:00 and May 3 at 2:00 and 8:00 the completion of a two and a half year project takes place in Bartlett Auditorium. In the fall of 1972, Tom Keegan wrote a short story about the power systems in the world and about one of its leaders, Richard M. Nixon. Using the allegory of a young dam in search of a big river to block up, Tom had basically written a political satire in the mold of Art Buchwald. Come summer of 1973 he started to put it into play form with part dialogue, part song, part improvisation and completed the first draft in October with added characters and a variety of music. Following a revision in the spring of 1974 he now had a theatre piece ready to be attacked in a rehearsal-rewriting process. My friendship with Tom led me into the picture at this time and I became the first director of "Dickey The Dam and The Big Blue River." We got the Theatre Department to sponsor it for the fall and we set off to mount it. But we didn't as a lack of support from the department forced us to go the Roister Doister organization, a move that has turned out terrifically.

For the past four months Tom and I have spent countless hours debating the questions, concepts, problems and themes of the play. When dealing with a new theatre piece you have to be careful not to make decisions too early about what the piece is really about. Exploration is the biggest part of the rehearsal period and only exploring the rhythms and the character forces in the play can you find the true reality for each particular production. We had decided that Tom would be sort of a "playwright in collaboration" during rehearsals and do the musical direction as I would be directing, but what do those titles mean? We live together, eat together, work together, and drink together with our conversation always winding up with the play. I give him ideas about musical arrangements and rewrites and he gives me directorial and conceptual theories so we overlap constantly. We both agree that the cast should contribute as much as possible to our so-called realms while being open to the necessary changes.

Some questions have to be dealt with before casting the play. I dislike most musicals for the simple reason that they are primarily all the same. They reside in a constant reality that permits no change, no surprises and although they may differ in mentality they are consistently awkward in structure. There is just no reason for a character to break into song subsequently it sets up a wall of absurdity between the actors and the audience. In "Dickey", all of the characters with one exception are non-human objects which represent certain natural powers, and express themselves in many different ways, one of which is indeed song. The music in the show is a combination of folk, blues, jazz and pop, each with its own purpose.

Dickey the Dam (right) and parents.

I believe strongly in the collective creative process in design as well as direction. Maria McNamara has been our designer for "Dickey" and has worked with the cast and myself in the creation of set and costumes that will best help us in the search for the right combination of variables. It's as important for the design to be formed during the rehearsal period as it is for the production.

So here it is two days before we open and can I tell you what to expect this week-end. It could be called a masonary-musical or a brick opera, a satire on power, or an allegory concerning ecological, social, political, religious, and spiritual power forces in the world but it is probably best put as an artistic work in collaboration with many creative minds whose sole purpose is to be true to the freedom found in "Dickey The Dam and The Big Blue River".

Well. Here we are on the next page, free at last! Well, no speeches, there's work to be done. Let's get to it! Hmmm. Not much room, is there? Do you suppose I should have let the Theater Editor know I was coming? Oh, here's a little space no one is using. At least, I hope not. I mean, how would it look, sneaking into little vacancies on someone else's page and getting caught trespassing. What is this, the theater page? What will they do if they find me here? Well, I'm not scared of anything they can do (HELLO! — Music Ed.) Oh, you startled me half to death! (SORRY. HOW'S IT GOING? — Music Ed.) Keep it down, will you? Oh.. uh, fine, just fine... uh, that is to say... well, rotten, actually. (A BIT CRAMPED, ARE YOU? — Music Ed.) Shh! Do you want the Theater Editor to hear us? (Oh. Well, I just wanted to tell you that I'm sorry I hurt your feelings and if you want it there's still a place for you on the music pages — Music Ed.) What? (YOU CAN COME BACK, IF YOU WANT! — Music Ed.) Oh, now you've done it! I hear her coming! We've got to leave at once! Ohmigod, the copy's going in the wrong direction, we're trapped! (THERE'S ONLY ONE THING TO DO! FLIP OVER ON YOUR BACK LIKE THIS! — Music Ed.) Stop telling me your name! Like this? (YES! NOW, TOGETHER!

"the sort of night cops pray for" a white '74 sticker that's been dyed red. The registration on it doesn't match the car. No, the driver doesn't know anything about it. No, he didn't realize that it's a felony to forge a sticker, and no, he didn't realize that he could be arrested on the spot and get five years. Yes, he is a student. Schmitter issues him a complaint and explains that he'll be getting a court summons in the mail in a couple of days. Would he have arrested him if he hadn't been a student? "Yes. Well, maybe — it's hard to say. That's the thing about police work; it depends on the cop, the subject, the situation. The laws covering this case are primarily concerned with Motor Vehicle registration, which is serious. I don't see the inspection sticker as being quite so serious, though it's bad. He's a student, and we know we can get a hold of him if we have to. I saw no reason to place him under arrest."

After this, we spend some more time observing traffic, and then we head back to the station to write up the night's reports.

From a journalistic point of view, it's been a dull, though informative night. The sort of night that cops pray for.

5-21-75 — Martone

Police Work is not always an exciting game of cops and robbers. It becomes tedious and boring just like any other job. And the Police Department at UMass is no exception. The job may be boring at times, but the patrolmen are not.

It was a quiet night for the 3-11 p.m. crew, Monday, Patriot's Day. The total night's activity included: one parking ticket; a check up on a possible stolen motor vehicle; and a false alarm at the Fine Arts Center.

At 7 p.m. the three patrolmen on duty were seated behind desks, filing reports, and getting ready for their cruise. Every night, three cops work the shift, each patroling a different area of the campus. District 1 encompasses everything west of Massachusetts Ave., and South of North Pleasant St., while District 2 takes in the area of North Pleasant St. The third District is made up of the area North of North Pleasant St.

Jim Tarauti, who usually rides Mounted Patrol from 3 to 11 p.m., was covering the third District for a patrolman who had called in sick.

As he cruised District 3, Taurati talked about how he first became involved in police work.

"As an undergrad, I was a P.E. major, because that was the thing to do. When I got out, there were no jobs, and I sort of fell into police work. But, I'm glad it happened that way," he said.

Commenting on the Mounted Patrol, Taurati said it's more interesting than riding around in a car.

After a five week riding program at UMass, he was able to take "Thunder" on the rounds.

Citing the advantages of a Mounted Patrol, Taurati said a horse is faster and "of course, more unobstrusive" than a cruiser.

"When you go riding into a parking lot to check out a possible motor vehicle larceny, the suspect is gonna take off when he sees that car coming," said Taurati.

Taurati said he gets good and bad comments from students.

"You're out there on a horse, in a crowd of people, and you're all alone. You're vulnerable to insults."

Taurati cited one specific incident when he was riding in front of a dorm in the North East area.

"There were cherry bombs flying out of the windows from everywhere. And, it was from a dorm where you would't expect it. There wasn't much I could do," he added.

A former UMass student, turned cop, was covering the second District, Monday night. Elliot Kabachnick was a UMass undergrad in the cadet program, a year ago. Two months before graduating, in 1974, he was offered a job with the UMass Police.

"The strangest thing was when I had to be a security guard at my own graduation," Kabachnick said.

The patrolman said he still gets "weird" looks from students who recognize him from former classes.

"There's definitely a physical distance between us that wasn't there before," he added.

Having lived in the Southwest area for a semester, (the highest crime area on campus), Kabachnick says he feels he has an advantage over some of the other cops.

"I like to think I can understand the problems there better, because I used to live there. I know what it's like to live in those dorms."

Eventually, Kabachnick would like to go on to graduate school and work in a large Police department.

William "Slicker" Slysz, a patrolman at UMass for five years, covers the Third District, at night. During the day time, he's a farmer in Hatfield, Mass.

"I get up at 6 in the morning and farm until 1:00 or so, come home, get cleaned up, and get ready to cruise," he said.

Police work is just like any other job, according to Slicker.

"It has its high points and its low points," Slicker added.

Commenting on student-police relations, Slicker said it is a lot better than it was during the late 60's.

"We always got heckled at then. Now students come up and they just rap with us. It's not perfect, but it's better," he said.

As we drove into the station at 11 p.m. Slicker said: "Hey, you know, we haven't had one call since you came in tonight. Not even the usual Infirmary run. You should come in more often!"

(SUMMARY)

While talking to the cops on these shifts, and others during the course of daily newsgathering, a few things become apparent. The morale is high among the cops, as is pride in their department. The UMass force is professional, progressive, and cooperative. The relations between the cops on the beat and their superiors are generally good. The cops are well-educated. Seventy-five per cent of them have bachelor's degrees. Jon has his degree in Special Ed. and he taught in Chicopee Public Schools before he decided to become a cop. He's acquired skills in fingerprinting, breathalyzer, and identi-kit operation. He's also a member of the Scuba Team. In his spare time, he's been trying to organize the records in such a way that everything known about chronic offenders is centralized and quickly available. And this initiative is not particularly rare in this department. The Scuba Team supplies a lot of their own equipment. Officers Warren and Taurati are responsible for the Mounted Patrol, and have accumulated training and equipment of their own.

Whitmore and the upper echelons of UMPD stress and encourage this initiative, but there is one big problem. The cops have got to do it on their own. As state employees, they are entitled to take one course a semester for free at UMass. That means if you can't afford to pay for more courses, it's going to be a long time before you get your BA.

UMPD is subject to the same budget cuts as the rest of the university. So while the officials at this university want their police to be well-trained and educated, they won't pay for them to go, or offer incentives. In spite of this, the cops take courses, using up their veteran's pay, working all the overtime they can.

UMass cop's pay is average, at best. One officer said: "Usually a town or city will lay out a lot of money, and get an average police force. In some ways, UMass has got it better than it deserves."

When asked what makes a good cop, the general answer was common sense and mental stability. While relations between the students and the police have improve somewhat over the past few years, a cop still gets a fair amount of abuse.

According to one officer, "Well, the abuse isn't as concentrated as it used to be, but it's still there. You can usually take personal abuse pretty easily; verbal, getting spit on, stuff like that. But it's when they start abusing your family, your wife, your kids, even verbally, that's hard to take. But you've got to be able to take it."

The Gay Rites of Spring-75

The fifth annual Spring Gay Festival of the Student Homophile League.

Fondly, we look back to the days of Christopher Street Liberation, when hundreds of gay brothers and sisters showed the world that they would no longer tolerate being in a class of "unspeakables". It was a great historical event in Gay history, and to this day we commemorate that day and its call to liberation during Gay Pride Week. The time had come at last for gay people to enter the humanity they had been deprived of for thousands of years.

Christopher Street set the pace for all that was to happen in the years since. Gay people all over this land became united in their proud struggle. This new freedom gave birth to the Gay Liberation Front here at UMass, later to be renamed as the Student Homophile League. The Student Homophile League set up headquarters in the Student Union, and all the gay people on this campus could at last come out of their closets and realize that they could be happy people with the support of a fine group of gay people.

The first Student Homophile League probably didn't know that they were beginning a strong tradition when they held a Gay Festival in the Spring of 1971, a weekend of celebration for their new found liberation. But the Student Homophile League of today cherishes more than ever their history and tradition of five years of existence. Each and every first weekend in May is our grandiose celebration of ourselves as gay sisters and brothers.

The Spring Gay Festival is a weekend of dancing, learning, feasting, and meeting new friends. People from all over New England know of this tradition and come to celebrate with us. It is a weekend that has been in the planning since September, which we all look forward to.

This year we are quite proud of the program we have to offer and we hope that everyone at the University can enjoy it and learn something from it.

The fee for the entire weekend is five dollars, a really worthwhile expense for a fun-filled weekend. Of course you can pay for each event if you should not desire to register. We also need a lot of help in giving visiting people housing: if you can help us at all please sign up on the housing list at registration. But most of all, bring yourselves and be ready for a big celebration.

THE ANDROMEDA STRAIN+++
Pretty fair science-fiction thriller by Michael Crichton turned into an even fairer movie by Robert Wise. A team of biological scientists race against their wristwatches in order to locate the source of a space germ which (you guessed it!) threatens to annihilate the world. Interesting and exciting enough to keep you absorbed, though, even though it's been on television twice. (MAHAR, 5-2, 6:30, 9, 11:30)

BLAZING SADDLES++++
Mel Brooks' finest achievement, and perhaps the funniest film since the Marx Brothers left us alone. (Mountain Farms Four).

BUSTER AND BILLIE+++
Another nostalgic romp down the paths of young flaming love. Spiced with the expected violence one usually sees in contemporary romps, even though it's dramatic impact is a little better in this case. Stars Jan-Michael Vincent, who we're all supposed to have heard of. (TONIGHT in the S.U.B. at 7 and 9).

CAPONE+
About the thirtieth in a series of most likely six hundred and forty-five bloody gangster films, this one starring, of all people, Ben Gazarra as famous Al himself. I respect Hollywood's perserverence, but there still hasn't been anything good since Bonnie and Clyde. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield).

CHINATOWN++++
Roman Polanski's latest, a departure from his supernatural tendencies, but still quite unusual. Jack Nicholson plays an eagle-eye detective who sticks his nose into the wrong case and pays for it in the end. Faye Dunaway is great as a millionairess haunted by a turbulent past. This film got royally ripped off at the Academy Awards, but we all know that doesn't mean shit to a tree; works of art cannot and should not be compared. (Campus Cinemas).

DODES-KA-DEN++++
Akira Kurosawa's first feature, and his first film in color. It depicts life in a Tokyo slum with gentle charm and as in most Kurosawa films, it shows how any living person can suffer through depressing times as long as his inner dreams and spirit pervade. (MAHAR TONIGHT at 7 & 9:35 for one dollar).

FUNNY LADY++
Yuk yuk.Barbara Streisand plays plays herself because she can't help it, and the results are only entertaining if you're middleaged. Most of us up here are not. (Showcase Cinemas).

GODFATHER II++++
Francis Coppola's final proof of his cinematic genius, just in case you missed the Conversation. Al Pacino takes on dramatic substance he lacked for much of part one, and the results are Oscar caliber. The idea to widen the scope by including scenes documenting the Corleones before and after Michael's rise is unique, establishing this as a real sequel. (Campus Cinemas).

THE GREAT WALDO PEPPER++
Robert Redford's blue eyes and America's blue skies collide in this tale about World War I flying aces and their aviation feats which follow the end of the War. All the action you'll see is in the coming attractions, so it might be wise to take in a movie where you know this one hasn't arrived yet. Directed by George Roy Hill.

HEARTS AND MINDS++++
Excellent documentary on the people of Vietnam and their contemporary misery as it should affect us over here. Made by the makers of TV's superb "Selling of the Pentagon", it couples human pathos with cinema verite skill. This is the film which caused a minor political fracas at the Oscar show, when asshole Bob Hope insisted that a statement declaring the Academy's noninvolvement be read. See it just to spite him. (Mountain Farms)

THE KID-THE IDLE CLASS+++
Two ancient Charlie Chaplin comedies, always refreshing. (S.U.B., 5-4, 7, 8:45, 10:30).

LENNY++++
Dustin Hoffman stars as the ultimate comic hero, Lenny Bruce, in this pseudo-documentary. Still available at the Mountain Farms Four.

MURDER ON THE ORIENT EXPRESS+++
Albert Finney as detective Hercule Poirot in this sparkling adaptation of Agatha Christie's mystery. An all-star international cast and outrageous costumes decorate the lens, which is already vaseline-coated. Directed by Sidney Lumet ("Serpico"). (Campus Cinemas and Academy of Music).

WR: MYSTERIES OF THE ORGANISM++++
A 1970 Yugoslavian political fantasy about Wilhelm Reich, the founder of orgone therapy. Susan Makavejev directs this original farce which offers an unusual blend of pornography with high-brow matters. Presented by Amherst Film Co-op in Herter Hall on 5-6.

SCENES FROM A MARRIAGE++++
Ingmar Bergman's fascinating study of love and marriage, starring Liv Ullman and Erland Josephsson. Bergie cut the original 6½ hour Swedish television version down to about three here, but it still retains its emotional impact, as every one of his masterpieces has managed to do somehow. (Amherst Cinema).

SHAMPOO++
The first film about a hairdresser features Warren Beatty as the scissorstud who keeps his customers after shop hours. Julie Christie, Goldie Hawn, and Lee Grant play his girlfriends in this tight, nicely photographed, but incredibly overrated saga of adultery, sex before marriage (ye gads!), and other assorted hot combs. (Showcase Cinemas).

TOMMY+++++ (the sky's the limit)
Reviewed in this issue. (Showcase Cinemas).

WHITE LIGHTNING+?+?
Just one look at the crotch-itching advertisements showing Burt Reynolds with his shirt open (what else is new?) should be enough to make all you banana-molesters run to the theatre. If not, then you're making a wise move. Burt takes craps just like anyone else. (Mountain Farms).

DEAN ALFANGE, JR., acting Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

Alfange takes over Provost duties, vows to assess budget implications

By BILL PARENT
MDC Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday named Dean Alfonge Jr. acting Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

Alfange is presently the dean of faculty of social and behavioral sciences in the College of Arts and Sciences. He will be replacing Robert L. Gluckstern who was recently appointed chancellor of the University of Maryland.

Alfange first came to UMass in 1967 as an assistant professor of constitutional law and civil liberties. In 1970 he was named an associate professor in the government department, and after being named acting dean of social and behavioral sciences he was appointed dean of that department in February 1971.

"My first major job will be to assess the impact of the budgetary stringency on Academics" Alfange said in a telephone interview yesterday. He said he believes it is his duty "to insure minimum adverse impact on existing programs" if budget cuts do occur. The Legislature is not expected to vote on the budget until this summer.

In making the appointment, Bromery cited Alfange's dedication and concern for the University as criteria for his selection.

"I know the area of academic administration is at a critical juncture in a critical time and Dean Alfange is accepting the task at great personal expense," said Bromery.

"I am confident he can count on full support from the council of deans, department heads and chairmen, the Faculty Senate, the general faculty and the broader university community".

Alfange is a graduate of Hamilton College, an Air Force veteran and did his graduate work at the University of Colorado and Cornell. Before coming to UMass, he taught at Lafayette College and has received many awards and fellowships as well as having written numerous publications.

Alfange will serve as acting provost for the next year while a nation wide search committee determines a replacement for Gluckstern.

Says he'll resign

O'Keefe elected SGA president

By MIKE FAY
Staff Reporter

The Student Government Association (SGA) finally elected president when John O'Keefe won a majority of votes in the third ballot of last night's SGA presidential election.

O'Keefe polled 48.6 votes, a half vote more than the majority needed to defeat Craig Ghodotti, who polled 28.3 votes.

O'Keefe, elected by a coalition of dormitory representatives and student senators said, "First of all, I'm going to resign as soon as possible so the students can have an open election. It should have been open to begin with."

Greek area representatives left the assembly as soon as O'Keefe's victory was announced. Craig Ghodotti is a member of the Greeks. But immediately after the election, Ghodotti could be seen congratulating O'Keefe.

The Orchard Hill representatives could not raise a quorum and were not able to vote. This subtracted six electoral votes from the election. Steve Freeman, the Orchard Hill presiding officer said the Orchard Hill absences were due to leaves of absences and students doing homework.

O'Keefe said he will probably resign in October. His term would normally run until June 1976.

The SGA election last night was the fourth attempt in eight days to elect a new undergraduate student president. O'Keefe and Ghodotti were standoff candidates among a field of five. Cindy McGrath, Peter Lewicke, and Tim O'Brien rounded out the field.

Last night before O'Keefe broke the eight day deadlock, newly elected Speaker of the Senate John Hite said that he would file a bill today providing for the popular election of the president in the event O'Keefe resigns next fall.

Hite said the bill would delete the present provision that stipulates an electoral voting process, and would bring the constitution into accord with the motion passed earlier this year requiring a popular election of Senate presidents beginning March 1976.

O'Keefe said he will put the SGA constitution up to a student referendum some time next fall. He said alternatives will be offered.

After the election O'Keefe said, "I ran on a platform of complete change, top to bottom.

Student employees await labor recognition

By CHRISTINE DILLARD
MDC Staff

BOSTON — Recognition of the Union for Student Employees (USE) by the Massachusetts Labor-Relations Commission will be delayed until a formal hearing now set for June 23.

USE and UMass Legal Counselors appeared before the Commission yesterday in Boston in an "informal hearing." UMass counselor for labor affairs Martin Skoler said, "We'll have to wait for a formal hearing. There's no other way."

Skoler said he had just received a petition for recognition and did not have time to thoroughly examine it. "We want to do it in a law-abiding fashion," he said. He added that it was a complex situation, and that there were other collective bargaining units with an interest in student employees. He cited the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) as one such unit.

He also said, "I have to examine the relationship between the students and the university." He called the situation of student workers "unique."

Lawyer for the Massachusetts State Employee Association Mark Dalton also appeared before commission examiner Mary Lally. "We wish to reserve our rights and submit a brief on whether the students are employees. We're taking no position at the moment."

The Massachusetts State Employee Association is the recognized bargaining agent for three collective bargaining units at UMass, including administrative, clerical and technical employees.

Dalton also said that if the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission does hold that students are employees and have collective bargaining rights, then the students fall into existing collective bargaining units.

Dukakis speaks here Monday

and RICHARD WRIGHT
MDC Staff

An appearance Monday on campus by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, planned three months ago, is now expected to become a forum for discussion of his proposed ten percent higher education budget cut.

Dukakis press spokesman David Sugarman yesterday confirmed that the governor will be speaking Monday at 8 p.m. in Mahar auditorium. At the same time, he described how the meat cleaver may fall at UMass.

Sugarman said that an administration budget prepared by Education Secretary Paul Parks "won't cut any student services."

He said a draft of the budget now before Dukakis cuts maintenance and "overhead" and calls for a "productivity increase" among University employees.

He said it also includes increases in scholarship aid, work study and library funds.

"If there's absolutely no way to come down with a ten percent cut without hurting student services, it won't be imposed," Sugarman said, adding that if that were the case, Dukakis might have to propose a tuition increase — "But it would be a graduated tuition increase."

Sugarman said Dukakis supports the concept of fiscal autonomy, but along with autonomy comes a responsibility to allocate funds wisely.

Fiscal autonomy is a Legislative grant of bulk appropriations to operating units like UMass, without specifying specific spending categories.

Priorities and specific expenditures are then determined by the agency. At UMass, trustees and President Robert C. Wood decide what the $101.4 million appropriated this year will be spent on.

The phrase "graduated tuition" used by Sugarman means setting tuition expenses according to each students ability to pay. By this method, students supported by wealthy parents would pay high tuition, while independent students with no source of income would pay the smallest.

Some students would still be eligible for scholarship.

The University administration has consistently opposed any suggestion of graduated tuition, because they feel it would unnecessarily complicate admissions and enrollment procedures and because it would be hard to figure out which students are supported by their parents.

On Dukakis' appearance, the Student Action Committee announced yesterday its intention to organize a rally outside Dukakis' eight o'clock Mahar appearance Monday.

The original sponsor of the Governor's talk, Orchard Hill Residential Area, and a professor who invited him to speak on campus in January both commented yesterday on the Governor's appearance.

The professor, Dr. Benjamin Ricci of Exercise Science, is President of the Belchertown Friends Assn., a parents' support group for the Belchertown State School for the Retarded.

Ricci invited Dukakis to speak in his class, "Society and the Outcast," on the delivery of human services in Massachusetts. But his brief talk will now include his rationale on budget cuts and a period of question and answers, according to Sugarman.

Ricci said he thinks UMass' "tradition of public service through its students and faculty should be acknowledged and supported."

Sugarman said Dukakis would not be available on campus before the eight o'clock talk.

UMass police chief David L. Johnston said no unusual precautions would be taken to protect the Governor during his visit. .

On whether Dukakis could be deterred by student demonstrations, Sugarman said: "I'm not sure it's even come up."

But, he said the Governor has never stayed away from an event because of anticipated demonstrations. Sugarman said Dukakis "anticipates more reasoned discourse" with students.

SAC to give Gov. message: Budget cut fight to continue

By DAN LaBONTE
Staff Reporter

A message to Governor Michael Dukakis saying that students will continue their "struggle" to oppose budget cuts will be sent to him via a rally outside Mahar Auditorium Monday night.

Plans for the rally were mapped out at a Student Action Committee (SAC) meeting yesterday and scheduled in conjunction with Dukakis' visit to UMass to explain his proposed budget cut and its relation to UMass.

The rally will include a series of speakers, singing and guerilla theater, and SAC hopes to provide an outside speaker system to enable those attending the rally to hear Dukakis speaking inside.

Future actions to be taken over the list of nine demands concerning students opposition to budget cuts will be further discussed. A report from two committees researching the possibility of a tuition boycott and the development of a network for student unionization will be heard at a meeting tomorrow, according to Mary Muirhead, a spokesperson for the Communications Committee of the SAC.

The State House Action Committee, a subgroup of SAC, is currently examining the state's budget and looking into alternatives to cuts in higher education and social service programs.

SAC members also decided at yesterday's meeting to send a delegation of students to a meeting called by Brown University and UMass-Boston scheduled for Sunday on the UMass-Boston campus. The meeting is designed "to discuss the student solidarity in fighting budget cutbacks, tuition hikes, and the defense of Third World, Women's, and other social service programs", Muirhead said.

A motion was made and unanimously passed to table any discussion concerning campus demonstrations and possible building take-over until Saturday meeting.

Teaching Assistants meet; discuss formation of union

By DENISE MATTEAU
Staff Reporter

Bread and butter issues were discussed yesterday in a meeting of about 15 teaching assistants contemplating forming a union.

The meeting in the Campus Center was the third and will be followed by others.

Issues talked about were — is pay proportionate to labor — cost of living raises — affirmative action — patronage — inadequate grievance procedures — class size and range of courses.

It was also announced that a request for funds for researching and organizing a union will be brought before the graduate Student Senate.

Anne Canal, a TA in the comparative literature department, said different avenues toward unionization will be explored.

"A TA union may be affiliated with the MTA (Massachusetts Teachers Association), she said, "But we'd have to wait until the faculty has won a collective bargaining vote on that issue. Other possibilities include affiliation with the AF of L through the American Federation of Teachers or affiliation with the student organizing project."

Others said that while a TA union would upgrade the status of undergraduate teaching, it may ignore the interest of non-teaching grad students.

According to Les Perelman, a TA in the Rhetoric department, who is also acting treasurer for the group, assistanceships presently pay a maximum of $3,600.00 a year for a workload which is equal to half of what a professor is expected to carry. "This is equal to only one third of the lowest-paid professor's salary", he said, "and is complicated by a catch-22; to hold the position requires that the assistant make normal academic progress, yet there is no attempt to relate the courses a TA teaches to that TA's Ph.D. work."

"Time is working against us," said Canal as the meeting drew to an end, "we need feedback. The school is starting to pull back on commitments to students, as the budget situated gets tighter."

UMass print shop offers low cost printing to patrons

The print shop located in 401 in the Student Union Building provides low cost printing services for student groups. "We print anything that needs to be printed for RSO groups," said David Rabinow, print shop manager.

The student senate lecture notes are also printed in the shop. Since it is a student senate funded operation, the print shop is "primarily used by RSO" according to Rabinow. However, anyone outside of RSO can also utilize the print shop at low cost rates.

The shop handles a volume of about 10,000 impressions (sides of paper) per week in addition to the lecture notes. The amount of lecture notes printed is also about 10,000 per week.

Seventy one students are employed by the print shop and lecture note service. The office is open 5 days a week from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Printing is done by an offset printing process. The offset process involves extensive use of photographic methods in printing. The image to be printed is produced by the use of a photographic plate, as opposed to a chemically engraved lead plate. The shop utilizes a Xerox machine in addition to the offset press. Xeroxing is primarily used to handle small quantity print orders.

This is the first semester that the print shop has been located near the Student Union balcony next to the academic affairs committee office. The print shop was originally housed where the People's Market exists now, and occupied the Room to Move office before moving to its present site.

Student sings of budget cut blues

By SAMUEL HASSAN
Staff Reporter

Monday afternoon, a woman from the Student Action Committee (SAC) called Richie Aaron. She asked him to play his guitar and sing at a rally on the Campus Center steps Tuesday night. She told him on the phone that she had heard him sing a song about the Amherst Towing Company, and asked him if he could write a protest song.

Monday night Aaron went to the organizational meeting for Wednesday's rally in Boston, and during the meeting he wrote the song. You may have heard it in the background of local television news reports from Boston Wednesday night, or maybe you sang it in the sunshine on Boston Common. It's called, "Listen To Us Mr. Legislature Man."

Dukakis says we ain't got no money
But some people seem to have it made
Mr. Wood why don't you sell your helicopter
And use the money for our financial aid

Aaron is a 19-year-old freshman English major living in Brown House. He was born and raised in Brooklyn, N.Y., and jokingly says, "to me it always seemed like a separate country."

About his choice in UMass Aaron said, "I wanted to get away from the city, and had heard how good the five college system was."

Aaron's younger brother David, 16, has visited UMass and is considering coming to school here. Along with David there is Lori, 6, and Joshua, 3, at home in Brooklyn.

"I fear the budget cuts," he says, "because if out-of-state tuition rises drastically, it would make things very difficult. As it stands right now, what people have to pay at this University is basically fair, but there's no reason why they should have to suffer for the poor distribution of wealth in this state or the country."

Listen to us Mr. Legislature man
Now we know that you're no fool
If you cut the budget to ribbons here
We'll all have to drop out of school

When he arrived at the buses beside Whitmore on Wednesday, Aaron didn't have his guitar with him. "They made me go back and get it," he said, "and I ended up playing first."

One particular chain of events at the rally really bothered him, saying, "First Bartley (House Speaker David M.) said he opposed the budget cuts, and everyone cheered. Then someone asked him to apologize for having called the strike a vacation, and he told us to pound sand. His sarcastic attitude really hurt alot of people. And he walked off smiling into the booing crowd. He was the stereotype of the appeasing politician. If I had a baby in my arms he would've tried to kiss it."

Aaron said he has written many lyrics, but only 7 or 8 have become songs with music. He has been playing the guitar for six years and said he never imagined it would be such an important thing in his life.

The words spring fever were mentioned and Aaron said, "I find myself stopping on my way to class at the campus pond, definitely because I carry my guitar with me."

An English major, he is writing songs and short stories now, but says, "I realize I can't count on earning a living this way, but I refuse to go out of my way to learn something I don't like just to make a lot of money in the future."

Between verses of Cat Steven's "A Boy With a Moon and a Star On His Head," he stops and says, "They keep saying education is the key, and then they keep changing the locks."

And then what will you do with us
With the locks you throw on every door
You'll find some fancy way to justify your lies
And try to throw us into another war.

★ O'Keefe elected

The student government structure is about twenty years behind the times."

O'Keefe said he will make all decisions on a collective basis. O'Keefe, an Army veteran said women, vets, blacks, third world students and all students would be represented in the SGA. He particularly supported the Union of Student Employees.

He said a restructuring of student committees would be the key to better government. "The main idea is to have task forces that are action oriented."

O'Keefe also said, "I'm not going to get into any arbitrary policy changes." He said he will not retain veto power over the collective cabinet he plans to install.

O'Keefe said the SGA would not be a parent organization to the students, but would offer the resources and expertise needed for independent student action.

After his victory, John O'Keefe said: "This was one bitch of an election. I'm glad I don't have to go through this every day."

Summing up his feelings on the election O'Keefe said, "I'm not going to compromise the beliefs of the people who backed me, my platform, or myself."

Howland wants investigation into role of Boston attorney

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

A lawyer here has lodged a complaint with the federal Department of Justice and has demanded an investigation into the role a Boston U.S. Attorney played in making financial records of the School of Education unavailable to the public and press.

Richard M. Howland of Amherst lodged a complaint with Edward H. Levi, attorney general of the Department of Justice, regarding the conduct of James N. Gabriel for his part in issuing two subpoenas and disregarding regular Massachusetts state judicial procedures.

Howland defended a Collegian reporter, William P. Densmore, Jr., in a civil action suit seeking access to School of Education records that the University officials said were not at the time public documents.

The FBI has been investigating misuse of federal grant funds at the School for three months.

A superior Court judge from Northampton handed down a judgement which ordered UMass to release the records previously closed to the public.

Howland, who has waived a fee in this case, is asking for an inquiry into — — the origin and revision of the two subpoenas and who formulated them. The first subpoena was issued the day after Densmore made a written request to UMass Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson. The day of the hearing a second all encompassing subpoena was issued.

— the decision to participate in the state case. At the hearing assistant U.S. Attorney William A. Brown was present and offered his view of the case on its merits to the court, but did not enter a brief.

— the decision to disregard the court's judgement by "using armed forces in the form of personnel of the FBI and forcibly and contemptuously removing selected records which were subject to the court order. FBI agents were on campus last week taking records to Boston. However, it was reported that the grand jury sitting in Boston voted to release most of the records that detail $15 million of federal grant money expenditures over a five year period.

— the ethics of the members of the U.S. Attorney's office on who made these decisions.

The letter was also sent to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti, District Attorney John M. Callahan and Representative Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield).

Viet Cong announce full control in Vietnam

Businesses to be nationalized

Compiled from Wires

The Viet Cong announced yesterday they had won complete control of South Vietnam and issued a series of policy decrees stressing revolutionary government and an end to 10 years of U.S. influence. A broadcast warned people against "acting like Americans."

Among the decrees was an order nationalizing virtually all the country's business and industry, the Cuban news agency reported.

In a dispatch from Saigon, renamed Ho Chi Minh City, the agency said the order covered banks, transportation, factories, farms, U.S.-owned firms and property belonging to officials of the former regime.

North Vietnam demanded that U.S. warships withdraw from areas off the coast and halt what it called "forcible evacuation" of Vietnamese who, according to the Pentagon, have been fleeing in rafts and small boats into the South China Sea.

A North Vietnamese Foreign Ministry statement broadcast by Hanoi said the Navy's presence and the announced U.S. policy of picking up refugees from the sea constituted "criminal" interference in the internal affairs of South Vietnam.

The Pentagon said 18,000 fleeing South Vietnamese had been picked up by a flotilla of U.S. Navy ships from sampans, rafts and other boats in the past few days in addition to the 6,000 Vietnamese and third nation nationals and 1,000 Americans evacuated by helicopter from Saigon.

In Washington, Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger said that at most there were one or two ships remaining which might still pick up refugees. The others are now headed eastward away from the waters of Indochina, he said.

A communique issued by the new Saigon military management committee laid down regulations for public order, among them that "all activities of houses of prostitution, dance halls, smoking dens, and all decadent slave cultural activities of the American variety are strictly forbidden."

A Viet Cong broadcast from Ho Chi Minh City said the conquest of South Vietnam was completed with the disbanding of four divisions of the South Vietnamese army in the Mekong Delta. There was no mention of any fighting.

Radio Hanoi said last night that "millions and millions" of persons poured into the streets in North Vietnam to celebrate the "great victory of the nation."

The Viet Cong dropped the word "provisional" from their official name to become the Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam. Under its new title the regime broadcast a policy manifesto promising equality, religious freedom, full employment, education, public welfare and a "revolutionary government."

Indochina developments

Aid bill defeated

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In an action President Ford called unworthy of a people symbolized by the Statue of Liberty, the House yesterday defeated a bill authorizing $337 million in humanitarian aid and evacuation costs for South Vietnamese refugees.

"This action does not reflect the values we cherish as a nation of immigrants," Ford said in a statement. "It is not worthy of a people who has lived by the philosophy symbolized in the Statue of Liberty."

M.D.'s wait for refugees

ARANYAPRATHET, Thailand [UPI] — Red Cross doctors and French officials waited vainly in 100-degree heat yesterday for a first group of about 100 refugees making an overland trip to Thailand from the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh where they were trapped for two weeks in the French Embassy.

When the refugees had failed to arrive by sunset, officials and air conditioned buses waiting to transport the refugees to Bangkok left this frontier crossing point.

Regime recognized

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The United Nations recognized the Khmer Rouge National Union of Cambodia yesterday as the legitimate government of the country.

A message from Sarin Chhak, Foreign minister of the new regime, was received late Wednesday but not announced until yesterday because Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, in Vienna for Cyprus talks, had not been told of it, U.N. spokesman William C. Powell said.

South Vietnamese priests reach the USS Mobile in the South China Sea by travelling in a small fishing boat. They were fleeing the country after the takeover by the Communists.

Secret bargain pledges U.S. aid, says Zumwalt

By United Press International

The Nixon administration promised South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu - without informing Congress - that it would "respond vigorously" to any Communist violation of the peace agreement, retired Adm. Elmo Zumwalt said yesterday.

At the same time, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., urged that Congress investigate commitments to the Thieu government, and that the Ford administration provide all documents dealing with that subject.

Zumwalt, former chief of naval operations, told UPI's Steven W. Colford in an interview in Richmond, Va., that President Richard M. Nixon and Henry A. Kissinger told him and other top military officials about the agreement in late 1972.

"The Nixon-Kissinger administration must bear a large share of the blame for the fact that Congress failed to honor those commitments that had been made in the name of the country," Zumwalt said.

"A commitment could not be considered a national commitment without the support of the congressional leadership."

Zumwalt's disclosure followed a former South Vietnamese Cabinet member's release in Washington Wednesday of two letters Nixon sent to Thieu just before the signing of the 1973 peace accords in which he pledged "swift and severe retaliatory action" against any Communist truce violation.

Americans' reactions to refugees mixed

United Press International

Many Americans, remembering their country's heritage as a haven for homeless exiles, yesterday warmed to the plight of thousands of Vietnamese refugees arriving in the land behind "the golden door."

But others asked, "Why are they coming here?"

The flow of refugees into Camp Pendleton, Calif., passed the 5,000 mark yesterday with another 1,500 expected before nightfall.

More than 1,300 - wives, children and in-laws of Americans - already have been processed through the makeshift camp at the huge Marine Corps base and left for homes across the country.

As the planes arrived at a rate of more than one an hour, the percentage of homeless refugees increased.

Some of them had sponsors in this country but many did not and they formed a semipermanent corps at Pendleton. Nine volunteer groups under the umbrella of the American Council of Volunteer Agencies were operating at the camp, trying to find sponsors.

Hundreds of the refugees were being housed, 40 persons to a quonset hut, in a vacant training center that lies across a rolling, scrub-covered plain only a few miles inland from the Pacific Ocean.

It is the first of three such centers at Camp Pendleton, in what has been named "Operation New Horizons."

All of the expected 60,000 to 70,000 refugees will be routed through the base. After processing, they will be passed on to the two other centers - Ft. Chafee, Ark., where the first group was scheduled to arrive Friday, and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., where the first group was to arrive Saturday.

The refugees faced a mixed reception.

In Barling, Ark., near Ft. Chaffee, Mrs. Johnnie Calhoun said she and some of her neighbors will be out with protest signs when the first contingent of refugees arrives.

"They say it's a lot colder here than it is in Vietnam," she said. "With a little luck, maybe they'll take pneumonia and die."

Brandeis students still in building

University lawyers seek contempt order

WALTHAM [AP] — Students ignored a court order to leave a Brandeis University building yesterday and a meeting between their representatives and college officials ended along with an amnesty period.

An estimated 35 to 40 students, calling themselves the Student Action Committee, seized Pearlman Hall Tuesday morning to protest planned budget cuts.

A spokesman for Brandeis said apparently no one had left or entered the building since, and more than 100 students were gathered around the outside of the office and classroom building.

The university obtained a temporary restraining order in Superior Court at Cambridge on Wednesday telling the students to leave.

Lawyers for the university returned to the same court yesterday to seek a contempt of court citation against those in the building.

A hearing on the request was continued until this afternoon.

Brandeis officials had agreed to forget about punishment of the students if they left the building by 10:30 a.m., Thursday.

The university's faculty senate passed a resolution late Thursday afternoon urging an end to the occupation of the building. The resolution termed the takeover as detrimental to the welfare of the college community.

Before Wednesday's court order was issued, students in the building said they were willing to be arrested and would not leave until serious negotiations began.

Brandeis President Marver H. Bernstein said in a statement to the protesters Wednesday, "The illegal seizure and occupation of Pearlman Hall by students is disruptive, obstructive and in violation of the protest and demonstration regulations of the university."

A Brandeis spokesman said a $2 million reduction to the proposed $31 million for next year would not affect students and that scholarship aid would be increased. The cuts were in administrative areas, he said.

A student statement said that because of budget cuts, "The student body will tend to become richer and whiter, the number of faculty members will be decimated, and the school's minimal commitments to society will disappear."

Dukakis asks for raise in gas, cigarette tax

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis broke his own no-new-tax campaign pledge yesterday and said he wants increases in both the gasoline and cigarette taxes to pay interest on borrowing to balance the state's books.

The governor told legislators the state's budget deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30 is now some $450 million.

For the first time in state history, Dukakis wants the commonwealth to borrow that amount and raise taxes to pay the annual interest of $67.5 million over a four-year period.

He said he will file legislation Friday for an increase of four cents per gallon in the present state tax of 7½ cents per gallon of gasoline. He will also seek a 5 - cent - per - pack increase in the present 16 - cent - per - pack cigarette tax.

The proposed increases would raise the average cost of a full tank of gasoline by about 80 cents.

Pack-a-day cigarette smokers would pay about $18 more per year under the governor's plan.

The governor told legislators he has no choice but to make his tax requests, and that they have little choice but to approve them, along with his bonding scheme.

"It's a very sober message," he told reporters.

Without legislative support, he said, hospitals, pharmacists, doctors and nursing homes awaiting state payments will not get money owed to them and checks for welfare recipients will stop May 31.

Dukakis said he has cut state spending, travel expenses, hiring and overtime. But "despite the savings of approximately $70.5 million ... the amount of the deficiency increased rather than decreased."

The governor said that the alternative to borrowing is a massive tax package of more than $400 million.

The governor did not say whether new taxes will be needed to meet state commitments in fiscal 1976 which begins July 1.

Initial legislative reaction in the Senate was non-committal.

But Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, said the governor had no choice but to make his borrowing-tax proposals, and he thinks the Senate will approve them.

Approval by the Massachusetts House, however, was considered less certain.

The bonding request requires two-thirds legislative approval. Tax increases require only a majority.

"The mood of the Senate probably would be to vote for the taxes by a comfortable majority," Harrington said. "The bonds, with some struggle, probably would get through the Senate, but first the House has to approve them."

The Montreal Committee for Soviet Jewry staged a noontime rally yesterday to dramatize the human rights for Soviet Jewry. About 400 attended the demonstration.

State Senate upholds death penalty veto

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate has sustained a veto of a bill providing the death penalty for nine kinds of murder, thus defeating the measure.

Yesterday's 26-14 vote in favor of overriding the veto was one vote short of the necessary two-thirds margin.

As the roll call neared completion, Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, who by custom does not vote, rose dramatically to cast the deciding ballot. It was his first vote this year.

The Senate vote followed by a day a 156-58 House roll call in favor of overturning the veto by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The Senate will take up a motion to reconsider its vote and revive the bill on Monday.

After the vote, Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, said he planned parliamentary moves which would keep the bill alive.

He said he planned to table the bill when it is reconsidered next week, a move that would take a simple majority, and could then remove the bill from the table whenever a senator who opposes it was absent.

With the vote to override the veto so close, just one absentee could swing the balance.

The mandatory punishment bill was proposed in an effort to meet the objections of the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled in 1972 that state laws were applied capriciously.

Dukakis vetoed it the minute it reached his desk Tuesday, citing moral and constitutional objections to the death penalty.

news summary

UNH strike defeated

DURHAM, N.H. [AP] — Student government representatives at the University of New Hampshire have voted down a proposal to conduct a campus strike as a way of showing opposition to legislative cuts in the school's budget.

But the students agreed Wednesday night to actively support the university's budget proposals, scheduling a rally and trip to the legislature for next week.

The student caucus voted unanimously to adopt a resolution calling the operating and construction budget requests of the university system "reasonable, logical and essential."

11.8% unemployed

BOSTON [AP] — Unemployment in Massachusetts jumped to 11.8 per cent of the workforce in March with 341,000 persons jobless, the state Division of Employment Security reported yesterday.

Unemployment in February stood at 11 per cent, with 320,500 persons out of work.

"The March estimate of unemployment grew by 20,500, reflecting an increase of 16,000 recipients in various federal extended benefits programs," DES Director John D. Crosier said in a news release.

Sadat addresses U.S.

By United Press International

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat called on the United States yesterday to complete its Mideast policy reappraisal and say "in black and white" where it stands in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

In a May Day speech at Assiut Sadat also said the Soviet Union has so far balked at Egyptian requests to defer payments on Cairo's debt, believed to total $5 or $6 billion.

He also complained the Soviet Union still refused to replace Egypt's war losses despite arms shipments in January.

Sadat pledged to maintain good relations with both the United States and the Soviet Union, saying it was not in Egypt's interest to antagonize either superpower.

Doctors strike

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Anesthetists boycotted operating rooms and surgeons laid down their scalpels here yesterday in a mounting national protest by doctors against skyrocketing malpractice insurance rates.

The strike had an immediate impact on the sick and infirm. Cancer surgery and giving birth did not qualify as "extreme emergencies" and could not get anesthetist services.

Hospitals limited admissions to emergency cases and began laying off scores of operating room aides, nurses and other personnel.

Survey shows students favor shared decision-making

Students at UMass are very much in favor of making joint decisions with the faculty and administration, according to a survey completed in March.

The campus-wide, random mail survey was carried out by students Robert Kagan and Nat Ruccolo under the direction of Professor John H. Fenton. It was deisgned to measure attitudes on political and life-style issues.

Respondents answered questions about faculty matters, the value of the University educational process, race, campus and drug issues.

On the question of student evaluation of professors, 52 per cent were strongly in favor ot it; 45 per cent favored it; 2 per cent, opposed; 2 per cent, strongly opposed, and 1 per cent, no answer.

Fifty-seven per cent of the students surveyed felt faculty promotion, tenure and dismissal should be decided jointly by students, faculty and administration, but 36 per cent favored only student advisory participation. Five per cent believed there should be no student involvement; 1 per cent, student decision only, and 1 per cent, no answer.

In matters of long-range University planning, 68 per cent of the respondents felt students, faculty and administration should make decisions jointly. Thirty per cent favored student advisory participation; 1 per cent, no student involvement, and 1 per cent, no answer. None surveyed believed long-range planning should be carried out by students alone.

Of those surveyed, 56 per cent felt University business decisions such as departmental allocations should be made jointly with faculty and administration. Thirty-two per cent supported student advisory participation; 8 per cent, no student involvement; 3 per cent, no answer, and 1 per cent, student decision only.

Of those surveyed, 48 per cent believed the University's contribution to the student's personal development is high; 36 per cent thought it medium; 14 per cent, low; 2 per cent, no answer.

Fifty-eight per cent of the students thought the University had been valuable to their future plans; 22 per cent, not very valuable; 4 per cent, irrelevant to future plans; 3 per cent, damaging to plans; 13 per cent, no answer.

Asked their political ideology, 51 per cent of the respondents said they were liberal; 19 per cent, conservative 6 per cent, radical left; 1 per cent, radical right, and 23 per cent other.

In attitudes toward race relations and drugs, 47 per cent said they believed black people are treated unfairly in the United States; 19 per cent said blacks received preferred treatment; 16 per cent said blacks were treated fairly; 18 per cent, other.

Of those who responded, 43 per cent said blacks were treated fairly on the Amherst campus; 40 per cent, preferred treatment; 8 per cent, unfairly; 9 per cent, other.

The students backed the legalized sale of marijuana. Sixty-six per cent favored it; 25 per cent opposed; 9 per cent had no answer.

The students also answered questions on campus issues in the survey. The questions dealt with bus service, dormitories, food services, student-owned credit union and the student senate.

The survey was sent to 321 students living on campus. One hundred eight, or 34 per cent, responded. The survey contained a 9 per cent margin of error.

Faculty Senate approves enrolling, department motions

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

The Faculty Senate approved in yesterday afternoon's meeting two motions encompassing graduate and undergraduate enrollment planning, the formation of two new academic departments and the restructuring of one existing department.

The Senate passed a motion approving a special report from the Graduate Countil which outlines policy governing UMass graduate school enrollment.

The report, prepared by the Graduate Council's ad hoc committee on admissions policy, outlines a system of determining enrollment targets with sufficient flexibility so that the upper limit on enrollment will remain negotiable.

The Senate also passed a motion accepting the report of the program and budget council outlining plans for meeting future enrollment in undergraduate, graduate, and continuing education programs at UMass.

The report anticipates gradual increase of applications from new freshmen, a "steep increase" of transfer applications from community colleges, and "steep increase" in applications for graduate programs in excess of spaces available.

The report also anticipates an increase in applications from part-time students enrolled in programs like University Without Walls.

Assuming that the 25,000 enrollment ceiling, will remain in effect, the report states that enrollments can be accommodated without construction of new facilities.

In other action, the Senate approved the transfer of the communication disorders area from the department of communication studies to the School of Health Sciences.

The Senate also approved formation of a department of sport studies and for a department of professional preparation in physical education and dance.

The USE attorney, who asked not to be identified, said that the campus center is an "autonomous complex." He added that student and hourly employees are not represented by any other bargaining unit.

Responding to the hearing chairperson Michael Bardsley said "We had hoped that the university administration would recognize a need for an employee organization for students and hourlies." He added he was not surprised by the "stalling tactics" of the administration which will delay action until summer when most of the student work force is no longer on campus.

USE membership coordinator Chrissi Emerson said, "We hoped to see definitive action, but we're patient". Over 60 per cent of the Campus Center employees have signed cards applying for membership to the union, she added. The cards also call for an election.

According to Bardsley, 30 per cent of the work force is all that is necessary to legally call for an election and 50 per cent is enough to be formally recognized.

The Campus Center Board of Governors last week endorsed the USE and urged the administration not to contest their recognition. A recent UMass town meeting also give its endorsement.

USE representative Jimmy O'Brien said, "I could see a one day recognition strike."

Also present at the hearing were UMass Labor Relations Coordinator Harold S. Overing, Director of Personnel and Financial Services John DeNyse, and Personnel Officer for the Amherst campus Robert Garstka.

C.R.E.O. forms UMass chapter to aid ex-cons

The Committee to Re-involve Ex-Offenders (CREO) is forming a UMass campus chapter to work on the human rights aspect of prisons as well as formulating alternatives to incarceration.

The group will be working towards making rehabilitation a priority issue through public education. The CREO was started in July 1974 by members of the Church of Scientology. It is made up of concerned private citizens, professional people and more recently, students have begun to join in through campus groups.

An organizational meeting will be held on Monday at 7:00 p.m. in room 175 Campus Center.

Amherst planners oppose article objecting to JFK libe

The Amherst Planning Board has voted to oppose an article on the Town Meeting warrant which objects to locating the John F. Kennedy library here.

The Selectmen likewise voted against the Petition article.

Chairman of the board said the other members agreed that economic and educational benefits of the library would outweigh any negative aspects.

Replicotta: Traditional African Art

A new and exciting art form has recently appeared on the Philadelphia scene. This work of sculptured pieces of art, fashioned in West African tradition. Included in this collection which the artist calls REPLICOTTA are: totems depicting symbolic events such as marriage, birth and the family; symbolic doors; panels of royal figures and warriors; figured bowls and tribal masks. Some are replicas of famous pieces, while others represent the artist's creative contribution based on the traditional art styles.

The most amazing aspect of the collection is the medium. What is it? Is it hard wood, polished and shellacked? or is it copper? or is it bronze? It has a strong appearance and seems to be permanent artifacts.

However, this common medium in the hands of this artist is raised to a new level of flexibility and interest. The medium itself is produced from old newspapers, discarded egg cartons and other disposed of items destined for trash. It is similar to paper mache.

It is not surprising that Babu (Deloris Washington) developed this new form. At the age of 29, she has developed to be a skillful and finely trained artist who through all of her extensive training has studied under important black artists. Her style has grown and evolved from one significant stage to the next, in such a dynamic and subtle fashion that the earlier works seem to have no connection to the later. The truth is that upon closer scrutiny it becomes stimulatingly clear that each stage in her work has given birth to the next because her work represents her total being. It is a style proceeding from years of working with ghetto youth, from a person dedicated to enable them to form their dreams into objects that proudly reflect their lives. She has lived and worked in Los Angeles, New York, and is presently resident in Philadelphia with her four year old son Che and two year old daughter Nyamekye.

This introductory statement is concluded by a comment about her work in her own words:

My work exposes the beginning of a spiritual pursuit of an ancient echo, an echo whose resounding eeriness forces me to delve deeper into its being. Its melodious throbbings have emerged through the form of papier-mache, a medium I have chosen to express the sensitive sounds of the rhythms of a past — my past — our past, indeed, all that was once — THE BEGINNING.

B.S.S. presents Honoraria

By Black News Service

The Black Scientist Society of The University of Massachusetts will be presenting its Third Annual Honoraria. It will be held on May 9 and May 10. The theme of this year's program will be "Contemporary Health in Black America". The Program will feature Dr. Robert Murray of Howard University who will speak on the topic of "Genetic Screening", a reception will follow. The event will be held on the first floor of Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m. May 9, 1975. May 10 will consist of a series of workshops also dealing with "Contemporary Problems in Black America". The workshops are from 1:00 p.m. to 4 p.m. All aspects of science and its relationship to the black community will be presented. The workshops will be held in Herter Hall Rooms 210-219. There will be a banquet following the Workshops.

All those who attend the workshops will be presented an invitation to the banquet free of charge. The program will be extremely beneficial for those who have an interest in their community and in the scientific arena. Everyone is cordially invited to attend the series of events. We hope to see you there.

Beareather Reddy recital

Beareather Reddy has decided to become a singing actress who dances. In order to prepare for such a career, one must study major courses in three different departments or programs: Music, Drama and Dance. The most practical way of accomplishing such an aim is to convince the director of the B.D.I.C. program that such a broad-based curriculum can be drawn up with integrity, you can pass the courses and make a living at what you have studied. This is exactly what Beareather had done, and will show evidence of her skill tonight, May 2, 1975, when she will be presented in a B.D.I.C. Graduation Recital in the Rehearsal Hall, Room 248 of the Fine Arts Complex.

The theme of the recital is Black Women In America, focusing on the Afro-American female in the Slavery period, the beginning of the free period (1865 onward), the Black woman in transition (1930-1960), and the contemporary Black female. Songs, dances and monologues characterizing the Black woman during these epochs have been combined into a short one-woman show divided into four parts.

Beareather has been coached for the recital in drama by Paul Carter Harrison, dance by Diana Ramos and in Music by Horace Clarence Boyer and Archie Shepp.

The public is cordially invited to attend the recital, which is open to the public without charge.

Mass rally

The following news and information is special to the Black News Service from the Third World Newletter at Hampshire College.

The overt use of systematic repression in the Third World community, in general, and the Puerto Rican enclaves specifically, has resulted in the murder of Rafael Lacodet in the Springfield, Massachusetts area.

Because of this incident and other acts of police brutality, members of the Puerto Rican community have gotten together and formed the organization known as the Puerto Rican Coalition.

In response to their efforts of mobilizing popular support for the demands presented to the Springfield police department by them people from the Five-College area are asked to demonstrate in solidarity with the Puerto Rican community on May 3, 1975. The Mass Rally will take place at 10:30 p.m. at SAU Dwight St., Springfield. Cars and vans will be leaving from the Hampshire College Bus Stop at 9:30 and at 10:00 a.m.

For more information contact Bobby Doughtie or Camilo Perez.

On May 8-10 the Five College Native American Support Committee will be sponsoring a three day Celebration of Native American Life and Culture. The three days will offer insights into contemporary Native America — insights seldom available in the Pioneer Valley.

BNS

There will be a meeting of all Black News Service staff members today at 3:30 p.m. It is imperative that all concerned people attend and support the activities of the organization. As you know, BNS, due to an increase in work and the rise in demand for more news related announcements and press releases, have begun publishing a weekly newspaper called NUMMO NEWS. Now more than ever before, are we calling for an increase number of staff workers. Your concern, will ensure our success. For more information please call us at 545-0794 or mail rm. 103, New Africa House.

Notice

Nummo newspaper will be available today at 3:00 p.m. in room 115, New Africa House. For more information call 545-0794.

Public college 'summit conference' meets tomorrow

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

Leaders, legislators and others interested in public higher education in the Bay State will gather at Bunker Hill Community College in Charlestown tomorrow morning to spend most of the day talking about fiscal autonomy and other issues.

The "summit conference" was set up by UMass President Robert C. Wood at the request of Senate President Kevin B. Harrington (D - Salem). Harrington says the conference is needed because he feels it will dispel tension between the Legislature and higher education over budget issues.

Some legislators feel UMass has been less than candid in its dealings with them, and UMass officials feel the legislature does not understand the importance of fiscal autonomy.

The term describes the allocation of a lump sum for UMass and higher education by the Legislature where the actual spending categories and amounts are left up to the institutions themselves. UMass says it allows "flexibility" not possible with line-item budgeting.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is expected to speak at tomorrow's summit, as is Education Secretary Paul Parks. The two have called for a ten percent cut in higher education spending and are said to believe UMass has too many administrators goofing off.

About 150 legislators, trustees, administrators and some students are to attend the summit, but both Harrington and Wood have discouraged massive public attendance because they want to avoid the formalities of a large gathering.

"Invitations to attend were mailed to public higher education executives, members of the boards of trustees and legislators concerned with financial and educational matters," according to John Abbot, a spokesman for Senate President Harrington.

"I think the intention of this session is to get leaders and executive leaders together," Abbot added. "Students will be represented although only insomuch as they are represented on the boards of trustees."

A morning panel on "fiscal autonomy and the management of financial resources" will feature UMass President Wood; Donald Walters, acting provost of the state college system; William Dwyer, president of the community college system; Donald Walker, president of Southeastern Mass. University; Everett Olson, president of Lowell Technological Institute; and Patrick McCarthy, chancellor of the board of higher education, which oversees all the institutions.

An afternoon panel will feature House Speaker David Bartley (D - Holyoke); Sen. Walter Bovernini (D - Lynn), and Rep. Michael Daly (D - Brighton), chairmen of the Legislature's joint committee on education; Sen. James Kelly (D - Oxford), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee; and Rep. George Keverian (D - Everett), vice-chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Health center approved

The UMass Division of Public Health, School of Health Sciences, has been accredited by a major national association.

The Council on Education for Public Health, headquartered in Washington, D.C., has notified Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery that the Division has been granted status equivalent to that of a school of public health.

Dr. William A. Darity, director of the Division of Public Health and Dean of the School of Health Sciences, said the Division now ranks with schools of public health such as those at University of California-Berkeley, UCLA, Columbia, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, University of Michigan, University of Minnesota, University of North Carolina, University of Pittsburgh, Tulane, and Yale.

Darity said in order to be accredited the Division submitted a self-evaluation study to the Council. The Council, in turn, followed up the study with a campus site visit by a team of four public health academicians and practitioners and one general university educator. The team then presented a report to the Council which then notified the University of its decision.

The Council on Education for Public Health is a non-profit corporation established by the American Public Health Association and the Association of Schools of Public Health.

UMass Police undergo rigorous examinations before being chosen

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

The UMass Police Department's selection process for its patrolmen is extensive, mainly because police work is "people oriented", according to Saul Chafin, assistant director of the department of Public Safety, on campus.

"Anyone can apply for police work, but the requirements are strict here," he said.

There are usually 120 applicants for every two openings, Chafin added.

The selection process begins with a written exam. The candidate must achieve a certain score on this exam, before he can continue in the process. Chafin said the rating score alters according to the number of applicants.

The written exam entails understanding of how to cope with interpersonal situations.

"How the applicant reacts in a hypothetical situation; is he too lenient or too stringent? Can he talk to people. That's what counts," Chafin said.

Having passed the written exam, the applicant must take an oral exam. It deals basically with the same ideas the written exam dealt with, Chafin continued.

While the testing is going on, the department conducts an extensive background investigation on the remaining applicants.

"The background check includes looking into academic records, criminal records, credit and health records, and job and neighbor references," said Chafin.

Next, is the psychological exam, conducted by psychologist Dr. John Hornaday from Babston Institute. Each candidate has an interview with Hornaday, lasting a minimum of one hour.

"Hornaday does not see the background reports until after the interview. In that way, he can't be biased," Chafin added.

After the interview, the Hornaday evaluates the candidates. The Director of Public Safety at UMass, David Johnston, has the final say on who is admitted into the force.

The final candidates then must participate in a training program that entails 400 hours of instruction.

"The minimum number of hours required by law is about 240. We give them more than they need," Chafin commented.

While in the training program, Chafin stressed the idea that the policemen are on a six month probation period.

"We have turned people out of the academy, on occasion, if they don't meet the required standards."

The hours of training include instruction in: human relations, techniques of police and student interaction; first aid; practical patrol exercise and technique; criminal investigation; drug identification; and alcohol education.

The training program is either conducted on campus or at the Holyoke Police Academy. Presently, there are two trainees who will be graduating from the Academy Friday.

This program of selection has been practiced for approximately the last three years, according to Chafin.

Previously, no psychiatric tests or extensive background checks were required.

"I feel the process is much better than before. Some of the people were appointed police with virtually no training." said Chafin.

In comparing the UMass Police Department's selection process to others, Chafin said he thinks it is similar to those conducted at the Hartford and Springfield Police Departments.

"I know Amherst isn't that extensive, because I've been trying to get them to enforce the psychology for a while now", he said.

Sylvanite ousted for tampering with elevator

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

Tampering with an elevator was the reason a Cashin resident was kicked out from the residence hall system last week, according to Bob Fowler, assistant area director for Sylvan.

The Cashin resident, who shall remain nameless, was caught by a Sylvan area security person and the Sylvan business manager last week. The person was reported to Sandy Anderson, Cashin head of residence, who reported the person to Ken Burnham, Sylvan area director. Burnham ejected the person from the residence hall system.

No criminal action will be taken against the individual, who tampered with the elevator, without damaging it, said Fowler.

He added that under state law any damage over $15 constitutes a felony.

This isn't an easy way to get out of the dorm system, since your money isn't refunded and you face possible suspension from the University, Fowler said.

According to Fowler, the immediate removal of the person from the residential hall system falls under the code of students, part 1, stated in the University publication Directions.

It says that when an individual endangers another or causes physical harm to another person, it is a violation of dormitory safety and health regulations. By violating these rules he can be removed from the residence hall system, under part 2 section 3 of the code of conduct, which specifies this.

A review board, appointed by the Vice Chancellor, will examine the case for procedural review, according to William Field, dean of students.

This board, made up of staff members, will decide if the student in question will be suspended for creating a hazard to the campus, he said.

Since the semester is ending, this final procedure will probably not occur until the summer, he added.

"I hope this will act as a deterrent to others," Fowler said.

Sweetpie will perform as planned

By BRUCE FREDERICK
Staff Reporter

Sweetpie will be permitted to perform at the Campus Center this weekend as originally scheduled, according to UMass police.

Sweetpie was arrested Tuesday for shoplifting in the University Store and charged with trespassing. At that time, it was not clear whether or not he would be permitted to come on campus for his shows, but UMass has since decided to lift the trespass charge for the three days of his engagement. The charge will be reinstated after the weekend.

On Thursday, Paul Doherty, Chief of the Capitol Police in Boston, contacted David Johnston, Director of UMass police, to congratulate the performance of the Student Marshalls at Wednesday's Budget Cut Rally. He also praised John Hite, Speaker of the Senate, for his efforts in keeping the rally orderly and peaceful.

Johnston and Asst. Director Saul Chafin, who were present at the rally, echoed Doherty's feelings, saying that the "marshalls and the students really had their stuff together."

U.S.E.holds convention

The Union of Student Employees (USE) will hold its first Convention on Sunday, May 4th, in the Commuter Lounge. The day's events will open at 10:30 AM with an important report: The standing of the USE as an exclusive bargaining representative of all student employees and hourly workers of the Campus Center complex.

During the afternoon, workshops will be held where workers and their area representatives may express their thoughts on their jobs. From this gathering would come proposals for a contract. Other informal workshops concerning labor relations and unionization are scheduled. Interesting speakers will also talk to the group.

Later in the afternoon, employees will nominate and elect an executive board for the coming year. The Convention will close with dinner, music and celebration. All student and hourly employees are urged to attend in support of the Union.

Cooperation Conference Sat.

A Five College Conference on Student Cooperation will be held at Hampshire College tomorrow from 1:00 to 4:30 p.m. The conference is open to all five college students, and is to be held in Franklin Patterson Hall, the West Lecture Hall.

After introductory remarks by Hampshire Community Council members, individual caucuses from each of the colleges will meet separately to discuss present and potential relations among the five colleges. The main order of business is the consideration of a proposal by Hampshire students concerning the establishment of a Committee for Five College Student Cooperation.

An experimental Wind Furnace System will be built on campus, hopefully before the end of 1975. The system comes as a result of work done by a broadly-based research team here at UMass in recent years.

Professor William E. Heronemus of the Civil Engineering Department, one of the many people involved in the project, told the Collegian that a house, heated entirely by alternative energy sources should be "built and operating by Christmas of this year."

The purpose of the house is to demonstrate the practicability of using a windmill, supplemented by the use of a solar collecter, to heat a building. The windmill, as used in this system, will not be used to provide electrical power. Instead, it will be hooked-up to resistance heaters which in turn will heat up the water in the storage area in the basement of the house. All the heating and hot water needs of the building will be pumped through the house from this source.

The solar plate is just a secondary means for heating, using the sun's heat to heat up the water.

The building itself, a wooden house devised and built by Professor Curtis Johnson of the Agricultural Engineering Dept., has been designed for minimum heat loss and is already built in pieces and ready to be assembled. During the last two years there has been continuous research on the Wind Furnace System. Doctoral candidates Woody Stoddard and Ted VanDusen have been developing techniques concerning the windmill's aerodynamics and blade structure, respectively. Professor Robert H. Kirchoff with six undergraduate students here spent last summer researching a design for the wind machine.

Aside from designing the wind tower, blades, water thermal storage, and controls, considerable attention is being paid to choosing the most appropriate equipment already available from commercial markets. Among these is the solar plate, which is to be placed on the south side of the structure to take full advantage of the sun's heating capabilities. Also, what type heat pump desired must be decided upon. The heat pump will function as a heat multiplier in the circulation of hot water throughout the house.

Financing the project has come, in large part, from the U.S. National Science Foundation as part of their solar energy program. A one year grant of $130,000 has been allocated to help fund the project. The grant provides support for seven graduate assistants. Four undergraduate assistants, and some summer salary for participating faculty, besides going towards material and equipment. Although the grant runs out in March 1976. Heronemus describes the chances for a renewed grant as "very good".

Prior to the grant, $24,000 had been collected from interested private individuals. It is expected that the University will provide 17,000 towards the building's landscaping, foundation, and water connections.

The buildings tentative location is near the water towers on the east side of the campus.

Among those working on the project are Professors Duane E. Cromack and Armand J. Costa from Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering; Alexander Chajes, Peter P. Mangarella, Frederick J. Dzial, and dept. head Merit P. White of Civil Engineering; Frank C. Kaminsky from Industrial Engineering; and Richard W. Monopoli of Electrical Engineering.

Although researchers have yet to finalize their plans, the system is right now, according to Heronemus, "essentially about one-third built". What remains is to "tidy up all that has been done in the past."

Once functioning, the Wind Furnace System will be open to public demonstration.

According to Heronemus, "We are trying to create an industry". An industry that uses alternative energy sources (sun, wind) for heating buildings, conventional could save gas and oil for the individual and the communities.

Presently, Fran Koster of Continuing Education has been seriously looking into the possibility of using a system of this type for the proposed Hampshire County House of Correction.

Student opportunities abound

Collegian seeks budding reporters

The Collegian is looking for reporters!

If you have any interest in journalism, campus affairs, or you would simply like to be a celebrity on your floor come up to the Collegian office on the second floor of the Student Union and tell us you would like to write.

With the coming of exams, graduation and the end of the semester rush, now is an excellent opportunity to break into the most effective student group on campus. We are hungry to cover some really interesting events on campus but we need the people to do it.

This is the time of year when you can get the big assignments and by next semester people will be reading your byline from Pierpont to Cashin.

So come on up and be part of something.

Summer home? Try Argentina

Out of money and no summer job? Need a rent and board free place to live during July and part of August? Here's an idea that is reasonable, educational and exciting — go to Argentina on the Consejo Argentina de Intercambio Estudiantil (CADIE) program in Buenos Aires.

Students accepted into the program will be guests in Argentine homes while visiting universities, museums, and theaters and attending tours and parties. CADIE has also arranged a trip to Bariloche as part of the six week itinerary.

The entire cost to the student, including room, board and miscellaneous excursions is only the cost of international air fare. The host families and CADIE provide the funds for such expenses as room and board, museum entrance fees, tours and theater tickets. Should students decide to take the eight day excursion to mountaineous and beautiful Bariloche, an additional $130, which includes everything, must be paid by the individual. The arrival date is July 3rd. Interested students should stop by the International Programs Office at 239 Whitmore for an application.

I'd rather be colorblind

By JIM PAULIN

Americans have been fighting the reds ever since the patriots fired their muskets on Bunker Hill, during the revolution. Several hundred years later, in Washington, the patriots of the Un-American Affairs Committee again battled reds. Instead of fighting the enemy with cannon, they used microphones, hoping that exposing the enemy to the heat would cause it to die of dehydration.

America was spawned by redcoat country. Later, in blue, they spurned the redcoats. After they took care of the redcoats, they had to get rid of the redskins, but instead of a fraternity of volunteer firemen from the Boston suburbs doing the fighting, the war was waged by uniformed cowboys directed by the burgeoning bureaucracy in Washington.

From the redcoats we came, from the redskins we took, and when we had all we needed, we couldn't stop seeing red. We inveighed against outside red (Asia red) and watched for reds under our beds. The rear bumper, through the windshield, read "better dead than red."

By painting our skin red, we once drowned redcoat tea in Boston. So far, we've got redcoats, redskins and redflags. The only ok red is inside red blooded Americans. Better dead than red unless you're American and red blooded. If you're healthy American red, you can help smear out diseased, inhuman red of the red flag.

We've turned around. Redcoat red is only mean in history, redskin red is reserved, and flag red is far away. And now, floating through the air, hiding in pocket size plastic bags Panama Red! Our newest red enemy! A threat to scholarly rigor! Possibly perpetrated by the red flag?

Flash! Flash! Flash! (blinking red lights). In Cambodia, reds overrun Premier Bah Naal, true blue American loyalist. Cambodia Red!

Reds closing in on blue Saigon. Red suffocation turns Saigon even more blue. Vietnamese Red!

"But why is there red in old glory?" "Old glory is not red, old glory is red blooded. There's a difference, you know. Anyways, Old Glory's red is fenced by blue. If it ever considers treason, though, it will be severely castigated by the blue bars and white spurs. Red blooded Old Glory is true blue."

From now through 1976, the theme of revolting red will be boasted, billboarded, played on the radio and triumphantly denounced on color t.v. "We're not red and we're not dead. Hurray for the white, blue, and er, red. Please clear the street for the American Legion, the Boy Scouts and the Clydesdale Horses. Wait ... shut up ... listen ... it's the National Guard chanting something ... 'left right, left right, your balls are swinging from left to right ...' Hey, what're you saying that for? 'Marching sucks. A little obscene cadence takes your mind off your feet'."

Rednecks aren't red, they're red blooded.

Red-ee on your mark, get set, first at those reds.

UMass needs student union

We are confronted with two simultaneous problems at UMass. A proposed 10 per cent budget cut in state funds for the institution threatens the financial stability of students and our school's departments, special academic programs, counceling, and administration. It constitutes decreases in these areas during a period of spiraling inflation. The budget cut can only lend itself to a loss in quality education at the University.

Worse, if the legislature implements a budget decrease of any size, we students will have no substantial say as to the allocation of the funds that the legislators do grant our institution. Whitmore will decide this. There is no student organization, at present, that can effectively challenge the administration for our benefit. We have no control of any aspect of our student life at UMass. And Whitmore does not plan to give us any.

Let us be realistic. In order for the state to impede deficit spending without increasing taxes, state-supported institutions' budgets will be cut. Unfortunately, UMass is no exception. Although I sympathize and participate with several of the organizations that have formed as a result of the current conflict, I doubt we will be successful in turning heads at the State House. The trend of thinking in Massachusetts, for the majority of citizens, has been one of no more taxes. We must assume this to be true: Governor Dukakis was voted into office on such a platform. If the Governor is to survive politically, he must hold down any tax increases — at least for his first year of service. The legislators are politicians. They are sensitive to the trend and will follow suit. And therefore I believe a budget cut is inevitable at the University. That UMass should feel the crunch first, along with welfare and other social services, is indicative of the political system; hurt those institutions that give you the least resistance and that lack public respect. After all, the students at Zoomass factory, "They're living in a dream world."

Thus, I believe it would be in our best interest to channel our energies into gaining student power at our school. We must be able to participate in the decision making mechanisms of our University. No one will watch out for student interests but students. Since Whitmore will not grant any student group effective power to influence decision making, a student union is our best alternative. The Student Organizing Project has laid the foundation for such an organization. I support their efforts. I ask the Board of Trustees to pass the Union of Students Enabling Policy. In doing so, they will acknowledge students, for the first time, as vital members of our institution.

Senator Kelly proposes 3% budget cuts

The education appropriation suggested by Senator James Kelley, Chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, would cut the UMass budget [3 campuses] by 3 per cent from FY 75 to $96 million dollars. The university would be forced to absorb vastly increased fuel and other operating costs — costs for which additional money was appropriated this year that won't be available next year. And tuition would probably increase $50 per year.

Senator Kelley talked with four UMass students about his education budget suggestions on Wednesday. Ruth McCrea, Tony Burt, Dave Danning, and Jean Fisher met with Senator Kelley as part of the day's activities during the April 30 demonstration in Boston.

Kelley claimed that his budget figures would require no cuts in enrollments and no across-the-board cuts in student services or special academic programs. [Exception is a 10 per cent cut in the School of Education]. The students pressed him on this forcast, mentioning the projections of UMass administrators specifying substantial cutbacks in these areas if a budget similar to Kelley's were adopted. Kelley adamantly stated that there would be enough money for students if the administration cuts frills. "If they take the cuts out on students, we can't help it," was his attitude. This attitude — that the university is inefficiently managed and has several poorly-chosen priorities — parallels, in part the rationale underlying student demands for power in decision-making and for self-determination. Decisions as to establishing and maintaining special academic programs and student services must be made by those who need them and will use them — not by administrative fiat.

At the same time, Kelley made clear the revenue limits within which he is working. He said the state budget must be balanced in 1976 [although bonds will be floated this year to make the books look balanced in correction for poor forecasting]. He said raising taxes in a recession is economically contractionary [which is not true if the state spends the resulting increase in revenue]. He added that restructing taxes is politcally infeasible. For example, Kelley has favored a progressive income tax for 17 years. But the voters of the state consistently defeat such a proposal. Why? "People that are opposed to it — those that benefit from no progressive income tax — get together and organize to oppose it." Who benefits? "Wealthy individuals; bankers; insurance companies... " ¶ See below.

Statistics show that the state revenues would significantly increase if, for starters, the rates of corporate income tax, inheritance tax, and taxes on unearned income were raised moderately. Those who would be hit by such increases have the wealth and power to organize large-scale pressure against the increases, leaving lower-income people bearing the burden of the regressive tax rates in Massachusetts.

Clearly, the demands on the legislature to increase expenditures for human services — for education, mental health, and welfare — must not be relaxed. Legislators are elected by the people of the state to serve the public interest, not the particular desires of the wealthy or the corporations. We must continue to press upon them our educational and human service needs. By demanding a response, we constantly force legislators to search for sources of funds from sectors that have control over the social surplus and should be obligated to pay.

¶ Because of these constraints, Kelley has also proposed a cutback in welfare, which would cut off 30,000 people from general relief roles; welfare funds are relatively easy to cut. Despite massive unemployment, Kelley believes many people on welfare are employable and thinks most welfare recipients must have part-time jobs since they couldn't survive on current welfare payments.

Sincerely,
Jean E. Fisher

Collegian staff denied circus passes

I would like to congratulate the sponsors of the circus which was at UMass on Sunday, the Commuter Assembly and O.S.E., for almost depriving all those who did not or could not attend from seeing anything about it in the student newspaper, the Collegian. Members of the Collegian staff were not forbidden to buy tickets to the event, but refusing complimentary passes to a couple of working members of the press is a clear indication that we were not wanted.

Usually, in those rare instances when the press is not invited, there is a good reason, such as having no photographer at a music performance in which the sound of a shutter might disturb the performers or the audience. In this case, the reasons seem quite weak. One was that someone in the newspaper's business department made a human error and an ad was not run or something. I was not given the exact details but they are not that important. It is immature to penalize over 20,000 readers for the mistakes of one person. Another reason given was that since the circus is only running on one day, a story with photos on Monday would not help them sell tickets. Agreed. But it would not hurt and it might be of interest to readers or even create interest in next year's [assuming there is one — circus that is, not year]. This seems to me to be clearly and simply self-interest, caring only about the profit of the sponsors. A year ago, when the circus ran for two days, the Collegian had an entire page of photos and copy on the circus, which ran on the second day. There is no telling how many tickets were sold by this "free advertising". The Collegian did it because of its appeal to the reading audience. But a year later we are told that we are not welcome because it won't do them any good.

I would like to thank Jim Riley in particular, realizing that although he was the person who denied me passes, he does not necessarily represent the opinions of all the members of the Commuter Assembly and O.S.E. in his decision. So, Jim, go count your money.

Warm up the melting pot

An elderly, but rapidly becoming senile man stood on the sands of San Clemente, California, wearing the blue jacket, and absentmindedly missing the eagle that once adorned his chest. He swore he heard the rounds falling on Saigon. In the background a tinted haired woman, wearing the mask she'd created and maintained for two decades, finished her third gin and tonic, smiled, belched twice, and walked away, whistling "Promises, Promises", a popular song of late...

Twelve thousand miles away, two nineteen year olds, swaggering the way so many nineteen year olds have done while thinking they're doing something important, dreamed about the multi-colored ribbon they would receive for guarding something called the Military Attache. They never heard the rockets and now they never will...

Back to California, as its centuries of fear and hatred of the yellow man braced for the new city going up at Camp Pendleton. WARM UP THE MELTING POT, AMERICA! WE'VE GOT A NEW BATCH OF MELTERS...

The Castro Connection

Who killed John Kennedy? Any fifth grader can tell you who. It was Lee Harvey Oswald. Or was it?

Today, the Zapruder film on the Kennedy assasination is being shown on campus. It is the most impressive link in a chain of circumstantial evidence which suggests that Mr. Kennedy was the victim of a conspiracy. Now, let's assume that it was in fact a conspiracy. The next questions are who? And why?

The right wing has been blamed by some advocates of a conspiracy model, on grounds of Kennedy's liberal image in general, his civil rights views in particular, and a possible softening of heretofore rigidly anti-communist attitudes. However, I have never been satisfied with this hypothesis because,

a.) of what the right wing had to gain by not liquidating Kennedy and b.) because of what the right wing lost as a result of the assasination.

People don't remember now, but Mr. Kennedy was actually running into extreme political difficulty during the latter part of his administration. The polls showed his popularity slipping every month to the extent that the likely Republican candidate, Barry Goldwater, stood a real chance of defeating Mr. Kennedy during the 1964 presidential election. I remember well that Look Magazine ran an article late in November, 1963, entitled, "Kennedy Could Lose." Published a couple of days before the assasination, it had already made the newstands by November 22. Despite desperate efforts by the publishers, it was too late to recall the issue.

People don't remember now, but Mr. Kennedy was actually running into extreme political difficulty during the latter part of his administration.

So the right wing had much to gain by not shooting the president, and as history shows, lost much when he was shot. Barry Goldwater went on to win the nomination and then to lose the most one-sided election in American history, save for 1936 and 1972, because the resulting martrydom psychology destroyed all of Mr. Goldwater's chances. There was no way for him to beat the successor of the assassinated, venerated Kennedy. And not only did the right wing not get the man they wanted, Goldwater, they got a man - Lyndon Johnson - who was a far more effective domestic liberal than Kennedy ever was. Remember that most of the effective civil rights legislation was passed while he was president, as well as the creeping socialism of the "Great Society." As for foreign policy, it was Mr. Johnson who blueprinted the unrightwingish, no.win, half-buttocked strategy in Vietnam, the harvest of which is now being reaped. No, the right wing lost as much as anybody when Kennedy was shot. Even if the assassin(s) were rightwingers, it was not the right wing who shot Kennedy.

Was it then the CIA? It is suggested that they removed Kennedy as a sort of preventative medicament because he was moving to curb their power. Well, I dunno. I keep asking myself, if it were the CIA, why would they remove Kennedy that way? Put it another way. The CIA is the most efficient condensation of cutthroats and assassins this side of the Soviet Union. They must have literally hundreds of ways of making folks disappear, like convenient heart attacks, deadly spinal maladies (Mr. Kennedy had a chronically bad back.), food poisonings, helicopter crashes, etc. Given all this, why on earth would the CIA resort to such a chancey, public rub-out? Dozens of things could go wrong. Their gunners could miss. They could be caught, either before or after the fact. And in any event, the certain uproar would require a massive and dangerous cover-up.

'...the question remains: Whodunnit? Let me advance a hypothetical mastermind: Fidel Castro.'

And yet, there is persuasive evidence of some kind of conspiracy. Assuming that it wasn't the persons already discussed, the question then remains: whodunit? Let me advance a hypothetical mastermind: Fidel Castro.

That's ridiculous, you say. And maybe it is. But consider motive. Castro had plenty of motive to assassinate John Kennedy. It was Kennedy who authorized the Bay of Pigs invasion and later the naval blockade of Cuba. It was he who organized the economic boycott of Cuba by the Organization of American States. It was during his administration that, according to evidence published last week in the New York Daily News, the CIA financed several unsuccessful attempts on Castro's life. It's easily within the realm of reality to suppose that Castro at least could have had designs on Kennedy's life.

This scenario also accounts for Lee Harvey Oswald, whether he was the real assassin or just a dupe. Oswald in addition was an avowed Marxist working for the Fair Play for Cuba Committee. He had been to Russia a couple of times, and to Mexico once. He had expensive possessions. All these things suggest that he had outside backing, and none of these things rule out Castroite financing.

The mode of assassination has the earmark of foreigners. Castro's regime, not being an institutionalized part of the United States Government, would have necessarily limited opportunities to assassinate a figure like the American president, whereas the CIA should have many ways of eliminating a member of their own government. A well coordinated shoot-out might well be the only way open to someone in Castro's position.

I'm not saying emphatically that Castro did it. There's not enough evidence, and the hypothesis does not satisfactorily explain all the things which may have happened since the assasination. I am saying that the Castro Connection offers as reasonable an explanation of November 22 as any I've seen.

Summer frolics

"You'd better soak up all the sun you can this summer, 'cause winter's gonna last clear into '77 after this."

-disgusted friend contemplating summer of '76

Yessirree folks, step right up, the circus is coming, and if you think you're bugged by the world in general now just contemplate the "three ring" affair ready to assault our senses in the summer of '76. You may seriously contemplate spending it in Nepal when the full impact hits you.

Ring No. 1: The Bicentennial: If you think all those simulated battles and schlock political speeches by Gerry Ford are a drag now, just think how exciting the same old shit will be fourteen months from now!

The Bicentennial, in case you haven't noticed, is nothing but a warped Chamber of Commerce president's dream. There'll be tourists (a.k.a. suckers or fools) galore visiting all the "shrines" of our nation's "history" (the history books are full of shit, but no one's saying that). Just by coincidence, they'll also be filling merchant's pockets all over America. And just in time for the recession!

Really, the only good thing about it is that the government may unwittingly be setting itself up for some major embarrassment at the hands of People's Bicentennial groups. Let's hope the people turn out in big enough numbers to expose the flag-waving capitalists running the thing.

Ring No. 2: The Political Conventions: These will go well with the Bicentennial, with politicians everywhere invoking the "New American Spirit" as the Old American Ship goes down. To top it all off, at least one of the major parties is considering Chicago for its convention site. We may get to see the summer reruns of that popular series from '68, "Daley's Blackshirts", yet!

Ring No. 3: The Olympics: Yes dear friends, they'll only be 300 miles from here in friendly Montreal next summer. They stand the best chance of being a legitimate, exciting spectacle, but if they're anything like '72 don't waste your money or time. The Olympics have gone political - much too political - and all you're likely to get for your trouble if you go is the spectacle of biased judges and referees shamelessly perverting the meaning of the word "sport" to some worthless political end. You may even get killed in a terrorist attack as part of the bargain.

And just think, all three will probably take place within driving distance of here! Neat, huh? As for me, you can send my newspapers to Katmandu. That's about as close as I'll want to get.

Bad dreams and memories

They tell me the war in Vietnam is over. It is unclear to me what this means, but there has never been clarity regarding Vietnam. Even after we have pumped money and blood and perhaps even our belief in ourselves into this God-forsaken strip of coastline it still remains unreal to us. It is inhabited by funny little men with funny names who always seem to be dead or dying. Maybe now we can forget about them again.

This is perhaps all I am sure of regarding Vietnam, that we will soon forget it. Americans, more than any other people, have the talent for forgetting unpleasant things. It is clear that those who should be feeling the burden of guilt most acutely, those in charge of the government, will swiftly move on to other things in an attempt to "bind up the nation's wounds" and other such traditional drivel. Loosely paraphrasing our President (who should thank me for refraining from transcribing his customary incoherence verbatim) it is time for us to renew our self-confidence and our optimism as a nation. Hoo-ray.

Hoo-ray.

Listen to me now. We are the ones who grew up with this war.

CALMUS
Vietnam War
R.I.P.

We are the ones who saw it as something real, and cruel, and frightening. We are the ones who will be left in ten or thirty or fifty years, the ones whose children will be growing up with their own unique reality. We are the ones who must remember.

We don't have to live with the memory; that is beyond our capacity for pain. We aren't any better than our parents; we just have a separate experience. We shouldn't spend the rest of our lives on a crusade against future Vietnams, or perceived Vietnams. To pursue that course will make us as blind as those who have come before us. But somewhere inside our heads, where we can take it out and look at it sometimes, we need to keep the memory alive.

I don't know why I expect our memories to be any more durable than any other generation's. The time will come when Watts, and Vietnam, and Watergate, and even Nixon will only be catchphrases, their meaning lost in time, and the clutter of our busy lives. I don't really expect us to remember, but I can still hope. Give it some thought.

Setting police priorities

I would just like to say that it seems kind of ironic to me to have to pay 17 dollars a year for a parking space and then have my car broken into and a 200 dollar stereo system ripped off while parked in that space. Now I don't expect the campus police to be everywhere at once to stop things of this sort, but it sure seems like they are everywhere at once when it comes to ticketing illegally parked cars. It seems to me that the campus police should put a little more effort into protecting the cars that are parked legally. If parking legally is going to result in such losses, I won't even bother to obtain a parking sticker next semester and I will park illegally. At least my car will be protected by the undivided attention of the campus police as an illegally parked one.

No vacation for WMUA!

It appears that a valuable feature of existence around these parts is getting shafted. I refer to WMUA, our esteemed on-campus radio station, broadcasters of less chit-chat and more good music than anybody else around. RSO and Continuing Education, who jointly are culprits in this dastardly deed, have as yet failed to act on WMUA's budget request for funds to operate during the coming summer — funds which are needed to continue operating after May 15. If such monies are not allocated |God forbid|, we will all be losing the opportunity to hear such favorites as "no nonsense news" and the uninterrupted flow of the finest in long-playing phonograph albums of the day. The situation would be less grim if there were an alternative somewhere in the land of Mega-Hertz; but, alas, 91.1 is really all there is for their kind of thing. Let us not allow it to disappear. Write RSO, or Continuing Ed, or WMUA — keep something good rockin' on the radio this summer!

Dental clinic commendation

Everyone knows or should know of their rights purchased by the health fee to dental health care at the Health Center. But anyone who has ever had a case of false fillings will attest that the financial benefits offered by the Dental Clinic to students is even further superceded by the fine quality of care offered. UMass has molded together four of the finest dentists Dental Schools have graduated recently, two top hygenists and five crackerjack assistants into the best campus Dental Health team anywhere. Their usage of modern dental procedures and equipment have devastated many archaic beliefs on campus, caused the elimination of fear and pain in the dental chair and educated UMies to brush and floss correctly. Not since the invention of Clearasil has the health and appearance of the average UMie risen do dramatically. The staff has been working hard to alleviate the problem of waiting time and student response would seem to indicate an expansion of the facilities would be in order. The Dental Clinic will continue it's diligent work throughout the summer and is deserving of student congratulations for meritous service on campus.

Power and the public good

The current budget cuts, decisions of Dukakis, lack the conviction of a true representative of the majority. For, in a country where real wages averaged 87 dollars, a country where the Vice President indirectly owns some of the very businesses responsible for these wages through market control and profit drive, it seems that the people earning these wages, we citizens of the United States, are in the hands of the political and economic giants of the capitalist system...

The answer to a $361 million deficit is not to put the person earning $87 out of work, neither is it to cut down on public services |education|, nor is it to increase taxation on an overburdened middle and lower classes. The answer lies in different directions, in divorcing the 77 per cent of wealth held by the top 20 per cent of the income earners and the power such wealth can afford; it lies in the return of power to the people, once again becoming a government of the people in which the Multi National Corporations' real profits... would be divided among the people who worked for them. These profits as well as taxes would be circulated in government directed areas such as medical care, education, public transportation and other socially profitable industries. People must learn to be satisfied with high wages rather than expanding wages. We must stop the concentration of power in the hands of the "owners" if we want budget cuts and unemployment terminated.

MOYLE

The struggle is not over!

The moratorium is not over, it has only just begun. We must continue organizing, letter writing, and demonstrating. Some students felt that a moratorium was not an effective tactic and that we should channel our efforts through other more constructive means, such as writing our legislators. I disagree with the view that a moratorium is not an effective tactic, but in and of itself, a moratorium would probably have little impact on the outcome of the budget. A moratorium must be a part of a growing student movement. I respect the views of those students who did not feel the moratorium was an effective tactic against budget cuts, if they did, indeed, fight with tactics they believed to be more effective. I have no respect for a student who criticized the moratorium because it wouldn't be effective and did nothing to fight the budget cuts herself-himself. We must wage the struggle on many fronts, with demonstrations, letter writing, discussion of the issues with our parents and friends, and further organizing. The point I am trying to make is that we must not divide over slight differences in tactics, but unite in our common goals of having a higher education available to the public, i.e. the working class and trying to correct a corrupt government. Our government reflects the interests of the large corporations which finance the legislators' and senators' campaigns and have huge armies of full time lobbyists to get the necessary votes for their tax loopholes. Our government should reflect our interests and not big business.

? PEOPLES' LIBERATION WEEK ?

from the poster advertising Peoples' Liberation Week:

"Why Peoples' Liberation Week:

. . . . . the building of an internationalist attitude and state of mind with regard to the struggles of the world's peoples for freedom, self-determination, justice, and equality."

and also

"Anti-Semitism, No! Anti-Zionism, Yes!"

The Jewish people is one of the world's peoples. As the Cubans have struggled for national self-determination in Cuba, so have the Jews in Israel. As farm workers struggle for justice and equality, so have Jews struggled to reclaim a land through these same ideals as expressed in the kibbutz collective. The struggle of the Jews for freedom, self-determination, justice, and equality has been through Zionism — the national liberation movement of the Jewish people, a people oppressed and exploited for 2,000 years. The struggle of the Jewish people to recreate a state of its own is an answer to Anti-Semitism throughout the ages culminating in excesses of Nazi racism, to the callousness of the so called free world, and to British imperialism. It marked the beginning of the struggle to free the Middle East from British and French domination.

Does one have to recall that one out of every three Jews in the world was murdered during World War II to prove that the Jews were subject to racism and imperialism?

Does one have to recall that the St. Louis, a ship packed with Jews escaping from Nazi Germany, was refused entry at the major European and American ports, before having to return to Germany, to prove that Jews were subject to national chauvinism?

Is the daily harassment and imprisonment of Jews in Russia not political and cultural repression at its worst?

And what is the persecution and degradation of the Jews in Syria?

In the 1930's in the U.S. it was not uncommon to see signs reading: "Jews and Niggers and dogs not allowed." In the 1970's Arab oil barons force restriction of employment of Jews in United States companies and government agencies in opposition to U.S. anti-discrimination laws. Jews were and still are the victims of "exploitation, racism, national chauvinism, political and cultural repression, and imperialism."

There is a Palestinian people; an Irish people; a Chinese people; a Vietnamese people; AND A JEWISH PEOPLE. The same logic that makes Palestinians and other liberation legitimate. ZIONISM IS THE NATIONAL LIBERATION MOVEMENT OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE AND ISRAEL IS THE ONE PLACE WHERE THAT MOVEMENT CAN ATTAIN POLITICAL AND CULTURAL EXPRESSION. The Jews are a majority in Israel. The Palestinians are a majority in Jordan. How can the Palestinian struggle be recognized and the Jewish struggle be ignored, and justice be done????

How can one talk about Peoples' Liberation and run sessions like "Anti-Semitism, No! Anti-Zionism, Yes!" when Zionism is the liberation movement of the Jewish people. Hate Jews and you've got Anti-Semitism. Hate the Jews' struggle for "freedom, self-determination, justice and equality" and you've got Anti-Zionism.

Alternative-ed handbooks now available

"It's Your Move," the fourth edition of the alternative education handbook, has been distributed at three campus sites.

Editor Kathy Daly announced that the 44-page guide is produced by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate in its continuing effort to inform studens of non-traditional modes of education. A total of 7,000 copies will be available in the Campus Center (near the University Store), the Student Union lobby, and CASIAC's offices in Machmer Hall.

A total of 44 illustrations and photographs complement descriptions of over 35 alternative education programs here on campus. "These programs are realistic and have evolved from the needs of students to tailor their educations to suit their particular interests and goals," according to the handbook.

In one way or another, nearly 25 per cent of the UMass student body participates in alternative education programs — enriching their education through "learning by doing" and personalizing their curriculum, Daly says.

"All it takes is a little planning and soul-searching to decide what it is that you want from the University. It's Your Move can help you get started."

The handbook provides answers to such questions, as:

—"Are you interested in an area of study but find no courses that are relevant?" (You can design your own program, and with the aid of a faculty sponsor, create your plan of study.)

—"Do you feel strapped by core and University requirements?" (You can test out of these or substitutue courses which you think are more pertinent.)

—"Only you can find the ways of bringing the best of the non-University world (your experience, competency, action) together with the best of the University world (knowledge, information, instructors) to form a program that is appropriate for you."

Pointing out that going to class is only one way to "get educated", the handbook urges, "before you sharpen a no. 2 pencil to fill out that pre-registration form, look into the variety of non-traditional approaches available at UMass".

Which is the reason for the title, "It's Your Move".

Free clinic on beekeeping

Another in the free beekeeping clinics presented by the UMass Department of Entomology will be held Saturday, beginning a 1 p.m.

"Spring Management" will be the topic and UMass apiarist Henry Hagedorn will cover such areas as spring feeding, spring disease prevention, package bees and spring reversal.

Open to all interested persons, the clinic will be held at the UMass Apiary on Clark Hill Dr. east of Fernald Hall. In case of rain, it will be held the following Saturday.

Internship program seeks black students

In Springfield, there are over 2,200 fatherless boys between the ages of 7 and 16. Of these 2,200 boys, 900 are Black. Due to a shortage of Big Black Brother volunteers and inadequate inter agency communications, only 10 Black children presently have Big Brothers and only 6 of these Big Brothers are Black.

If you are a UMass or Five College student and feel the need to obtain the ultimate learning experience, the Center for Experiential Education can assist you. The Center Internship program can place you in a pre-professional position as a caseworker for Big Brothers of Springfield, Inc. You can earn a full year of academic credit and a small living allowance.

If you are seeking an unselfish learning experience, act immediately. The internship program begins in June 1975.

Pre-professional positions are open to UMass students and students in the Five College Consortium. Minority students are urged to apply.

The Center urges faculty members to refer students to the Center.

For more information call Larry Scott at 545-1381 or come to the office between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. located at 315 Arnold House.

Viet med group needs money

Recent tragic events in Indochina have increased the need for medical and other emergency relief supplies.

The Medical Aid for Vietnam Organization is appealing for contributions to assist them in the purchase of urgently needed medical supplies for Vietnam.

A project of the Bach Mai Hospital, these supplies are destined for the children of Vietnam and countless other victims of that war – on all sides.

Contributions can be made by check payable to the Medical Aid for Vietnam, 65a Winthrop St., Cambridge, MA. 02138.

SAC calls meeting to discuss future actions

The Student Action Committee (SAC) has called an important meeting tomorrow to discuss "Where do we go from here?"

Anyone interested in talking about future actions should come to the Student Senate Council Chambers tomorrow at 4:00 P.M.

Also, the SAC is sponsoring a rally outside Mahar Auditorium Monday night at 7:00 P.M. Governor Michael Dukakis will be speaking at Mahar at 8:00 P.M. The rally will be a message to Dukakis to show him that students will continue their struggle opposing budget cuts and increasing student power. There will be speakers, singing and guerilla theater.

Women studies pupils earn foundation awards

Eight women involved in the Women's Studies program at UMass have received separate awards from various foundations around the country.

"It is significant that there are so many awards for women on this one campus," said Catherine Portuges, coordinator of the Women's Studies program.

Women's Studies is a two-year experimental program started in the fall of 1974. It allows students to formulate an individually designed plan of study concentrating on issues of concern to women. The program is also a coordinating body for all the informal women's programs on campus.

The program offers 60 courses on the UMass campus and 40 other topics in conjunction with other colleges in the area. There are 1700 persons in the program including some male students.

Women's Studies will go before the academic matters committee and the Faculty Senate in 1976 for authorization to become a full major at the University.

"Women's Studies seems to be very successful now as a program," Portuges said. "Right now we are coordinating a great number of students on a very small budget."

Resource Network trains counselors

As the result of an unprecedented collaborative programming effort among the five residential areas, the major human service agencies, and the Office of Residential Life, approximately 200 newly selected dormitory counselors were trained for their jobs that are to begin next Fall.

The program was coordinated by the Resource Network which regularly brings these agencies and areas together for the purpose of increasing communication. The new counselors were trained in a variety of content areas which progressed in emphasis from one-to-one interactions, to small group skills, to dorm-wide preventive programming.

The coordinating committee, an ongoing task force of the Resource Network, began early in the Network's two year history, to focus on the sharing of information about peer counselor programming, and the development of collaborative orientation workshops for new staff.

For more information on the trainers, the program content or format, call Tom Wolff: 5-2337, or Judy Davis: 5-0851.

Women's Caucus holds meeting

The University Women's Caucus, a University wide support and advocacy group, will hold its next meeting tomorrow in the Campus Center room 905. The agenda for this meeting will include a brief update on the Caucus, and short presentations on the issues of Child Care, Affirmative Action, and Women's Athletics. A discussion of what action the Caucus can take to support these issues will follow. All University affiliated women are encouraged to attend.

Collins holds office hours

State Representative James G. Collins (D. - Amherst) will hold his regular monthly office hours tomorrow.

Collins will be at the Amherst Town Hall Saturday morning, from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon; at the Campus Center from 12:00 noon to 1:30 p.m.; and from 2:00 to 3:30 at the South Hadley Police Station.

Douglas M. McGarrah, aide to Collins continues to hold weekly office hours; Mondays at the Amherst Town Hall, from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon, and on Wednesdays at the South Hadley Police Station, also from 10:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon.

Collins may be reached at anytime during the week, either at his home in Amherst (549-6886) or at the State House in Boston (617 727-8946).

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, MAY 2 — Born today, you are a reasonable person, a studious person — but there are times when neither reason nor study seems to do the trick. It is then that you are more able than most to fall back upon the instinctive side of your nature. The right thought, the right decision, the right action — these come to you often as a result not of investigation or intellectual consideration but of near-perfect psychic attunement to what is going on around you. No matter how subtle the hints emanating from the atmosphere, you are able to grasp and act upon them.

Basically, yours is an uncomplicated personality. For this reason, you are easy to be with even for very long periods. You should never lack for friends — of both sexes — and the few enemies you may make along the way will hardly be committed to working against you. No matter how much another may disagree with you on an intellectual level, emotionally he or she will not be able to reject you, will not be able to deny the charm of your personality.

Because you long for accuracy for success in all your endeavors, you ha probably learned to think over even your intuitive knowledge. You will, however, have to take care that in denying the inspirational quality of psychic knowledge you may also deny yourself the kind of gain that only spontaneous action can provide.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Saturday, May 3

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The strictly business approach is not the one to gain you your ends today. Smile, extend warm and welcoming hand, appear confident.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — There is nothing unreasonable about a hope for better relationships with the young. Offer advice — but don't insist that it be acted upon!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Learn from interaction with the young today. You can acquire the knowledge you need for special chores coming up — if you are observant in the afternoon.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Solve mutual difficulties by both taking and giving advice. Association with the young may bring you face to face with a "new" you!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make plans today that you can employ tomorrow; know yourself capable of long-range dealings with people of high intelligence. Regain composure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — What is best for the group cannot be completely bad for any of the group's individuals. Don't hesitate to demand loyalty from the young.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Put your instincts to work on Saturday chores. You may be able to come up with a new method for attaining an old Saturday goal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Others will appreciate your aid once it is given. Don't be surprised, however, to find help rejected when it is first offered.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You have an unusually good grasp of the underlying principles of profit and loss. Use it to gain entry into a specialized group.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Cooperation with others, especially with those of the younger generation, is essential if success is not to be delayed longer.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Whether by word or deed, carelessness could cause defeat, both of yourself and a loved one. Keep tabs on another's activities in the afternoon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — An inspiring day for the Aries attuned to gaining ideas from strange sources. Look at another's notions from a third party's point of view.

Premier man in sports world makes quick visit to UMass

By BEN CASWELL

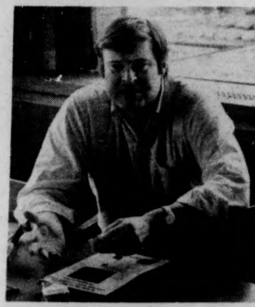
It's a long way from a $29-a-week, all-purpose man for the Southern Maryland Times weekly to the executive editor of Sports Illustrated.

Ray Cave is the man who went that long way and yesterday made an informal visit to UMass to address several classes.

Cave has spent the last year as the executive editor of the world's most successful sports and leisure magazine. Prior to that he was SI's assistant managing editor for four years.

The 45 year-old Cave fielded questions from a journalism class early in the day. In the afternoon he spoke to a small group of people in an informal type discussion session.

"I never had a great interest in sports," said Cave when asked what his favorite sport was, "but I always had a great interest in journalism."



English professor and Sports Illustrated feature writer, J. D. Reed.

After that initial weekly job where Cave said he learned more than any other place because when he started he knew nothing, Cave went to the Baltimore-Sun as a reporter. For ten years he covered various things before he got offers from both Time and Sports Illustrated.

"I accepted the Sports Illustrated offer," said Cave, "because Time wanted me to do the "people" section which was starting at the beginning for me and I felt like a seasoned journalist already."

Cave is now serving a six month period as acting editorial director of Time Incorporated.

Ray Cave, the executive editor of Sports Illustrated, made a visit to UMass yesterday and informally net with interested students.

"The plan is to make people in each of the branches of Time Inc. more familiar with the whole corporation," said Cave.

J.D. Reed, a professor in the UMass English and also an offbeat-sport writer for SI had invited Cave to visit UMass while he was in the area. Cave and Reed have been professional acquaintances and friends for a number of years.

Sports Illustrated began publishing in 1954 and according to Cave began making money 20 years later. The magazine now has a circulation of about 2,350,000 and a readership of more than 10,000,000.

UMass team athletic trainers: 'Athletic injury care personnel'

Since the days of the Roman Empire when Galen initiated the concept of training through his work with gladiators, athletic trainers have been an integral part of the sporting scene.

By SCOTT HAYES

Hidden within the equipment-cluttered fieldhouse adjacent to Alumni Stadium lies the office of Vic Keedy. Amidst knee and neck braces, instant ice packs, ace bandages and rolls of adhesive tape, the UMass football trainer sits behind his desk and breathes a sigh of relief. Although spring football has ended, there's much work to be done. When the semester ends in two weeks, Keedy will stay behind, preparing for the fall season.

The job is demanding and time-consuming. It's a year 'round effort according to Keedy, who prefers to call trainers, "athletic injury care personnel."

"You have to be dedicated to put in the long hours, but I think it's very rewarding," Keedy explained.

The service of athletic programs along with the health and welfare of students in any athletic activity are the main concerns of the training corps.

As the head UMass trainer, Keedy spends most of his time working with the football team. Jim Laughnane and Bob Williams are also full-time trainers who shift from one sport to another, depending on the particular season and the workload.

There are numerous students, three of whom are women, assisting the full-time trainers to gain experience. Interested students, who plan on making training a career, attempt to get valuable practice and certification by the National Athletic Trainers Association (NATA). A certification test is given and if all qualifications are met, a student becomes a recognized trainer.

Some colleges already have specific programs in athletic injury care and one of the highest positions is that of a Recognized Physical Therapist.

A trainer's spot is best filled by someone with a combination of practical experience and an academic background, according to Keedy.

The top UMass trainer believes success is within the reach of any trainer who is willing to dedicate time and effort to the job. In fact, Frank George, who started as a student trainer at UMass, is now president of the NATA.

Some responsibilities a trainer must assume include daily chores and routines to get a team ready for practices and games. When a player gets injured, it's the trainer's job to get that athlete back in action as soon as possible.

Keedy noted, however, that the team physicians make the final decision regarding whether or not an athlete can compete. Dr. James Ralph and Dr. James Contanche fill the team physician roles for the UMass football squad.

Holidays mean little to athletic trainers. It's a seven - day - a - week job.

Possibly trainers, or more correctly, athletic injury re ersonnel will gain recognition and rewards for th ier painstaking efforts in the future. Then again, maybe they will never emerge from behind the scenes and into the spotlight.

Trainers may simply continue as the real unsung heroes of sports — accepting a team's appreciation at their reward.

The fact that the importance of a trainer is rarely acknowledged is not hard to understand. Fans don't look in the game program for their favorite trainer and when an injury time-out is called few can even name the man running to a player's assistance.

But after all, where some superstarts of the sporting world be without their braces, whirlpool treatments or streams of adhesive tape?

Batsmen face Rhody: Still have title shot

By BOB HIGGINS

With a record of 7-13 and only eight games left on the schedule, it would seem like it's about time to chalk up the season as a "wait till next year" proposition.

But for the UMass baseball team, which finds itself in this situation, the season is far from over. The squad's primary goal this season has been to win the Yankee Conference, and the Minutemen are still in the thick of that race.

So tomorrow's doubleheader (2:00, Lorden Field) against the University of Rhode Island, last year's YanCon champs, will be of supreme importance to the Minutemen, who are now 2-2 in the conference. The Rams are 1-1-2 in the YanCon (wins count as two points, ties as one).

For UMass, Jeff Reardon will start the first game, and Craig Allegrezza will hurl the nightcap. Reardon turned in a fine performance last Saturday against Maine, as he shut out the Black Bears, 5-0. Allegrezza, on the other hand, is coming off two of his less impressive performances after a first half of the season in which he was the hottest pitcher in New England. Against Springfield on Wednesday, and knocked out of the box in the third inning.

Rhody is led by ace righthander Ed Zabilski, who UMass Coach Dick Bergquist calls "one of the best pitchers in New England." Zabilski is also a fine hitter, and beat the Minutemen last season with both his pitching and batting. The chances are good that he will face Reardon in game one.

Injuries continue to plague the Minutemen. Now it's second-baseman Mike Koperniak, an all-YanCon shortstop the past two seasons. Koperniak jammed his finger diving back to third on Wednesday, and wound up with a compound dislocation and fracture. He was operated on Wednesday night, and will be out for the rest of the season. Senior Joe Marzilli will replace him in the lineup.

Two men who have been out with injuries will be ready for action tomorrow. Centerfielder Pete Backstrom, the team's leading hitter who tore ligaments in his knee against Dartmouth two weeks ago, should be available. Catcher-designated hitter Jim Black, injured in the same game, will probably catch one game for the Minutemen.

QUICK HOPS ...The Bullpen Club will be sponsoring an oldtimers game Sunday afternoon at 2:00 at Lorden Field. Former UMass players from as far back as the 1930's will participate... Backstrom (.355), John Seed (.342), and Black (.340) lead the squad in batting, and are the only ones hitting over .300.

Barnaby Kalan, undefeated in singles play for the UMass netmen, will lead the Minutemen in their bid to win the New Englands being held in Burlington, Vt., this weekend.

Crewwomen have MIT for foe

By TERESA HANAFIN

The Women's Crew team again treks to Boston this weekend to face MIT Saturday in what Coach Bob Spousta terms "probably our shortest race of the season."

The 9:30 race on the Charles is 1000 meters, hopefully without the wind factor which has made past races seem like 2000 meters.

For this reason, UMass will be looking to row a solid race from start to finish.

"We'll concentrate on good, basic, rowing," stressed Spousta. "We will put our most intensive effort to date."

MIT has been disappointed in their last few races, and has yet to row their best. Like UMass, they have a few candidates for the Nationals team.

It should also be kept in mind that the Boston school could be tough on their home course.

Most importantly, MIT edged the women by only three feet in the championships last year. A sound defeat would surely taste sweet.

But, in the words of Bob Spousta, "If we row well, we should have it."

This race should also be a real good test for the Eastern Association of Women's Rowing Colleges (EAWRC) sprints, to be held in Middlefield, Connecticut on Sunday, May 11.

A solid win this weekend would make UMass' chances of a seeding in the top six boats very good.

AT THE CATCH — This will be the first race for spares Jennifer Burks and Kathy Guild, both starboard rowers ... MIT is led by excellent rower Ingrid Cross, their starboard stroke ...

Sox top Indians, 7-6

BOSTON [UPI] — Bernie Carbo hit a two-run homer and Rico Petrocelli doubled in a pair of runs Thursday in leading the Boston Red Sox to a 7-6 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

The Red Sox moved to a 3-0 first inning advantage off loser Jim Perry, 1-4. Carbo opened the inning with a double and scored on Carl Yastrzemski's single to right field. Fred Lynn walked and both runners scored on Petrocelli's drive off the left centerfield wall.

Carbo homered to left in the second inning after Rick Burleson had singled.

Boston added a run in the third and another in the fifth on Jim Rice's homer.

Cleveland scored twice in the third inning on singles by Buddy Bell, Frank Duffy, George Hendrick and Manager Frank Robinson.

The Indians added three more in the eighth on John Ellis' home run following a single by Ken Berry and a walk to Hendrick.

Bill Lee, 2-3, went eight full innings for the victory. Reliever Diego Segui yielded a run-scoring single to pinch-hitter Rico Carty in the ninth before striking out designated hitter Leron Lee to notch his second save.

Women mitters at home

By LAURIE WHITING

Putting their 1-5 record behind them, the revamped UMass women's Softball team will start a "new" season Saturday against Keene State at 2:00.

The Keene Staters gave UMass good games last season, and the same is expected for tomorrow. Assistant coach, Joanne McGowan looks forward to the games optimistically: "With our new line-up, we have prospects for a good showing Saturday. If we can get our new starters to play together we have a chance to do well."

Carolyn Shea had a good day against Boston State last week and will be aiming for a repeat performance Saturday. Freshman pitcher LuAnn Fletcher is breaking in the mound for UMass and has shown power at the plate with last week's homerun at Boston. Terry Pudlo has also played consistently in the field, and homered at Boston, along with Fletcher.

"This will be our second home game this season," says McGowan, "and we're looking forward to showing UMass we can play better than we did against Westfield State."

UMass riders at Nationals

By PAUL LOGUE JR.

The UMass Riding team, coming off a convincing triumph against arch-rival Colby-Sawyer College in last week's Regional contest, is preparing for the National Inter-Collegiate Horse Show to be held at Bennett College in Milbrook, N.Y. this weekend. The team sends six riders who accumulated enough points in their regional competition. The New England Region includes U Hartford, Tufts, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Dartmouth, and Springfield College. The National Competition will include representatives from over 75 schools.

Linda Jaskiel-Hamilton, director of the riding program here, is optimistic that her riders will capture top honors.

Lacrossewomen tie

By RON ARENA

In an enthusiastic and well-played game, the women's lacrosse club and Springfield College battled to a 6-6 tie yesterday on the field beside WOPE. In the preliminary contest at 3:00, the B team, paced by Nancy O'Neil's six (yes, as in 6) goals, romped the visitors 9-2.

In the A contest, UMass rallied from a 4-3 halftime deficit to grab a 6-5 lead, only to have the Chiefs net the final goal. Player-coach Lori Nazar and Judy Kennedy each tallied two for the Minutewomen. Kennedy played in both games at the center position, and received the praise of her coach for two fine performances. The center position usually required the largest amount at least in the form of running, so to play in both games shows great endurance on the part of Kennedy. Evie Sneeden and Elaine Senosk, with a goal apiece, rounded out the UMass scoring.

A proud Nazar seemed quite satisfied with the tie. In the first half, Springfield outhustled the host squad, reaching loose balls first, and intercepting errant UMass passes. "We came back in the second half to really hustle through", remarked the player-coach. "We really worked hard, and we had our periods where we outhustled them for the ball."

We didn't play as well as we had Wednesday, but Springfield was really a much better team than Smith was, she added.

In the preliminary contest, the B-team completely dominated a weary Springfield group. Springfield seemed unorganized to the point where one sensed they hadn't played together much. O'Neill seemed to score at will against a bewildered defense with some picturesque moves. For being only her first year at playing lacrosse, O'Neil seems to have quickly learned the game.

Barb Jordan scored twice for the Minutewomen, while Ann Foley also hit the scoring column. If a B-game means anything at all, it would be to simply allow more players to see action, and from the results, the local women have a wealthy amount of depth.

YanCon track meet up for grabs

By SCOTT HAYES

Just as the Michigan-Ohio State rivalry has dominated Big Ten football in recent years, the UMass-UConn battle for track supremacy has gained attention in the land of the Yankee Conference. Tomorrow the YanCon's seven teams will assemble in Burlington, Vermont to vie for the Conference championship.

The meet is expected to follow a pattern set in eight of the past nine seasons. Team honors have gone to UMass five times and UConn three times. Only New Hampshire in 1968 was able to break up the two-team monopoly.

Overall the Conference is not as strong as it has been in the past. According to coach Ken O'Brien, "the meet results are somewhat scattered, so it's hard to tell what to expect."

UConn won last year's showdown, outscoring the Minutemen 93-72½. The Huskies also finished first in 1973, so the trackmen will have to win the annual gathering to snap UConn's string of victories.

Strong events for the tracksters should be the long, triple and high jumps along with several sprint and distance events. Bob and Ken Adamson, Mike Geraghty and Pete Ryan bolster the UMass jumping attack and the foursome should be joined by Toney Pendleton.

Joe Martens and Rusty Kendall will oppose UConn's Pat Augeri and Maine's high jump duo of Steve Leathe and Eric Lammi.

In the distance events, consistent contributors Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, Chris Farmer and Devin Croft lead a group of runners who will be challenged by Bruce Clark of UConn, New Hampshire's George Reed and Boston University's standout miler, Jim Taylor.

Tom Beland, Steve Crimmin, John Richards and Mark Healy are part of a good field that includes Rhode Island's Bill Quirk and UConn speedster Daryl King.

UConn has a definite edge in the shot put, hammer throw and 120-yard high hurdles. Outstanding weightmen Rich White, Andy Bessette, Mike Bilsza and Rick Szrom may be immovable from the top places, but George Ennis, John Willis and Tom Lonergan hope to muster some points.

The Huskies and UMass trackers will clash in the 440, 880, long and triple jumps, 440-yard intermediate hurdles, discus, javelin and the two relays. The results of these events should determine the outcome of the competition. Based on the law of percentages and past results, maybe the best way to predict a winner would be a coin flip. Heads...UMass wins; tails...UConn triumphs.

IN THE OUTSIDE LANE — Although Martens will be high jumping, he still hasn't fully recovered from a hamstring pull suffered during the Holy Cross meet. The problem knocked Martens from the 220-yard dash lineup. Pole vaulter Eric Gudmand won't see action either. Ted Power will be the top competitor in the vault.

Curt Stegerwald will be competing against Paul Murphy, who is possibly the best hurdler in the country.

A three-mile run is scheduled this year rather than the traditional two-mile event.

Gorillas host improved UNH

By SCOTT HAYES

The accuracy of the New England ratings may be tested tomorrow at 2:00 p.m. when the UMass stickers host New Hampshire. The Gorillas are ranked second in New England behind Brown while the Wildcats hold the third position.

Coach Dick Garber feels that UNH has one of its best teams in the past ten years. The Wildcats feature a strong attack and midfield, with a slight weakness on defense.

A team comprised mostly of sophomores, UNH is paced by tri-captains Ted Garber, (son of UMass boss Garber), Gary Fincke and Mike Fish. These three players are among the national leaders in goals and assists.

The Wildcats, who boast an outstanding offense which is dependent on midfielders Nick Petri, John Bryan, Pete Banhazl and Doug Martin.

The UMass defense must handle and control the UNH attack, according to Garber, if the Gorillas are going to win. Defensemen Bill Blaustein, Ken Michaud and Kurt Olson will be faced with stopping the Wildcat offensive.

Steve Troiano, normally the number one goalie is a probable starter for UNH. Troiano is an active netminder with a flair for the spectacular. Although one of the nation's top goalies in number of saves made, Troiano sometimes leaves himself out of position.

The Wildcats bring an 8-1 record into the game. New head coach Art Young has helped improve the team, which is undefeated against New England opponents.

Both teams have played Connecticut and comparing the results seems to reflect what the ranking might indicate — a tight, close-checking game. UMass dropped the Huskies 16-3 while UNH toppled the same squad by a 14-7 score.

Both UNH and UMass have three good midfields units. "It looks like there's going to be a real battle at midfield and that's where the game's going to be won or lost," Garber noted.

The UMass coach also pointed out that the shooting must be on target in an important game such as tomorrow's.

The Wildcats should come ready to play. It's their big game of the season and Garber stated that his players can't afford to underestimate UNH. "The Brown game doesn't mean a thing if we lose to UNH," Garber commented.

BEHIND THE NET — Bill O'Brien, the team's second leading scorer is a doubtful starter. Since O'Brien teams up with Jeff Spooner so well, that's got to hurt the offense....A year ago, the Gorillas jumped to an 11-3 halftime lead and continued to dominate the game en route to a 22-8 victory over New Hampshire. Garber and the crossmen are hoping for a similar jump this year....The starting lineup for UNH includes Troiano (7), Henry Deamon (9), Banhazl (10), Fincke (14), Fish (16), Garber (17), Petri (33), Rick Weymouth (40), Mike Balian (42) and Mike Bowen (48)......Latest UMass scoring stats show Spooner leading (17-26-43), O'Brien second (8-24-32) and Kevin Patterson third (23-8-31).

Golfers best in state

By RON ARENA

When a basketball team has the entire starting five in double figures, they are said to have depth and balance. When a hockey team wins by a 9-2 count, with nine different players on the scoring list, they are a team with depth and balance. And finally, when a golf team places their five golfers at under 80, depth and balance again prevail in the analysis.

UMass' performance yesterday at Stow Acres C.C. can be described with these adjectives. The Minutemen added the UMass State tournament to their impressive repertoire of victories, with a strong 308 total to once again leave Amherst College as a runnerup. Amherst totaled 311 to place three strokes away from the winners in the seventeen team field. (They placed second to UMass last week in a quad-match.) Stonehill (319), Lowell Tech (322), and Salem State completed the top five finishers.

Glen Sullivan again had few problems with the Stow course, with an even-par 72. The freshman offset a bogie and a double-bogie with three birdies on the day to create his score. John Lasek continued his consistency with a 78, while Howie Terban, Rick Olsen, and Joe Artman all carded 79's. Despite Sullivan's score, low medalist honors went to a non-Minuteman, as Stonehill's George Zahringer's 71 earned him low score in the competition.

Eighty-five golfers participated in the affair, and only fifteen scored under 80. In other words, of the eighty UMass individual opponents, only ten came in under 80, while UMass had the entire team at 79 or better. For you statistic freaks, that means that UMass had a percentage of 100 with scores under 80, while their opponents scored on 15 per cent in that category. And what can one conclude from that besides the local linksters being 85 per cent better (It's easy to exaggerate with statistics without lying)? Only that UMass possesses the best golf team in the area.

Coach Gaudette was once again pleased following the match — how can he not be? We played well again. I felt today's performance is an indication of what we can do." I'm sure if you check back-issues of the Collegian, an identical quote can be found, but as Gaudette claims, what can you say when you keep winning.

Today, at Hickory Ridge in a 1:00 contest, the golfers put that winning season on the line once again. Coast Guard will provide the opposition, and prior to this week's action, the Academy had compiled a 10-3 record.

However, Gaudette seemed unenthusiastic with the match, as well as the winning skein. "I'm not really too concerned with today's match. As a matter of fact, I intend to rest a couple players so others can see action." He went on to explain that a lot of his other players have been hitting the ball well, and if he places the goal of being undefeated above anything else, these players will never get to participate. For example, he noted Tim Kurty as one who has seen little action but has been playing well.

TEE TIME ... Glen Sullivan will be one Minuteman definitely not performing tomorrow ... Joe Artman and Howie Terban may also rest ... The tournament victory earned the team a permanent trophy and a temporary plaque which will go to the winner each year ... The players also received individual trophies ...

A dual match, such as today's doesn't psych the team as much as a tournament. Therefore, Monday's Salem State tournament, with ten teams, looms as a more important day.

At the Bunker Hill summit conference

Dukakis firm on budget cut

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

CHARLESTOWN — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis painted a grim fiscal picture of the state's budget Saturday and asked the leaders of the state's colleges and universities to take their share of cuts so that Massachusetts can get "its house in order."

Dukakis, holding firm to his proposed 10 per cent cut in spending for public higher education, told over 100 trustees, presidents and administrators, to use the flexibility granted with fiscal autonomy to make the necessary cuts without affecting student services and increasing tuition.

Other legislators at the day long summit conference at Bunker Hill Community College echoed Dukakis' support of higher education and voiced concern over the deepening economic trouble of the state.

The chief administrators of various public higher education schools in the morning session agreed that fiscal autonomy was a "necessary budget tool" while in their presentations described achievements in the past decade.

The summit conference was called last month by Senate President Kevin Harrington who also presided over the meeting. Harrington at the end of the session announced that he had asked the chairmen of the education committee to head two informal ad hoc committees with the mission of reviewing both the structure and fiscal management of public higher education.

Harrington said, "It is fairly clear that there are two areas that really must be reviewed; one is the area of the structure of Massachusetts public higher education and two, fiscal management." He said he expects the ad hoc committees to draft proposals for changes by June.

Public higher education schools enroll more than 100,000 students. The system includes the three UMass campuses, 11 state colleges, 15 community colleges, Southeastern Massachusetts University and Lowell Technological Institute.

Dukakis said, "You have been spared cuts so far. Fiscal autonomy gives you the flexibility to make the economies we've been talking about. Other departments don't have this flexibility."

Public higher education was granted fiscal autonomy in 1962 — the authority to transfer money from one account to another.

UMass President Robert C. Wood noted that with fiscal autonomy he was able to cut $3.8 million from this year's budget. Wood said, "there was no easy road to a bargain basement education" and made three recommendations that might provide relief during the hard times:"

Governor Michael Dukakis talks at Saturday's Summit Conference as House Speaker David Bartley looks on.

—an advance authorization for professional personnel to be followed by funding.

—synchronization of maintenance and capital budget formations for a five-year pers period.

—the development of the concept of student cost using instructional cost and auxiliary student needs.

Senator Walter Boverini (D—Lynn) said, "I support fiscal autonomy but the support is dwindling in our society." Boverini, chairman of the education committee said political support for fiscal autonomy is "contingent on accountability."

Michael Daly (D—Brighton), the representative chairman of the education committee, warned the administrators of public higher education to "be on the offense and make your case clear enough so we in the Legislature can support you in the next couple of years."

"No other state in the nation in any way faces this kind of problem," said Dukakis.

The problems the Commonwealth faces are a 12 per cent unemployment, sagging industry and a $431 million deficit this year.

In addition, "without one iota of program expansion the deficit we face in fiscal 1976 is $700 million over this year's budget deficit," said Dukakis.

Dukakis is asking for an increase in the cigarette and gasoline tax as well as floating bonds to pay this year's deficit.

Senator James Kelly (D—Oxford) said, "the problem the legislators are faced with is choosing between allocating money for education, welfare, mental health and state employees and "how do we give the proper amount to each branch."

Kelly said the decision is not one of philosophy but "practical economic problems."

Boverini, leading off the afternoon session, asked the leaders of public higher education to also make "difficult decisions — whether it be tuition increases or curtailment of expansion — we ask you to make decisions too."

Union for Student Employees

Officials disagree over possible hearing delay

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

UMass administrators may ask for a delay at a hearing for the recognition of the Union for Student Employees (USE) set for June 23, according to Michael Bardsley, USE chairperson.

June 23, a date set last Thursday by the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission at an informal meeting of UMass legal counselors and USE representatives in Boston is far enough into the future for the "administration to develop legal arguments in defense of a hearing delay," Bardsley said.

Disagreeing with Bardsley, UMass Labor Relations Coordinator Harold S. Overing said, "There's no reason in the world for a delay." Overing said there were many reasons cited by commission examiner Mary Lally on Thursday for setting a formal hearing June 23, and he has "no knowledge" of anyone trying to delay that hearing date.

John Corker, director of Campus Center whose employees are seeking the union, agreed with Overing. "I don't know why they'd ask for a delay," he said.

Bardsley believes the administration's "biggest tactic" in keeping USE away from UMass is to delay the hearing. "The students will be pretty angry if they (administration) delay recognition past the 23rd." Bardsley warned that since the students have the power to strike, the students "may or may not" strike at the commencement if they are continually unrecognized.

When asked why UMass will not agree to USE even though enough student signatures have been gathered for instant student union recognition, Overing said he hasn't seen any signatures.

"There was no evidence presented at the informal meeting last Thursday," Overing said that showed student signatures. It was reported in Friday's Collegian that 60 per cent of the Campus Center employes have signed cards applying for membership to the union, 10 per cent more than is legally necessary for formal recognition. "No mention of these cards was made at the meeting," Overing said.

Bardsley said UMass hasn't agreed to USE recognition, "They're (the administration) very scared about the concept of student employes having their own union."

According to a USE spokesperson, the committee would rather go through the State Labor Relations Commission because "they would put more pressure on the administration. It's our best alternative," the spokesperson said.

Director of Personnel and Financial Services, John DeNyse said the university's position on why they didn't agree with USE

Women's Conference '75: Productive, expansive

By ANN EMERY
Staff Reporter

This is the first part of a five part series reporting the results of the 1975 University Women's Conference, which was held January 21-25 at UMass. Part One tells how the Conference evolved and who participated.

The report on the University Women's Conference is out, and the results show a double significance. one, that the conference was the largest and most productive gathering of women on the UMass campus to date, and two, that the conference represented the culmination of five years of amazing growth of the Women's Movement on campus.

Women on the UMass campus have been organizing around women's issues for five years. The Women's Movement here started in 1970 with individual and small group consciousness raising, and has expanded since then into larger, more formalized groups, such as Everywoman's Center, Southwest Women's Center, the Women's Studies Program, and many more.

Although an attempt was made, in 1973, to organize women campuswide, it soon became apparent that womanhours were still too few and precious to be able to maintain this type of organization in addition to developing the other newly established programs. But on November 11, 1974, representatives from various groups on campus met informally, and decided to once again attempt to organize women campuswide.

The first step would be to provide a time and space for University women to share their knowledge on specific issues within a conference format. Two weeks later, the Office of the Provost offered funding to Southwest Women's Center, Women's Studies, and the Everywoman's Center for intersession programming. The three groups decided to use the money for the already discussed conference, and collaborated with over one hundred women in the open planning and facilitation of the first University Women's Conference.

The Conference was held January 21-25, 1975, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. each day. The first four days were focused on general information sharing, and the last day was focused on summarizing, generating recommendations, strategizing, and planning for action. The goals of the Conference were:

- to make contact with other University women
- to share knowledge on issues that affect University women
- to identify areas in which action is needed
- to plan for cooperative action on these issues
- to encourage the participation of all University-connected women in creating a University that realistically meets the needs of women
- to raise consciousnesses
- to replenish, and celebrate womanhood together

In those five days and nights, 712 people attended the 120 workshops offered. The Conference culminated in a celebration dance in the Blue Wall, with over 500 people dancing to Lilith.

Of the 712 people attending, 74.6 per cent, or 534 participants, were UMass affiliated. 55 per cent were students, 3.1 per cent faculty, 13.4 per cent staff, 3.1 per cent student-faculty wives and alumni, 5 per cent Five College faculty-staff-students, and 20.4 per cent community or no status given.

The University Women's Conference signified many different things to many different people. But one thing is certain: never before have so many women on this campus being concerned about, and involved in, changing the University to realistically meet the needs of women. The Conference report reflects to date the largest collective voice of UMass women.

Copies of the report can be obtained at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall.

Budget cut developments...

...SAC calls for demonstration

The UMass Student Action Committee (SAC), a student group which organized a two-day campus wide moratorium and a demonstration of 1500 students at the State House last week, is calling for a massive demonstration of students for the purpose of confronting Governor Michael Dukakis over budget, tax and tuition issues when he speaks here tonight.

Students will rally at 6:30 p.m. outside of the Student Union building, where the Governor is scheduled to speak at 8:00 p.m. The rally will include speakers, music and guerrilla theater.

The rally will end when Dukakis begins his speech in the Student Union Ballroom. Students plan on listening to the Governor and then responding with questions when his speech is over.

SAC has sharply criticized Governor Dukakis' recent graduated tuition and tax hike proposals as well as his previously announced education and welfare cutbacks. Committee spokesperson Jim Leas said, "If the graduated tuition would lower tuition for the majority of students without decreasing financial aid we would support Dukakis' proposals. However, we see this as nothing but a plan for graduated tuition increases that will squeeze more money out of students at UMass."

Leas said, "The newly proposed tax on gasoline and cigarettes are regressive in that they hit the poor, the workers and the students. These are the same people who are hurt the most by inflation, recession and budget cutbacks."

"At the same time, Mr. Dukakis is proposing to lower, in fact, to cut in half, the taxes that are paid by corporations," Leas added.

Students plan on suggesting alternative budget, tax and tuition proposals to the Governor at the conclusion of his speech.

The SAC expects a large crowd at tonight's rally demonstrating against cutbacks in higher education and in welfare, and against tuition increases and regressive taxes.

...SBA dean sees no solution

By PAUL BONARRIGO
Staff Reporter

The top person at the UMass School of Business said there is "no out" from the proposed state budget cuts and the "fat" which UMass has built up in good times must be trimmed.

George S. Odiorne, dean of UMass School of Business Administration, said in a Collegian interview here late last week that "We are confronted with an allocation of scarce resources over limitless demands."

"Cutting resources is never a comfortable way to cut budgets but it has got to land somewhere," said Odiorne.

Odiorne said higher taxation would not be a cure for the present state deficit.

"Tax raising is like putting a band aid on cancer," he said. "Higher taxes would only hurt taxpayers and drive more businesses out of Massachusetts, creating further unemployment," he added.

Odiorne said "Student, faculty and administrative cutbacks must not defeat the long-run objective of quality education." He said that the Five Year Plan he has outlined for the School of Business Administration aims at just these goals.

Odiorne said, "Rational planning of a preventative character can insure quality education in the future. Added revenues must be generated by raising outside funds from alumni and foundation."

He said that centralization of the presently decentralized administration would be the best way of allocating funds effectively and would provide for collectively dealing with future problems.

Odiorne regarded the town meeting and moratorium as an effective display of decision making.

"Students are very responsible people and should be more involved enacting resolutions on decisions that affect them," he said. "A well organized lobbying effort in the State House would also be beneficial to the students," he added.

Allen Torrey, resigning Town Manager, and his wife Sylvia are wished the best of luck by many friends and admirers Sunday afternoon in Town Hall.

After 21 years of service

Torrey honored in testimonial

By DEBBI DiMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

Allen L. Torrey, who resigned his position as Amherst Town Manager after 21 years, was honored yesterday with a reception at Town Hall. More than 100 people attended.

"Allen Torrey brought efficiency and imagination to town government," said Theodore S. Bacon, town planner, as he introduced Torrey. Torrey took office on May 10, 1954 after he was selected from a field of 51 applicants for the job of Town Manager, said Bacon.

Amherst residents voted to establish a town manager government by a narrow margin in 1953.

Torry was presented with a glass bowl inscribed with his name and a camera and film. He will also be given a photo album containing photographs commemorating "Allen Torrey Day."

Stanley P. Ziomek, head of the Department of Public Works, announced that hundreds of trees will be planted this year in Torrey's name. Torrey had opted for the tree planting program when asked how he would like to be remembered by the town.

Torrey called the gifts and the reception, "beautiful and touching." He resigned to accept a post as treasurer of Hampshire College.

He also spoke about the effectiveness of Amherst's government, adding, "I hate to see the Town Meeting making policy decisions and the Selectmen making administrative choices which should be made by the Town Meeting."

If everybody sticks to their functions, the town government should fare well in the future, according to Torrey.

Torrey also asked that the new town manager, when selected, "be given the same consideration and support you've given me."

Nancy Eddy, vice-chairman of the Board of Selectmen called Torrey "the best politician in town."

"He has been able to meld the needs and interests of diverse groups and has foreseen many changes in the town," said Eddy.

"Allen practiced affirmative action policies before the term was ever adopted in his hiring of women, youth, and members of minority groups over the years. He has worked to insure fair representation for all Amherst residents," Eddy added.

Torrey was given two standing ovations during the reception.

2 Springfield men arrested for unrelated Cance thefts

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

An extensive investigation by the Detective Unit of the UMass Police Department has resulted in the arrest Friday of two persons involved in robberies at Cance Dormitory.

According to Captain Robert Joyce, UMass Police, the investigation has "been underway" since the initial robberies that occurred in February and April 1975.

A Springfield male, Courtney Rose, is believed to be involved in an armed robbery that took place at Cance House February 18. Rose was also believed to be involved in another case of unarmed robbery and assault and battery at Cance.

Another Springfield man, Mack Jacobs, was arrested in connection with an unarmed robbery and an assault and battery that also occurred at Cance, on April 7, 1975.

The two cases are believed to be interrelated. Rose and Jacobs were arrested and arraigned in court on Friday. Their cases were continued and will be heard within the next ten days, said Joyce.

"I would like to praise the Detective Division for their numerous hours of investigation in order to develop these cases, and also the Springfield Police Department for their assistance and co-operation," he added.

Students march in ghetto, demand probe of shooting

By DOROTHY MULLER
Staff Reporter

At 10:30 a.m. Saturday, residents of Springfield's Puerto Rican North End ghetto were invisible except for a few half clothed kids throwing rocks in the open sandlots.

By 11:30 a.m. mothers and children were hanging out the windows of the five story tenements. Meanwhile the men gathered on the corners yelling support to 200 of their neighbors and fifty members of Ahora, the [illegible] speaking [illegible] organization marching to Court Square.

The fi[illegible] UMass students [illegible] marching [illegible] support of the Puerto Rican community's demand [illegible] investigation into the shooting death by two Springfield policemen of a Puerto Rican youth.

Shouting, "Stop that killing now," over a portable microphone, spokesperson for the Puerto Rican People's Coalition, Jose Barreto demanded the suspension without pay of the two officers under investigation. "Chief of Police Fenton said he could not suspend the two officers during the investigation. But he simply refused to do so."

"We have suffered years and years of police brutality. This is not the first time," noted Barreto. "When this happened before, they hurt an arm or a leg. But this is a murder."

Supporting Barreto's accusation, Ahora students carried bilingual signs saying, "The next one could be you," and chanted "Wake up, Boriqua; defend what is yours."

Barreto noted the fact that Springfield with its population of 20,000 Puerto Ricans has no Spanish-speaking personnel on the police force and only one Spanish-speaking fireman. "This time they have killed one of our brothers, not just hurt him. This is racism."

[illegible] thanking the various organizations who participated, Barreto noted the participation not only of Ahora students and members of the Puerto Rican community in Springfield but he said, "This is not a brown coalition." He noted the participation of "white" individuals representing organizations such as Pioneer Valley Women's League.

The marchers took up the chant, "Red, brown, black, white, All the people must unite." Barreto was applauded by the marchers when he shouted, "In this people there is power."

He was cheered again when he said. "We will go through all the right channels. Nobody's calling the police pigs. But we will do our own investigation. We will hold our own court and tribunal. Let the police defend themselves. This investigation is a joke."

Lecture provides insight to J.F.K. assassination

By DON AUCOIN
Staff Reporter

Over 2000 UMass students sat for three hours last Friday in apparent fascination as they were brought back in time to November 22, 1963, the day of John Kennedy's assassination.

"Who Killed J.F.K.?" was the theme of the lecture, which was accompanied by slides and film of the events surrounding the president's murder. Harvey Yazijian, of the Cambridge-based Assassination Information Bureau, said his group was researching the "historical truth rather than the political truth" of Kennedy's death.

Yazijian showed the crowd a "bootleg copy" of what he termed "the most important home-movie ever taken": the film taken by Dallas dressmaker Abraham Zapruder which caught in graphic detail the shooting.

There were gasps and cries from the audience as the film showed the shots striking Kennedy in the head, blowing the top of his skull off. Yazijian noted that the shots appeared to strike Kennedy from the front, contradicting the Warren Commission's findings that the president was shot from behind. The film showed Kennedy's body being thrown backwards.

Yazijian said he believes that Lee Harvey Oswald, the man convicted of the assassination, did not shoot at all. Oswald was probably part of a conspiracy to kill Kennedy, he said, but was "nothing more than a patsy".

According to the Warren Commission, Oswald fired three shots in 5.5 seconds, accomplishing the killing single-handedly. Yazijian showed slides which showed that Oswald was shooting from a "near-impossible angle". Also, Yazijian said, Oswald was a poor shot, and in later test demonstrations several expert marksmen were unable to duplicate his feat, though they were shooting at an unmoving object.

The rifle used by Oswald was "so out of whack", said Yazijian, that F.B.I. men refused to fire it after the killing, fearing it would blow up. The F.B.I. later said this problem with the rifle may have helped Oswald hit a moving target.

Of Oswald, Yazijian said facetiously, "They felt he was capable of doing almost anything...a superman!" Oswald was a dupe, he said. "They had to find someone to blame it on, someone with a left-wing veneer."

Yazijian cited instances before the assassination where Oswald was supposedly seen in two different places at once. Yazijian said he suspects that Oswald may have been "set up".

The lecture contained many examples of the difference between official explanation of various incidents and that of researchers looking into those incidents.

Yazijian told the crowd that doctors inspecting Kennedy's body said "his throat wound was one of entrance not of exit." He also dwelt at length on what he called "Superbullet," the bullet which The Warren Commission said killed Kennedy.

According to Yazijian, the Warren Commission found this one bullet passed through Kennedy's throat, then hit John Connally in the front seat of the car, hitting him in the armpit, then passing through his chest, then breaking his wrist, and finally coming to rest in Connally's thigh.

Yazijian said this bullet was examined after the assassination and was found to be in "near-perfect condition." He showed a picture of this nearly unmarked bullet alongside a picture of a bullet which was "fired once through the wrist only, of a cadaver." This second bullet was smashed totally out of shape.

The Warren Commission ignored other evidence, he said, including testimony from eyewitnesses that "at least one shot came from the grassy knoll", in which case that shot could not have come from Oswald.

Yazijian related the fact that "eighteen key eyewitnesses were dead three years after the killing." He said researchers concluded that the odds against this happening were "100,000 trillion to 1."

The most compelling evidence, judging from crowd reaction, were the Zapruder film,

Communists release former Vietnam leaders

Military committee now rules country

Compiled from Wires

The Viet Cong radio said yesterday that Duong Van "Big" Minh, who surrendered Saigon to the Communists in the last act of his two-day presidency of South Vietnam, and 18 other former top government officials are being released from custody.

Radio Saigon, now also known as Liberation radio, said the decision to let Minh and the others return to their families was made following a meeting of the officials with the "military management committee" that is now administering the capital.

The 11-man committee is headed by Col. Gen. Tran Van Tra, a North Vietnamese army soldier who is the top Communist commander in South Vietnam. The broadcast did not say where or how the officials were detained.

The radio announcement about Gen. Tra, monitored in Bangkok, said he heads an 11-man committee assigned to protect Saigon and adjacent Gia Dinh. Tra was also the chief Viet Cong delegate to the Joint Military Commission set up in Saigon after the 1973 Paris peace accords.

The broadcast said the main purpose of the committee was to help return normal life to the people of the two cities. It said the committee was directing a cleanup campaign and that thousands of students had joined up.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported from Hanoi that people in Saigon were scrubbing walls of slogans and posters put up during the old days.

Although the broadcast took a conciliatory tone in the announcement, it also ordered former members of the South Vietnamese general military staff to turn themselves in or face death.

Liberation radio said the 18 other former government officials being released included Vice President Nguyen Van Huyen and Premier Vu Van Mau.

The Revolutionary Government, which took over after Saigon surrendered to the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese last Wednesday, also announced it wants South Vietnam's seat at the United Nations, Liberation Radio said.

Minh was sworn in as president April 28 and less than 48 hours later made the formal, unconditional surrender of Saigon to the Communists, giving them victory after a 35-year war against Japan, France, the United States and South Vietnam.

Nguyen Van Thieu, who resigned as president April 21, is in exile on Taiwan. Thieu was succeeded by Tran Van Huong, who stepped aside for Minh.

Saigon radio said Saturday that a large number of officers and men of "the general headquarters of the Saigon puppet army" already have registered with the new rulers and ordered the rest to do so by this afternoon.

The radio said those who did not do so and turn in their weapons will be "severely punished," a Vietnamese Communist euphemism for death.

They were ordered to report to a school in a town just north of Saigon, a possible indication it was being turned into a reindoctrination center.

Though most signs pointed to a massive social, political and economic reorganization under way in Saigon, at least one bureaucracy reopened in the same spot with the same man in charge. The maritime transport office was reported back in business. Owners of seagoing and river vessels were ordered to report for re-registration.

The new regime announced the first edition Sunday of its newspaper, "Liberated Saigon," and urgently called on news vendors to pick up copies. All old newspapers were closed down after the surrender.

Radio Hanoi, meanwhile, broadcast the text of a diplomatic note it said had been sent to Thailand supporting the Viet Cong's demand that ships and planes brought to that country by fleeing refugees be sent back.

Refugees brought a total of 129 military aircraft into Thailand during the last days of the war, all of them supplied under U.S. military aid. The United States contends the aircraft cannot be given back to South Vietnam.

Refugees continue to enter US; still grateful despite criticism

By United Press International

With their leader proclaiming "America spells freedom," a confused band of 374 Vietnamese refugees settled in a dusty tent city near Eglin AFB in the Florida Panhandle yesterday and told of their escape from Communism.

Shortly after dawn a chartered Northwest Orient 747 jetliner from Guam touched down at Eglin Air Force Base with the first wave of exiles headed for Florida. It disgorged a solemn group of neatly-dressed, mostly middle-class exiles while the Niceville High School band played "God Bless America."

They will be followed today by 634 other refugees. Col. Bill Keeler, commander of the refugee camp, said two military C-141 transports carrying 130 exiles each are scheduled to land at 6:15 a.m. and 11:15 a.m. and another 747 will come in at 1:35 p.m. with another 374 on board.

"It was supposed to be one every other day but they slipped two in on us," the colonel said. "It is going to tax our volunteer manpower.

There were no protesters among the 100 or so spectators when the plane arrived at 6:40 a.m. CDT. The only placard was a 10-foot banner unfurled by three Protestant missionaries to Vietnam which read "The Christian churches of America greet you."

The refugee airlift started again Saturday night, with planes arriving from the Philippines, 1,500 miles away.

Most of the refugees will live in Tent City at Orote, where more than 17,000 refugees already live and where another 1,400 tents are being erected to accommodate newcomers.

Edward F. O'Conner of the U.S. Immigration Service said, "So far we have encountered no criminal types, no narcotic types and no undesirables."

An estimated 20,000 have been interviewed by immigration officers and 15,000 of those have already been flown to the U.S. mainland.

Among the notables who arrived in the Philipines were Ambassador Graham Martin and former South Vietnamese Premier Nguyen Cao Ky. Ky left almost immediately for Guam so as not to offend Philipine officials who have disapproved of the American evacuation operation and said Ky's presence would violate the agreement allowing American bases on the islands.

Ky is coming to the United States and has discussed with friends the possibility of living in a remote area of the southwest in a commune-like group.

Lee Thi Tam, 34, a nurse at the American dispensary in Saigon, fled with her husband, their two children, and a half kilo of gold. But her husband, an importer, had to leave behind nine children by a previous marriage. "I am afraid the Viet Cong will kill them all because I worked for the Americans," he said. "I don't think I will ever see them again."

A desperate band of about 4,500 Vietnamese, rescued from their sinking ship Friday arrived in Hong Kong yesterday aboard the Danish freighter Clara Maersk. Ship Captain Anto Olsen said, "The sinking ship was packed, I mean really packed, They had people on every part of the ship, even hanging through the railing."

"We threw out everything we had," Olsen said, "nets, gangways, ladders, everything so they could come aboard."

One woman, he said, had a baby while being transferred during the six-hour rescue operation.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Rev. Jesse Jackson yesterday urged the government to stop resettling Vietnamese refugees and start devising long-range programs to rebuild Vietnam and provide jobs for America's own unemployed.

Jackson, a leading advocate of black civil rights and economic uplift programs, said Congress should enact emergency legislation to help the nation's nine million jobless — a group he described as "a colony of refugees within our own nation."

Newsweek reports Cambodia bloodbath

NEW YORK [AP] — Newsweek magazine reported yesterday that U.S. Intelligence had intercepted radio orders from the Communist regime in Cambodia calling for the execution of thousands of supporters of the defeated Lon Nol government.

"Thousands have already been executed," the magazine quoted a U.S. official as saying, adding that the purge could lead to the slaughter of "tens of thousands of Cambodians loyal to the Lon Nol regime."

Newsweek said the messages indicated the killings would apply to all officers of the Cambodian army and their wives, down to the rank of second lieutenant.

Viet ships surrender

By The Associated Press

Hundreds of South Vietnamese ships have anchored at offshore islands flying white flags after their crews surrendered to Saigon's new rulers, Hanoi radio reported yesterday.

It added that thousands of soldiers and sailors, including 1,503 officers, "reported themselves to the People's Liberation Army." Radio reports from South Vietnam said former navy men were being urged to bring in their warships from off the coast and not "run after the Americans."

College grads exceed available jobs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Labor Department says there are more college graduates than there are college-level jobs in many fields between now and 1985, and someone with a degree may have to take a job that previously had lower educational requirements.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics predicted recently in a 10-year projection of occupational manpower and training that employers would probably hire graduates instead of non-graduates.

"Problems for college graduates will more likely be employment below the level of skill for which they were trained, resulting in job dissatisfaction and high occupational mobility, rather than unemployment," it said.

The problem may not get better. The Veterans Administration said college enrollment was up 24 per cent for Vietnam-era vets — 1.6 million of them are already using GI educational benefits, a higher rate than those who served in World War II or Korea.

"Enrollments during the past three months," a VA spokesman said, "have been spurred both by the increased payments and by economic conditions."

The study projected job growth levels of 141.7 per cent for physical therapist assistants and aides, 160.9 per cent for occupational therapy assistants and 100 per cent for occupational therapists. If predicted 100,000 job openings a year for nursing aides, orderlies and attendants; 70,000 for practical nurses and 75,000 for registered nurses.

The study said colleges and universities overproduced in many areas.

Although only 2,600 jobs are likely to open up each year for newspaper reporters, it said, an annual output of 5,114 undergraduate degrees in journalism, 853 master's degrees and 15 doctoral degrees was reported.

The predicted oversupply of psychologists was even more marked. The study said 4,300 new job openings a year are expected in that field, while colleges and universities anticipate turning out 44,093 graduate and undergraduate degrees in psychology — 10 times the projected annual needs.

Cape Cod jobs will be scarce

CHATHAM [AP] — This may be the hardest year yet for college students to find summer jobs on Cape Cod.

Although there has been no change in the number of jobs available, there are more college applicants than ever before and more competition from permanent residents of Cape Cod who are out of work according to a Chamber of Commerce spokesman.

How many of the 8,500 people on the Cape who are currently unemployed end up in seasonal jobs usually held by students in hard to tell at this point.

But local residents are being hired for two basic reasons.

These people are available after Labor Day when most students usually go back to school.

Also, the local people are on the Cape now, an advantage in getting the jobs that are available.

Kent State recalls 1970 student deaths

KENT, Ohio [UPI] — Kent State University yesterday commemorated the May 4, 1970, killing of four students and wounding of nine others by National Guardsmen. But many students and faculty members said the observance had lost its emotional impact.

One of the wounded students said the annual observance had become a farce, institutionalized by pipe-smoking historians.

The students were killed during an anti-war demonstration which centered on the United States' incursion into Cambodia. The school's annual memorial service this year included as speakers Elizabeth McAllister, an anti-war activist, and former Democratic Sen. Eugene McCarthy.

"Students here now look at the 1970 shootings like a Gettysburg," said Dr. Jerry M. Lewis, an associate professor of sociology who was an eyewitness to the shootings. "The students tend to look at the shootings with far less emotion and less passion. They tend to look at the whole affair with more of a historical, analytical, intellectual approach."

One of the wounded students, Robert Stamps, 24, who is attending KSU graduate school, is troubled by such attitudes.

"May 4th carries a pious, religious, sober mood that is really a farce," Stamps said.

"The emphasis has shifted to education, but the average Kent student doesn't really care or understand what it was all about. May 4th is a dead issue, literally and figuratively."

Killed in the burst of gunfire were Allison Krause of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Jeffrey Miller of Plainview, N.Y.; William Schroeder of Lorain, Ohio; and Sandra Scheuer of Youngstown, Ohio.

Both McCarthy and Ms. McAllister said the Kent State shootings must not be forgotten.

"Forgetting is the one great sin and it's so easy ... the events are already forgotten by most Americans, if not by most Kent State students," Ms. McAllister said. "Remember Vietnam — how we got there, what we did there, what it did to us," she added. "To remember is the only hope for America."

McCarthy, the 1968 Democratic presidential candidate and a major anti-war advocate when he was in Congress, said quick anger, bitterness and the urge to retaliate must be forgotten.

"But don't forget the persons responsible," he said. "Don't forget the arrogance of righteousness which brought us to Vietnam was not very different from the attitude that brought what happened here at Kent State."

Bellotti raps cuts

BOSTON [AP] — State Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti said it would be "totally impossible" for him to provide essential services to the state, if he accepts budget cuts in his department proposed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Bellotti said, "My budget is 80 per cent salaries, which means if I take this $1.2 million cut, which is 30 per cent of my budget, then I must fire 40 per cent of the remaining people."

Brandeis hearing set

WALTHAM, Mass. [UPI] — A court hearing was scheduled for today on attempts by Brandeis University to force some 30 students from a campus building the students have peacefully occupied six days.

The situation on campus during the weekend remained calm, amid indications of progress in negotiations between students and administrators.

Students lounged outside Pearlman Hall listening to music and speakers urging support of those inside protesting the school's budget policies they say hit hardest at minorities.

State wants primary

BOSTON [AP] — Massachusetts is determined not to let New Hampshire retain the honor of having the nation's first presidential primary in 1976.

Leaders in the Massachusetts legislature plan to file a bill this month which would set the state's primary date as early as necessary to compete with New Hampshire.

"If we have to set the primary date at half time of the Rose Bowl game on New Year's day we'll do it," said Massachusetts Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem.

MD strike declines

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Many Northern California doctors yesterday were giving in and paying soaring malpractice insurance rates that their anesthetist colleagues have boycotted for four days.

The rates, increased by as high as 400 per cent, have affected about 4,000 doctors. The anesthetists' work stoppage — except for life-and-death cases — began when they let their malpractice insurance lapse Thursday in protest.

About 30 San Francisco area hospitals were affected, and six were not.

Arab bomb explodes

By United Press International

A time-bomb explosion ripped through an apartment building in Jerusalem yesterday in the second Arab guerrilla attack in the Israeli capital in two days, Israeli authorities said.

The guerrillas claimed that the blast killed or wounded a number of Israeli officers, but Israeli officials said only four persons were wounded.

Want To Work With Children?

85% of Our Graduates Are!

The Elementary—Early Childhood Education Program at Antioch Graduate School combines active work in a teaching internship with graduate seminars to prepare you to be a teacher.

- — receive a Master's degree and New Hampshire State Certification
- — a 15 month program includes 9 months of teaching in a unique, program affiliated school for young children as well as in cooperating public school classrooms and child care centers.
- — seminars emphasize an exploration of the role of the teacher and competencies in designing curriculum based on an understanding of human development and methods of teaching in open and traditional classrooms.
- — specialized resources are available in environmental education, children's language and literature, and movement curriculum.
- — a small program encouraging active student and faculty participation and support for the beginning teacher as well as enrichment for the already employed teacher.

Daly said, "I do not believe that it makes any sense to solve the Commonwealth's fiscal problems by increasing tuition." Tuition for state higher education schools is $300 a year.

Daly also criticized the "excessive amount of backslapping" by the morning presentators and said he hoped more discussion would be directed to the next 10 or 15 years.

recognition was "made clear" at Thursday's meeting. The university's position was presented by counselor for labor affairs Martin Skoler who said UMass needs time "to examine the relationship between the students and the university."

According to Bardsley, the administration "made nothing clear" at the meeting.

Even though Bardsley cited the possibility of a delay in the June 23 hearing by the administration, he was happy with the June date set by Labor Relations Commission. "Given the normal bureaucracy and red tape, the 23rd is a good date." he said.

Ed Harrington plans to restructure ABC

BOSTON [AP] — Edward F. Harrington, the new chairman of the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission, is planning to recommend that the agency's structure be abolished.

Harrington favors naming a single executive director to replace ABCC's three part-time commissioners and the full-time executive secretary they appoint.

Harrington would have the executive director appointed directly by the governor and have a term that ends when the governor's does.

Harrington said Saturday he will make his recommendations to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis. Harrington appeared on WLVI-TV's "Point of View."

★J.F.K. assassination

close-ups from this film, and slides of other photographs taken at the time of the assassination.

One photograph, half of which was "cropped out" by the Warren Commission according to Yazijian, was taken 2.5 seconds after the shooting. The "cropped-out" section shows then Vice-President Lyndon Johnson was already on the floor of his car. Yazijian questioned how Johnson was able to react so quickly, "when J.F.K.'s own Secret Service men couldn't move that fast."

The Zapruder film showed that as Kennedy's motorcade rounded a corner, several seconds before the shooting, one of his motorcycle escorts inexplicably veered off and disappeared from sight.

Yazijian told the crowd, as the film rolled, to watch for they mysterious "umbrella man." This man was so dubbed because he was standing near the motorcade when the shots rang out with his umbrella open, despite 68 degree weather.

A still photograph taken immediately after the shooting showed everyone in the picture looking in the direction of Kennedy, except the "umbrella man". This man is seen folding his umbrella under his arm and walking away. Pleas from authorities in 1963 for this man to come forth and explain his actions were fruitless.

Yazijian said he believes that this man was acting as a "visual signal for the assassins."

He rejected "crackpot" ideas about the assassination. "It's not a 'conspirator under every bed' type of thing," he said. However, he added, "It's important to remember that every election since John Kennedy's death has been decided by a bullet."

"Power changed hands that day in an insidious, sinister fashion. The people responsible for suppressing the truth still sit in positions of power; in business, the military and government."

Yazijian said "it was a home-grown intelligence movement to kill J.F.K." This movement, he said, was a combination of forces from the C.I.A., F.B.I., the military, organized crime, and business interests.

He said Kennedy was killed "out of a perverted and twisted sense of patriotism", and issued a call for unity to the audience. "If we organize, we can have our country back by 1976."

Yazijian also called for support of a bill recently proposed in Congress to re-open investigation of the murders of John and Robert Kennedy, Martin Luther King, and the attempted killing of George Wallace. He received a standing ovation at the end of the presentation and was reportedly still talking to interested students at 8:00 p.m., six hours after he EGAN SPEAKING.

Another member of the Assassination Information Bureau, Vic Han, cautioned afterwards against accepting the lecture as "gospel truth". Yazijian's remarks were speculation based on extensive research by many others in the last ten years, he said.

It is important, Han added, to "reject the lone assassin theory". "For some reason, Americans seem to believe that assassination as a political weapon does not exist in the United States."

Replicotta African Art Form open today at New Africa House

A new and exciting art form has recently appeared on the Philadelphia scene. This work of sculptured pieces of art, fashioned in West African tradition. Included in this collection which the artist calls REPLICOTTA are: totems depicting symbolic events such as marriage, birth and the family; symbolic doors; panels of royal and tribal masks. Some are replicas of famous pieces, while others represent the artist's creative contribution based on the traditional art styles.

The most amazing aspect of the collection is the medium. What is it? Is it hard wood, polished and shellacked? or is it copper? or is it bronze? It has a strong appearance and seems to be permanent artifacts.

However, this common medium in the hands of this artist is raised to a new level of flexibility and interest. The medium itself is produced from old newspapers, discarded egg cartons and other disposed of items destined for trash. It is similar that Babu (Deloris Washington) developed this new form. At the age of 29, she has developed to be a skillful and finely trained artist who through all of her extensive training has studied under important Black artists. Her style has grown and evolved from one significant stage to the next, in such a dynamic and subtle fasion that the earlier works seem to have no connection to the latter. The truth is that upon closer scrutiny it becomes stimulatingly clear that each stage in her work has given birth to the next because her work represents her total being. It is a style proceeding from years of working with ghetto youth, from a person dedicated to enable them to form their dreams into objects that proudly reflect their lives. She has lived and worked in Los Angeles, New York, and is presently resident in Philadelphia with her four year old son Che and two year old daughter Nyameke.

This introductory statement is concluded by a comment about her work in her own words:

"My work exposes the beginning of a spiritual pursuit of an ancient echo, an echo whose resounding eeriness forces me to delve deeper into its being. Its melodious throbbings have emerged through the form of papier-mache, a medium I have chosen to express the sensitive sounds of the rhythms of a past — my past — our past, indeed all that was once — THE BEGINNING."

This exciting and innovative exhibit will open in the New Africa House Art Gallery today at 2:00 p.m. Replicotta will share the Gallery with the works of Prof. Femi Richards' African Textiles class. The entire community is invited to attend this affair.

Black Scientist Society presents Honoraria

The Black Scientist Society of UMass will be presenting its Third Annual Honoraria. It will be held on May 9 and 10. The theme of this year's program will be "Contemporary Health in Black America." The program will feature Dr. Robert Murray of Howard University who will speak on the topic of "Genetic Screening," a reception will follow.

The event will be held on the first floor of Memorial Hall at 8:00 p.m. May 9. May 10 will consist of a series of workshops also dealing with "Contemporary Health Problems in Black America." The workshops are from 1:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. All aspects of science and its relationship to the Black community will be presented. The workshops will be held in Herter Hall Rooms 210-219. There will be a banquet following the workshops.

All those who attend the workshops will be presented an invitation to the banquet free of charge. The prgram will be extremely beneficial for those who have an interest in their community and in the scientific arena. Everyone is cordially invited to attend the series of events. We hope to see you there.

The overwhelming success of our Americana Hearthside Dinnerware offer has us troubled! An explanation. An apology and a guarantee from Stop & Shop.

ONE OF THE STOP & SHOP COMPANIES
Stop & Shop
SUPERMARKETS

In spite of the most careful planning and preparation to ensure ample quantities of the individual feature pieces offered each week at 29c each . . . . we've been unable to cope with the demand. And for this we apologize.

Be assured, however, we will make good our offer and have continued to issue, in the meantime, several thousands of rainchecks.

And, we've been doing everything humanly possible these past few weeks to get enough additional dinnerware to fulfill these raincheck obligations and our commitment for the balance of the program.

You have our guarantee and assurance that we shall continue to do everything possible to get this dinnerware to you as quickly as we can.

What we want you to know is what's involved in getting more of this dinnerware to you as quickly as you'd like it so you perhaps will see why we have to ask for your continued patience and understanding.

And this deserves further explanation for we do face some hard facts:

FACT: This dinnerware comes from the Orient and it does take approximately 3 weeks by ocean freighter to arrive at our Eastern Coast ports – plus a week for distribution to our stores thru our warehouses. (This assumes we have no delays which would be beyond anyone's control.)

FACT: We presently have on the high seas, in transit, five ocean freighters containing several thousand cases of this needed dinnerware due in within the next 2 to 3 weeks . . . plus another 4 freighters scheduled to leave the Orient within the next few days.

FACT: Wherever possible, we're diverting some of these freighters to West Coast ports and using so-called "Land-bridge" facilities . . . shipping by combination rail and truck overland to our warehouses . . . thus saving 5 to 8 days to get that dinnerware faster to you.

FACT: We have reordered what we consider at this time sufficient additional quantities to complete the program. We have the plants working at full capacity solely on this dinnerware for Stop & Shop.

Certainly, our intent is to fulfill our commitment . . . and as can be seen from the above . . . to do it as quickly as possible.

Here is what we're going to do:

No feature pieces on sale this week or next week (May 5 through May 17)

We will, therefore, extend our promotion by two extra weeks to make up for this omission. We will be concentrating on distributing to our stores all arriving dinnerware to fulfill our raincheck obligations . . . your rainchecks for feature pieces. So starting next Monday, May 12, please bring your dinnerware rainchecks (into the store that issued them) during your normal shopping trip and pick up the pieces we owe you. Please understand . . . It will take us a full two weeks to fill all the rainchecks outstanding . . . which means not everything will be in next week . . . but starting next Monday, May 12 and all thru next week and the week after that . . . we will be shuttling all incoming merchandise to our stores for your rainchecks.

On May 19 thru 24, we will begin cycle 2 . . . changing the order of the feature piece offerings in order that we may be able to have enough merchandise on sale to avoid any further disappointments.

Here are the weeks, dates and item schedule:

CYCLE 2 — MAY 19 - JUNE 21

Week 1 — May 19-24	— Cereal Bowls	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 2 — May 27-31	— Coffee Cup	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 3 — June 2-7	— Saucer	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 4 — June 9-14	— Salad Plates*	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 5 — June 16-21	— Dinner Plates*	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase

CYCLE 3 — JUNE 23 - JULY 28

Week 1 — June 23-28	— Cereal Bowls	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 2 — June 30-July 5	— Coffee Cup	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 3 — July 7-12	— Saucer	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 4 — July 14-19	— Salad Plates*	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase
Week 5 — July 21-26	— Dinner Plates*	29¢ w/$5.00 purchase

(*) Salad Plates and Dinner Plates come in 3 patterns: Heritage White, Bountiful and Berries 'n Cream.

Thank you for your patience and understanding. Your recognition of the value this dinnerware represents caused an unprecedented response and sellout. Completer pieces continue to be on sale every week. Feature pieces on sale only on the weeks shown in the above charts.

In fairness to all of our customers, we reserve the right to limit sales to three packages of any item except where otherwise noted. Items offered for sale not available in case lots, or to other retail dealers or wholesalers. Most items specially sale priced; some at our everyday low prices.

No more sacred cows — trim the fat

Tonight Governor Michael Dukakis will come to the University through an invitation he received three months ago. It is our hope that all students will use this opportunity to hear the Governor's position on the State's budget with Special attention to the University budget.

In recent days great quantities of energy have been expended on this topic. It is a very hot, emotional issue. Despite the tenseness of this situation, certain things must be kept in mind. Despite individual thoughts to the contrary the Governor is a rational, intelligent individual, elected by the people of this state by a considerable majority. He must be given the consideration due him.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts is in a severe financial crisis. This fiscal year alone the state is 540 million dollars in debt. The Governor, in accordance with sound financial policy, is trying to reduce the debt by cutting state spending. He has made a plea to all state agencies to take austerity measures. It is necessary for the University system to cooperate in these moves in order that all state citizens will be spared a raise in taxes. We must realize that the University will have to take budget cuts, just like all state departments. Up to this point, the University has not cooperated.

In recent days, students have been subject to many "student leaders" on campus and in the media decrying the cutting of the UMass Budget. We have seen very little impact. We have listened to rhetoric and have seen performances. We have noticed that facts are, sadly, lacking.

Certain facts must be brought out. The state, this year, has a budget deficit of 540 million dollars. A deficit can be approached two ways. First, the legislature can raise taxes, effectively screwing everyone in the state - this in the midst of rampant inflation and skyrocketing unemployment. Second, the legislature can cut costs.

The latter is the action the legislature will take. We support it. There is gross waste in certain areas of state spending. There is waste in the UMass budget. The students on this campus have been grossly mislead. They have been lead to believe that the fight against Budget cuts will benefit them. This may not be the case. President Wood has the most expensive office space in the state |$200,000 annually|; he also has a private helicopter |$60,000|. This comes out of the UMass Budget and it should be cut. Personnel and salaries are bloated and can be cut. it is ludicrous to even consider an inflationary increase.

We believe the primary goal which students should be striving for is for a decisive voice where the cuts should come. There is a need to trim the fat. The general population of this state should not be made to bear the burden of a sacred cow. Cuts should and can be made without having any impact on students, their life or education. Just possibly, the rationality of the situation will prevail and students will redirect their energies to direct the knife to the fattest areas. It's time for students to listen to the other side, just perhaps the rational side.

'Stuff it!'

SPECTRUM Magazine invites UMass to 'stuff it'.

This is something that just has to be done. There are 10,000 good reasons for this action. Namely, 10,000 issues of SPECTRUM that need to be stuffed with posters and inserts. SPECTRUM cannot afford to have this done by the printer. Our budget is so tight this year that we have to sell our camera and get rid of our telephone to pay for this issue!

What's supposed to attract people to this stuffing party? Well, I hope that a few will come because they like SPECTRUM and want to help out. A few will come because there will be some free beer. A few good-hearted senators will come |I invited all of them to 'stuff it' last week|. And a few will come because they're so stoned they wandered into the wrong room.

The room is 168 Campus Center. The time is 7:00 tonight. Thank you, people.

Boycott alcohol

It is difficult not to notice those who are boycotting Gallo these days. I would like, however, to mention a statistic that I hope will make even those boycotting Gallo sit up and take notice.

In 1974, 3 million tons of corn and barley were used in the making of alcohol in the U.S. In a day when many people in the world are starving, it is chilling to think that the U.S. drinks itself into a stupor with alcohol made from corn that could feed starving people. Rather than just saying, "Boycott Gallo," I would say, "Boycott alcohol."

Since this ultimatum may be unrealistic at the "party capital of the world," I would at least suggest that you cut down on your consumption. I would also suggest that you give the money you would ordinarily spend on liquor to an organization which is feeding the starving. One such organization, which I would highly recommend, is World Vision Int'l., P.O. Box O, Pasadena, California 91109.

The question is how much?

The appearance of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis on campus tonight is perhaps the last chance UMass students will have to affect the budget process before summer. And it is one of the few times when Dukakis will have direct contact with a student body more diverse than anything he has ever experienced or could experience in his limited 41 years.

When the economy is booming and the state has money to spend, programs don't get cut, state employees get pay raises, and social services have the resources to help people. In the present budget crunch, the scene changes. Someone has to make decisions about how the existing system is going to allocate scarce funds.

There is no longer a question of UMass receiving a budget cut next year. The question is how much that cut will be and where it will cost us.

Ten per cent is too much. That is clear. A cut of that magnitude — $15 to $20 million on the Amherst campus alone — would be an inevitable impact on students. But a smaller cut might not.

What happens to student services depends not only on how much is cut from the 1976 budget request, but where the cuts are made. David Sugarman, a Dukakis aide, indicated in a Collegian article Friday that an administration budget includes increases in library funds, financial aid and work study money. But the budget, which reflects Dukakis' ten per cent meat cleaver, is said to cut administration, "overhead" (whatever that is) and imposes a "productivity increase" on campus workers.

It is hard to gauge the precise meaning of such phrases. Their ultimate application could be arbitrary and injurious.

But the realities of the state's fiscal condition are clear. UMass must go along with a modest cut. If we are successful in sustaining a full budget for next year and the UMass request includes over 478 new faculty and administrative positions in a year of austerity — we are only taking money from those in the state who are less powerful at lobbying — the poor, the disadvantaged and the recipients of welfare.

The Governor must realize two points if he is to make peace with UMass over this year's budget:

— A ten per cent cut cannot be sustained on short notice in a single budget year without causing arbitrary and ill-conceived cuts by the administration in areas that will affect students.

— The University must maintain faculty salaries, administrative pay scales, teaching loads and faculty-student enrollment competitive with other institutions around the country if it is to remain a quality institution for the sons and daughters of state taxpayers.

But in turn, students on this campus must rationally consider the facts:

— There is at least some truth to Dukakis' characterization of the Commonwealth as a "fiscal basket case" this year. He has finally agreed to propose new taxes, a move which is the beginning, but not the total way to sound fiscal management.

— While many of us believe that educational spending should deserve special consideration for funding regardless of the capitalist system's ability to pay, we must realize that this state's priorities cannot be altered completely in a couple of months. For the future, this institution must continue to convince lawmakers and policy-makers that education — public education — is of crucial importance to the state's future.

Whether or not there are jobs for all of us when we leave UMass, the experience gained here will allow us all to be astute citizens and aware taxpayers as we become the middle-class of Massachusetts. But that experience will be far less valuable if it is allowed to degenerate into a trade school where knowledge is taught but not sought through research, and where training to fit existing jobs is substituted for real learning which enhances future roles.

Money is the key ingredient. And this year it is in short supply. But as long as this Governor understands why we are all here, a modest budget cut is the least we can do to allow him to plan enlightened programs and tax reform for the future.

OPINION

De press an' de nooz blues

Behind the translucent glass door with the words "Tonopah Times-Record Company," printed in bold Roman letters, is the newsroom of The Tonopah Times. The room is unspectacular and it's much like any other newsroom. The occupants make it an enjoyable place in which to work, but to any outside observers who may occasionally wander inside with newsworthy items, the scene must be befuddling.

The room is nearly colorless, a dull, depressing shade of gray that is characteristic of the industrial world. The editors and reporters work together in one sizable room and the noise of frenetic typing dominates. As you enter the room, the sports desk is on the immediate left, the city and wire editors are straight ahead with the "morgue" or newspaper files on the right.

Opposite the sports desk is a group of empty desks which are used by employees of the evening paper, The Record. The center of the room is cluttered with seven desks, which are usually occupied by the society page reporters and several news reporters. The desks are old and like the typewriters, outdated. Coffee and cigarettes seem to be important parts of the journalist's kit; almost as important as the pad and pencil.

Old papers are scattered on nearly every desk, contributing to the room's Augean as well as blowzy appearance.

It's almost as if the people are unconsciously filling the stereotyped image of "sloppy, carefree, cigarette-smoking journalists."

Joe Towne, the city editor, better known as "Towney," is a young and energetic newspaperman with an amazing knowledge of what the print medium is all about. Towne is probably the friendliest person at The Times. Towney likes to rib the sports correspondents.

"Well, what's the big sports story tonight," Towne will ask the kid covering high school baseball, knowing very well that schoolboy sports rarely produce "the big stories."

The mustachioed Towne is one of few people likely to take interest in a part time worker or even initiate conversation, but sometimes his remarks are sarcastic.

As Towne walks away, photographer Flim Strobel descends from his upstairs dark room and bounces over to the sports desk. "Hey A.P., did they hang on to win?" Strobel asks. The photo editor took pictures at one of the high school basketball games and left early.

"No," replies A. P. Ripley, the sports editor, who knows that the local team's loss means a less spectacular sports page, since there's no important wire copy and his feelings are reflected in the brief response.

"When I left in the second quarter, they looked great. They were up by thirteen points. What the hell happened?" asks Strobel with consternation.

Ripley replies, "You know, they just can't win. I've seen them play great ball for thirty minutes only to watch them fall apart and lose in the final two."

Despite the motley personalities, all the people in the newsroom share the feeling of pressure. As the deadline for stories and pages nears, the jokes cease, the laughter lessens and a serious mood takes command. Reporters work hurriedly as the pressure, resembling a perking coffe pot about to boil, mounts. When the stories are completed and another night's work done, the feeling changes to one of relaxation and satisfaction. Everyone is at ease as they start on their way home at 1:30 a.m....maybe forgetting or simply neglecting the fact that everything starts all over again at six o'clock that same night.

Springtime — Es primavera

The spring semester is almost over. After the traditional final exams some students will leave for vacations, others, to begin summer jobs. Around campus are strikes and rumor of strikes. Also at Brown University, Brandeis and UMass Boston, seems to be having a piece of the action. Contemplating the campuses activism, those that now belong to the professional world said "It's Spring".

Yes, it is Spring, trees are becoming green again, birds are returning from their Caribbean Winter vacations, flowers are beautiful, and if the economy gets better some jobs will be available. Many students will even be able to spend a vacation abroad.

It is Spring, and those who love nature, will be running in the woods, they will be sailing, fishing, swimming or taking in a full sun tan in Clamberry Pond. Many students will be able to complete their 'higher' education. After all that is what universities are all about.

Even in Springfield, people will be celebrating, and already a lawyer from that city has suggested having bull fights much to the disgust of a lot of people who think that such a sport constitutes cruelty against animals. Nobody seems to worry about the torero (bullfighter) though after he is only risking his life.

I'm trying to imagine the bull fight, those sports people, big hunters, will get tickets just to be in the front line. Latinos will be fanticizing about emperial Rome with its Coliseum.Industry will be having its day, 'tequila' from "Old Mr. Boston" distilleries will be sold everywhere, and all kinds of Mexican and Spanish products from 'sombreros' and 'zarapes' to enchiladas' and 'burritos'.

Puerto Ricans also will be having a big day with their new 'Mediterranean', 'Ancient Greek' and 'Spanish' imitation products to sell. And don't forget the traditional American industry: Listerine, because after a very exciting bull fight, the majority of the people will have sore throats from all that 'OLE' 'OLE' shouting.

Already some people are thinking of importing from Texas a great quantity of tortillas flour, so a couple of hundred thousands of tacos, Burritos and enchiladas could be made, and obviously sell to the public. Caribbean countries will provide the hot fruits of which chile is made.

What is most important, the Spanish Speaking community will forget their problems and lack of representation in Springfield's government, agencies and private businesses, and industry; or at least that is what some people hope, after all, Spring is here... Ole y Ole!

El semestre de primavera esta por terminar, con la excepcion de los examenes finales. El estudiantado estara dentro de poco iniciando sus vacaciones, o sus trabajos de verano. Diferentes universidades estan con huelgas o rumores de huelga. Ante esta situacion, los que hoy pertenecen al mundo profesional, al recordar sus tiempos de estudiantes, dicen 'Es primavera'.

Es primavera, los arboles empiezan a tornarse verdes, los pajaros retornan de sus vacaciones en el Caribe, las flores son mas bellas y si la economia del pais se restablece tendrehos la oportunidad de trabajar, e incluso de ir de vacaciones al extranjero.

Mucha gente estara tomando su bano de sol, despues de todo parece que en primavera todo el mundo quiere tener la piel color brown. Incluso muchos estaran corriendo por los bosques, pezcando, admirando la naturaleza.

Incluso en el campo de primavera, debo decir, Springfield, puede que se celebre una corrida de toros, o al menos es lo que recomienda un abogado. Algunos americanos ya se han escandilizado diciendo que eso es crueldad contra los animales. Bueno, como es una costumbre latina...

Me imagino dicha corrida, .. gran dia para los negociantes y la industria... tequila original, |hecha en Boston|, los cazadores de caza mayor, comprando tickets para la primera fila. Habra tambien gran cantidad de 'sombreros' y zarapes, a lo mejor con tickecitos que dicen 'made in Mexico' y 'made in Spain'. Y de hecho la masa de las tortillas para los tacos, enchiladas y burritos, sera 'pura mexicana', e 'importada desde Texas.'

Incluso de Puerto Rico, tendran oportunidad de enviar los nuevos productos 'mediterraneos', 'griegos' y 'puro espanol'. Habran vendedores de piraguas, mani, manzanas, esquimalitos, cola champagne, ecetera y ecetera. Despues de todo recuerden de comprar 'lo que produce el pais'.

Mientras tanto al pueblo se le olvidara — o es lo que quisieran mucha gente en Springfield que los hispanos de la ciudad deberian tener mayor participacion en la politica, decisiones y vida economica de la misma.

Mientras tanto, si hay corrida, recuerde de comprar Listerine, para la garganta... y Ole y Ole.

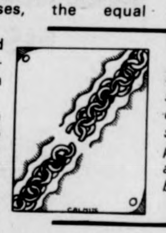
Where are we going

The rhetorical polemics unleashed against each other by the numerous leftist parties in existence today, have had a very adverse effect upon the realization of basic and concrete goals which the entire leftist camp shares. These goals are: the rearrangement of our capitalist society to a socialist society, the elimination of social classes, the equal redistribution of wealth, and the establishment of an educational system which would promote ideologies void of racist and sexist principles. No true leftist can proclaim that the above-mentioned goals are not in the spirit and inherent ideology of the movement. The problems arise as soon as the theoretical interpretation of Marxism is undertaken.



"And if we were all capable of uniting to make our blows more solid and more infallible, so that the effectiveness of every kind of support given to the struggling peoples were increased, how great and how near that future would be."

Che Guevara

Marx and Engels were writing during the latter part of the 19th century and social conditions were very different then, than they are today. Their theories applied very well in their particular society, but I doubt whether we can say that society has remained stable and unchanged since the times of Carl and Friedrich. Since economic conditions have been brought about, such as corporate capitalism, which were not present during the 19th century, it makes sense that the Marxist theory must be somewhat altered and reinterpreted. At the significant risk of being called a "revisionist", this word seems to be in style and it is used considerably often in the vehement and antagonistic rhetoric of most leftist parties, I think that the study of Marxist theory and the preparation for its eventual application must not follow the path of stale dogmatism, but it must be reshaped, when necessary, in order to be able to be applicable to our modern, and very dull, society. Such interpretation has been going on for some time now, and the results are horrifying. The leftist movement has suffered great damages because of the factionalism which exists within its ideological sphere. The Soviet Union views the Peoples Republic of China as revisionist (remember that word?), and ironically, the same label is attached to the former by the latter. The formidable and awesome "monolithic" socialist camp does not exist any more. Every nation has chosen to go its own way, the internationalism expressed and advocated by Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Trotsky, has been ignored — the international movement when the national movements are severely paralyzed by acute factionalitis? Within this nation there is no solid movement and there are no leaders capable enough to realize their predicament and take steps to remedy the situation. It is party against party, leftist against leftist, and to the delight of the capitalist, worker against worker, students against student, and more importantly, student against worker, and worker against student. Our movement has become ineffective and weak, it has lost its appeal because of the lack of an effective and unifying program, the lack of a cohesive drive, and its unwillingness to control, or at least condemn, terrorism. We are becoming stale, unimaginative, and unwilling to unite our forces for the common goals. Petty factionalism has taken its toll; personal politics have predominated, the status of a "leader" has obsessed us all, personal success has become a goal. Where are we going? Are we going anywhere?

Sure thing, Duke!

By E. PATRICK MCQUAID

The Collegian, along with the Globe, the Herald, and other members of the Massachusetts media were invited to a summit conference on education and fiscal autonomy this past Saturday at Bunker Hill Community College in Charlestown. Getting the State Legislature out of the sack on a weekend morning was an accomplishment in itself and indeed, at such an expense, we were in expectation of some serious note-taking.

The conference was, to say the least, quite a letdown. Never in the history of politics have I witnessed such an incessant display of what representative Michael Daly (D-Brighton) referred to as "backslapping". One pat-on-the-back lead to another beginning in the midmorning and wending through the afternoon session, not to exclude the cold Swedish meatball luncheon where I sat across from your friend and mine, Speaker David Bartley of Holyoke.

University of Massachusetts president Robert Wood seemed to be the only speaker who addressed himself to the serious issues at hand (see news story on page one).

Southeastern Massachusetts University president Don Walker stated that we have moved from a time when only a few could afford to attend college, through a time when only a select few were allowed in, and to a point where one can not afford to be without higher education. "I've summed up in one minute what could be found in twelve text books," he concluded.

The president of the Board of Regional Colleges then rose and recited the twelve texts alluded to by Walker.

Dukakis had little to say concerning the demonstration by UMass students last Thursday. At one time he quoted a collegue saying, "I don't know what they're smoking up there now". He went on to explain that this statement was the result of an interview with a student over the budget cuts. The student asked why they don't cut the defense budget, at which time he offered to "lead her by the hand to the Greyhound station and send her to Washington". He attributed this dialogue to the ignorance on the part of the student. A poor excuse when he's defending a cut in the educational budget.

What we must remember today and in the near future is that as the Governor said, "The state of Massachusetts is in deep trouble". We now have a deficit of $450 million and we're going to have to pay it; and soon, because the most alarming fact that Dukakis released at the conference was that in 1976, regardless of the present situation, we will have to face a deficit of over 700 million dollars.

Throughout the conference the dates "1980's — 1980's" was continually voiced. What about now?

E. Patrick McQuaid is the associate-Executive-editor of the Collegian and a guest cartoon character today.

IV. CONFLICTS or MORE THAN TWO EXAMINATIONS IN ONE DAY
Students who have conflicts in their examination schedule (as published herein) or who have more than two examinations scheduled for one calendar day may report to the Schedule Office (168 Whitmore) for resolution of these problems.

THE SCHEDULE OFFICE WILL NOT ASSIST IN RESOLVING PROBLEMS UNLESS THEY ARE REPORTED ON OR BEFORE MAY 10, 1975.

Prison guards responsible for drug, gun traffic , say reform advocates

BOSTON [AP] — Two prison reform advocates charged on Sunday that prison guards are responsible for the major traffic in drugs, weapons and contraband at Walpole State Prison.

Arnold E. Coles, chairman of the National Prisoners Reform Association, Walpole Chapter, and Lynette Bingham of the Families and Friends of Men in Prison demanded an immediate shakedown of correctional officers lockers and facilities at Walpole.

The two made their comments on WEEI Radio's Bay State Forum.

"There have been people's lives that have been taken on several occasions, and there's definitely room to doubt that the men themselves, the inmates, could have done this," Coles said. "There's reason to believe that it could have been done by the administration."

The former Walpole prison inmate added that if weapons are coming into the institution through sources other than guards "what does that say about all this money that's spent in the disguise of security?"

On drug traffic in the institution Ms. Bingham said, "There have been isolated incidents when a visitor may be caught bringing in two or three joints to an inmate or a couple of pills. That's true, that's real.

"But there are 5, 6, 10,000 pills at a time that go into that institution. There are half pounds of marijuana. Now you tell me where a visitor is going to put it and go through that search."

Exxon heads Fortune's 'prestige' list of 500

CHICAGO [UPI] — For the first time in "Fortune 500" history, not General Motors but Exxon Corp. heads Fortune Magazine's prestige list of the nation's top 500 industrial corporations.

The magazine said five of the first seven corporations on the list, to be published Tuesday, are oil companies.

For General Motors to lose the spot it has held since 1935 reflected what the " ift in oil prices has given to the sales, profits and rankings of the oil companies," the magazine said. The Fortune list itself has been published since 1955.

The directory includes 15 newcomers — nearly half of which are related to the energy field, the magazine said.

The magazine said total sales are up "a startling" 25 per cent and account for 66 per cent of total U.S. industrial sales. Total profits of the top 500 now account for 72 per cent — less than last year. The magazine said the decline was partly attributable to automobile company profit setbacks.

Chrysler Corp. had a deficit of $52.09 million, the largest suffered by any of the 21 companies reporting losses. The directory also showed that total employment among the 500 industrials is down 1.8 per cent.

In a related article reviewing the 20 years the "Fortune 500" directory has been published, Fortune said 285 of the "Fortune 500" have been on the list every year.

The top 10 corporations listed by Fortune were Exxon, General Motors, Ford Motor Co., Texaco, Mobil Oil, Standard Oil of California, Gulf Oil, General Electric, International Business Machines and International Telephone and Telegraph.

DiCara excerpts aired tonite

Immediately following tonight's 10 p.m. News, WMUA (UMass radio 91.1 FM) will air excerpts of an informal speech by Boston City Councillor Lawrence DiCara, taped during his visit to the UMass campus last Tuesday night. In his remarks, covering a number of issues, DiCara was especially critical of statewide budget cuts proposed by Governor Michael Dukakis, who is also speaking on the UMass campus tonight.

The program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

During another segment of tonight's program, Mosakowski will talk with organizers of a campus-wide fast being planned to bring attention to conditions of increasing world starvation.

Income tax rebates to hit marketplace

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Income tax rebates, Uncle Sam's antirecession bonus to lure tightfisted consumers into the marketplace once again, will start flowing to the public this week.

The first checks, worth between $100 and $200 to most taxpayers, will be mailed Thursday. In the first week of the operation, the Treasury Department's regional disbursing offices plan to send out 13.7 million of the green government checks worth a combined $1.7 billion.

Spring Blood Drive begins today

The Spring Blood Drive at UMass begins today and will continue until next Thursday.

Blood will be collected from those with appointments from 10 a.m. to 3:45 p.m. today and from 9:30 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. each of the following three days. Walk-in donors will be accepted, but may have to wait a while.

The blood drive is sponsored by the University Women with the assistance of student service groups Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega, and the student ROTC. Area community groups also assisting are the Amherst Senior Citizens, the Amherst Junior Women's Club, and the Hampshire County Red Cross. A donor should allow an hour and a half donation time. He or she should weigh at least 100 pounds and be from 18 to 66 years old. Seventeen-year-olds may donate with parental permission.

Amherst College opens used bookstore

In order to deal with rapidly rising student textbook costs, Amherst College will now have a used bookstore to serve as the marketplace for second-hand books for Amherst courses.

The operation, The Yellow Pages, will be open during the first two weeks of each semester, and will sell books to be used that semester, on consignment.

Students wishing to sell books will bring them to the store, which is located in the basement of James Hall (on the Quad, near the library), at the beginning of each semester. Students will set their own price for books, and if sold, the original owner will receive 85 per cent of the selling price.

If the book is not sold, the owner of the book may reclaim it at the end of the selling period.

The Yellow Pages will be open from 7 pm to 10 pm today through Friday May 9 to accept books to be used during the first semester 1975. Our purpose in doing this is the convenience of students, who presently have 1974 first semester books which they would rather let the bookstore hold over the summer rather than keep them themselves, to be sold in the fall.

We have a tentative list of books to be used by Amherst professors in the fall 1975, and any books we accept now, we will store, at no charge, and put up for sale in September.

Alcoholism internships offered

In the area served by the Alcoholism Detoxification Center of Greater Springfield, there are an estimated 15,000 active alcoholics. In the Springfield area alone, any where from 300 to 750 would fall in the category of the revolving door alcoholic. In 1970 in Springfield, there were 3,000 reported arrests for drunkenness, over 500 alcohol related general hospital admissions not counting admissions due to traffic accidents.

What can you do about it?

The Center for Experiential Education can place you as a full time staff member at the Alcoholism Detoxification Center of Greater Springfield. You can earn a full year of academic credit and a small living allowance.

There are other full time internship positions in Alcoholism Centers in Pittsfield, Worcester, Gardner, and Leominster, Massachusetts.

If interested, come to the Center for Experiential Education located at 315 Arnold House, UMass-Amherst, or call for an appointment at 545-1381 and ask for either Larry Scott or Bruce Shefshick.

Act immediately, internships begin in June 1975!

...Women's Communications

The UMass Women's Communications Network will hold its final meeting of the semester tonight at 5:00 p.m. at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall.

The main purpose of the meeting will be to evaluate progress made in on-campus media this semester, and to plan for next semester.

Any women who have been working in media, or who are interested in learning newspaper or radio skills, are urged to attend. Womanpower is necessary to make sure the Collegian and WMUA have input from one-half of the undergraduates at UMass.

...Valley Women's Union

Beginning in May, the Valley Women's Union, 200 Main St., Northampton, will be holding open meetings for area waitresses who are interested in improving their working conditions.

The meetings, open to all interested waitresses, will be held from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. on the first and third Mondays of every month. The discussion will focus on present working conditions, waitresses' grievances and strategies for improving those conditions. Anyone wishing further information may call Pat at 586-2267 or Priscilla at 533-1865.

...Women's Health Series

The fifth and final session of the Women's Health Series, "Women as Activated Consumers," will be held tomorrow from 12 noon to 1:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The Series has been sponsored by the Division of Health Education of the University Health Services in cooperation with Everywoman's Center.

A panel composed of Jane Zapka, Director of the Division of Health Education, UHS; Ann McCord, counselor at Everywoman's Center and at Family Planning Council of Western Mass.; and Barbara Estabrook, graduate intern in the Division of Health Education, UHS will be concerned with issues such as "How can we obtain the best health care for our needs?" "Where can you find out what you have to know?" "How can we insure the quality of health care?"

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, May 5 — Born today, you are of a moodiness that is extremely sensitive to your surroundings. You need to feel that all is in harmony in nature, in the world of men. For only then can you put forth the kind of effort that issues in your best work; only then can you maintain the kind of optimism necessary to the fulfilling of your potential. You must be careful about taking others into your plans too soon, for you are inclined to speak definitely about ideas only half formulated -- and then have to change your mind abut them when they finally gel.

You have an innate sense of caution which should keep you from making too many serious mistakes. This is especially true where finances enter the picture, for when it comes to money, you are extremely careful, refusing to purchase what you cannot afford, refusing to take chances even when you could afford to do so. Where marriage is concerned, your basic caution should keep you from making permanent any relationship, no matter how enjoyable, based purely on externals.

Somewhat prone to procrastination, it is important that you have a definite schedule of activities which you can follow. Ultimately, you should be able to form the habit of moving from one phase or type of work to another without wasting time in the transitions; when this is the case, you should have little difficulty accomplishing your goals on a daily basis, at least.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

* * *

Tuesday, May 6

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Weigh well the responses of others in a test situation. The real thing may require you to be well aware of what reactions will be -- ahead of time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Though you may be intrigued by the new and different today, you would be wise to cling to the tried and true. Don't trade down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You may find that you have an unusual reaction to a domestic crisis this morning. Don't try to understand motives at this time; concentrate on responses.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You would be wise to take matters up with loved ones before making any irrevocable decisions regarding your present employment -- or lack of same.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The reactions of children to present problems on the home front may give you some definite clues as to what your next move should be.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Face the necessity for making a major decision now! If you put things off much longer, you may miss the best moment for action.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You may tend to become bored early in the day. You can add spice to your day by insisting that others join you in a new endeavor.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Act upon decisions made recently regarding your future. If you fail to do so, the future may fade unnoticed into the past!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Take stock of yourself and the extent of your influence on the employment scene. It may be that you are more effective than you thought.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You can make the latest advances along scientific lines work for you -- even though they may be completely out of your field. Consult experts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you solve at-home difficulties, you will find a new peace of mind that is reflected in increased productivity at work as well.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You should be well adjusted to changes by now. Do everything in your power to keep your sense of well-being developing. Accept advice.

Linksters rip Coast Guard in tune-up for tournament

By RON ARENA

The UMass golf team battled two foes Friday at Hickory Ridge Country Club — Coast Guard Academy and the rainy weather conditions. Neither proved to be much of an obstacle in the path of a Minutemen undefeated season, as the local linksters romped again with a 403 total, easily outdistancing the visitors by 24 strokes.

UMass, emphasizing the unimportance of the match, played only two of its top six players. Joe Artman, Tom Toski, Glen Sullivan, and Howie Terban all had a day's rest, and still the Minutemen shot a respectable total. John Lasek and Rick Olson were the only two regulars who played, and shot impressive rounds of 75 and 77, respectively. Lasek's score earned him low medalist honors for the match.

The contest took place despite the less-than-ideal weather conditions, but the rain proved to be more minor a hazard than expected, at least in the case of UMass. Sophomore Bill Locke, who had the next high Minuteman score with 81, noted that the course was in particularly good condition. "Believe it or not," he claimed, a la Ripley, "sometimes it's easier to play in the rain. The putting becomes easier because the greens hold the ball better." He added, "All you have to do is hit it straight to the pin."

Dave Grochmal, the only senior who played for the winners, carded an 82. Prior to the match, Grochmal had seen little competition, partly due to a wrist injury.

The final UMass score of 88 was shot by both Jim Moriarty and transfer student Tim Diskin. Diskin suffered through a bad front nine, but retaliated with a good finish.

Coach Gaudette accomplished two aims in the contest. First, his team won, and second, he succeeded in giving action to nonregulars. The coach stressed the latter as the more important in this particular contest. If he viewed the win as more serious, Gaudette obviously would have gone with his regulard, since Coast Guard entered the match with a 10-3 record. Instead, he played his subs, risking the chance of an undefeated season. He commented on this, saying, "I really didn't care too much about an undefeated season. If we lost, we lost, and if anything, it would have taken the pressure off us of being undefeated.

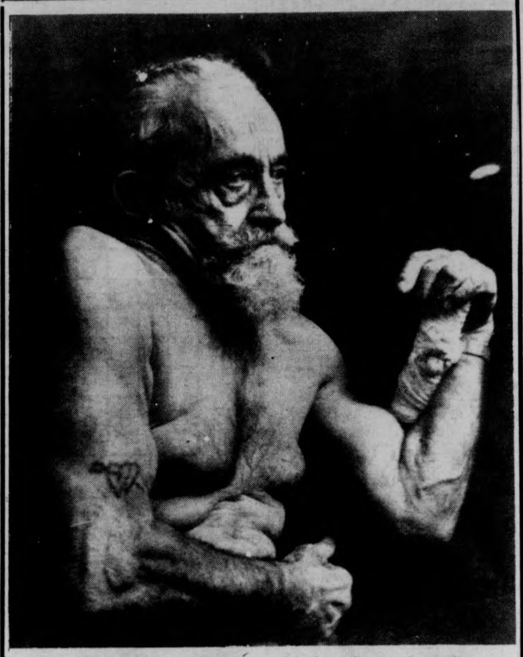
"Besides, I'm looking more towards the Salem State Tournament, and then the Nationals."

The ten-team Salem State tourney, stocked with some of the better talented teams in the area, will take place today. Aside from the Minutemen, the three toughest entries should be Harvard, Bryant, and Central Connecticut. The remainder of the field will be: Boston College, Salem State, Stonehill, Southeastern Mass, Merrimack, and New Haven.

The Crimson may be the toughest foe for UMass. They captured the Ivy League Championship by 14 strokes, and were also victorious in the Greater Boston Championship by an overwhelming margin of 42 strokes in the 36-hole match.

In the GBC, Harvard captured the first three individual slots, led by Alexander Vik. Vik shot a blistering 69-73-142 to easily take low medalist in the competition.

Bryant College met with UMass in last fall's Toski Invitational Tournament, and managed to gain a tie with the Minutemen.



Joe Greenstein, 93 years old, bends an iron bar to show he still has what it takes after he was inducted into the World Body Building Guild "Hall of Fame." Greenstein is regarded by many of his peers as the "greatest strong man of all time."

Batmen split with RI; face Fairfield today

Still the big righthander seemed to have enough to get by. The Rams managed only one run through the first five innings, that coming in the third on a walk and a triple tonight by Campbell.

The Minutemen gave Allegrezza some runs to work with in the third when, with one out, Paul Abramowicz and Seed singled, and third baseman Jerry Mondalto went with an outside pitch and one-handed it out to right center for a triple. He subsequently scored the third run of the inning when Allegrezza reached on an error.

The fourth UMass run came in the fifth when Steve Wright walked and raced around to score on Seed's double to right, although he would have been out by twenty feet had the catcher not dropped the ball.

Allegrezza tired in the sixth, giving up a leadoff single, a walk, and two more base hits. He got out of the jam however, when URI screwed up a double steal attempt.

McManus came in to start the seventh, and faced just nine batters in his three inning stint. He helped himself out in the eighth when, with one man on, he snared a line drive smashed back at him and doubled the runner off first. It was McManus' second straight excellent relief performance.

Frehsman Peter Rankowitz will start one game today, and a few pitchers who have been doing well for the JV's will take care of the other, since Jerry Erb is out with a sore shoulder.

Netmen end season

By PETER NALAK

The UMass netmen finished their 1975 season Saturday competing at the New England tennis championships in Middlebury, Vermont.

"We went farther this year than in the last couple of years," Coach Kosakowski said.

Kosakowski also said that he was pleased his team had the chance to compete against some of the top players in New England.

The touranment was organized into three flights for singles and doubles.

First and second singles players from each school played in the "A" bracket while third and fourth singles went into the B grouping, fifth and sixth players into the C section.

First, second and third doubles were divided into A, B and C brackets as well.

The rain on Friday plus the large number of competitors, forced several different tennis scoring systems to be used. Ten and twelve game "pro sets" were played in the beginning rounds to save time.

Captain Chris Post and Barnaby Kalan played singles in the A bracket for UMass.

Post won his first round match 12-7 but then ran up against the bracket's sixth seed, the number one player from Tufts. He lost 1-6, 1-6 yet his match was close, lasting over two hours with most games going to deuce.

Barnaby Kalan received the third round of the A bracket with a 12-6 victory against a Colby player and a 10-3 win versus Hartford College. There he met the number one player from M.I.T., the bracket's seventh seed, and was defeated 4-6, 3-6.

Billy Karol breezed through opponents from Middlebury, 12-9 and UConn, 6-3, 6-1 on his way to the third round of the B bracket singles. Karol then met up with the group's second seed from Dartmouth and was downed 0-6, 1-6.

Netman Març Ouellet had the pleasure of playing the B group's top seed, John Ingard of Harvard, in the first round. Ingard, last year's New England A collegiate champion was too tough for Ouellet, winning 12-3.

Art Cloutier and Dave Abramoff, playing C singles for UMass, lost two first round squeakers.

Cloutier was surprised 10-12 by a University of Rhode Island player while Abramoff lost by the same score against Trinity.

The doubles competition gave UMass a chance to watch some top players in action — on the other side of the net.

The netmen faced Ivy League doubles teams in all three brackets.

First doubles, Karol and Kalan, advanced to the second round with a 10-7 victory versus Central Connecticut. Playing the number one doubles team from Brown University, Karol and Kalan then lost a respectable 4-6, 5-7 second round match.

Post and Ouellet met the B group's number one seed, also from Brown, and lost 1-6, 3-6 in the first round.

Close to 30 public and private college teams competed in the tournament, including the Ivy League tennis powers who were leading the field when UMass returned home Saturday.

Barnabe Kalan, here concentrating on his service, fared well in the New Englands, which were dominated by the crimson of Harvard.

Jocks need beer

Athletes should drink more beer, especially after strenuous games like basketball, football, and marathons. That's the advice of Dr. Hans-Dieter Bastian, a well-known urologist in Bonn, Germany.

At a recent symposium of German scientists, Dr. Bastian explained: "Beer is high in carbohydrates and vitamin B. The sugar deficiency which occurs after strenuous athletics is compensated for by the malt contained in the beer."

Softballers fall to Keene, 4-3

By LAURIE WHITING

The UMass women's softball team dropped another heartbreaker to Keene State, Saturday, 4-3.

Although the team had difficulties in several players being banned from the squad, Coach Jackie Elliot now has what she calls "a group of hard workers that are psyched to play." "We haven't been a winning squad, though," Elliot continues, "and that's hard."

The game Saturday brought the team record to a disappointing 1-6. The loss was foreshadowed in an early 3rd inning rally by Keene as they doubled, singled and homered for 3 of their 4 runs.

UMass couldn't come up with anything comparable. Frannie Addorisio, the Keene pitcher, was inconsistent, and almost wild to the extent of six walks for UMass.

In spite of the help, UMass had problems scoring. Co-captains Terry Pudlo and Chris Basile spotted "poor baserunning" as a large part of the problem. "The 6th inning was where we could've scored, but we didn't," says Pudlo. "Even with the bases loaded, we got picked off out there."

It wasn't a hitting day for the UMass women, either. All of UMass' runs were scored on errors by Keene's short-stop, a wild pitch, and an overthrow.

UMass pitcher, LuAnn Fletcher pitched well, in the midst of UMass mediocrity, chalking up 5 strikeouts. Centerfielder Lynn Barry was hustling too, as she made a beautiful diving catch in short field. The ump ruled it no good, however, much to the disapproval of the fans.

The next women's softball game is at home, Tuesday, May 6, against Worcester State.

Ruggers drub Amherst

By NEIL KELLY

The UMass rugby club drubbed hometown rival Amherst College, 20-9 in a match played here on Saturday.

The Minutemen got off to a quick 6-0 lead as a result of an excellent run by scrum halfback Larry Tebo. Only seconds after the opening kickoff the Minutemen forwards got control of the ball, got it out to Tebo who then cut inside his man and went 50 yards untouched for the try. Jeff Stefani then added the two point conversion kick and the ruggers were off and running. The Minutemen upped their lead to 10-0 later on in the first half, as Tebo scored his second try of the game and it was at this point in the contest that the ruggers seemed to have total control of the game. Amherst was able to come up with a 3-point penalty kick and the half ended with UMass ahead 10-3.

In the second half, the Minutemen soon made the score 14-3 when outside center Jay Applemen broke through the Amherst backline and in the process of being brought down by the Amherst fullback, got off a beautiful pass to wing Mike McClay who dashed in for the try. The Minutemen scoring was completed on a nice run by wing Kelly Atteridge who then followed up on his own try by kicking the two point conversion. Amherst was able to score late in the second half and add a two point conversion making the final score respectable at 20-9.

The B and C sides also had prosperous afternoons with the B side winning convincingly 23-6 and the C side coming out on top of a much closer battle, 6-0. The B game was all UMass as Amherst constantly found itself stuck deep in its own territory. Once again the Minutemen forwards and backs completely dominated their opponents. Prop, Rick Fiorvanti scored two big tries as the aggressive play of the forwards really paid off in the scoring column. The backs were able to get the ball out to their wings all afternoon and the result was two tries by wing Chris Crown. Inside center, Larry Feldman contributed seven points to the UMass cause by booting two, 2 point conversions and a three point field goal.

For the C team the victory didn't come until with only a couple of minutes to play in a very evenly played game, when first-season wing Dave Church managed to break free and scamper for the only try of the game.

The club will now be preparing itself for the upcoming New England rugby tournament which will be held on Saturday, May 10.

Gorillas romp; Brown next

By SCOTT HAYES

It was a runaway. It's as simple as that. And run was the key word as the UMass midfielders outran their New Hampshire opponents while the entire team utilized an almost faultless passing game for a suprisingly easy 26-12 lacrosse victory, Saturday afternoon behind Boyden.

The game was decided in the first eight minutes of play as UMass bolted to a 5-0 lead. Bill Arnold opened the scoring just 2:15 into the initial quarter when he went around a defender to beat UNH goalie Steve Troiano.

Kevin Patterson picked up a rebound of a shot that Troiano failed to hold just 22 seconds after the first tally for a 2-0 UMass advantage.

Steve Pappas netted his first of three goals with nine minutes remaining in the period. The UMass middle skipped a shot past Troiano just seconds after a UNH penalty was called. Pete Connolly was given an assist on the play.

Pappas scored exactly one minute later when he hampered Troiano behind the net, stole the ball and came around the cage for an empty net goal.

The fifth goal was the result of three good passes, initiated by Patterson. Billy O'Brien took a Patterson flip and promptly hit Spooner with another pass. The high-scoring attackman scored from a tough angle.

With the UMass defense controlling the Wildcat offense and most of the action in front of the UNH cage, John Martin, Mike Lettera, Gene Hardiman and Pappas added first period goals for what proved to be an insurmountable 9-0 lead at the end of fifteen minutes of play.

Coach Dick Garber's Gorillas found themselves two men down early in the second quarter, but some solid defensive play killed the UNH advantage.

Spooner, Garahan and Arnold neeted second period goals before Cy Leech took a Mike Fish pass and beat UMass goalie Bobby Durland. Andy Scheffer, Patterson and Spooner boosted the UMass lead to 15-1 with three more quick goals. Patterson's tally brought the sizable crowd to its feet when the UMass attackman found himself alone against Troiano after three long passes downfield. Patterson, who dwarfed the Wildcat netminder, simply dumped the ball over his opponent's head.

UMass negated another twoman UNH advantage. Scheffer and Spooner scored before Billy O'Brien tallied two goals in 44 seconds. Gary Fincke scored the second UNH goal with an assist from Fish, while Connolly ended the first half scoring, with UMass ahead 20-2.

The UMass offensive display in the first half put the Wildcats hopelessly behind and Garber substituted freely during the last two quarters. UNH outscored the Gorillas 4-3 in the third stanza and 6-3 in the final fifteen minutes.

Spooner paced the UMass barrage with four goals. Pappas collected three while Arnold, Patterson, Lettera, Garahan, Scheffer, O'Brien and Connolly netted two apiece. John Martin, Hardiman, John McCarthy, Paul "Pit" Martin and Chuck Smith chipped in with one goal each.

IN THE CREASE — Many of the fans left at halftime with the game obviously out of reach for the UNH squad, but the weather was perfect for watching lacrosse. Coach Garber described his team's performance in the first half as "the finest exhibition of lacrosse you'll see on the Eastern coast of the United States."

O'Brien tested his leg and according to Garber, he'll just have to wait and see how it feels before Wednesday's 3:00 p.m. away clash with Brown. Penn whipped Brown on Saturday, 21-10.

Staff Photo by John Stewart

Kevin Patterson (33) didn't score on this one but Garber's Gorillas were very successful in scoring attempts as they crushed UNH, 26-12. Frank Garahan (19) and Patterson will be keys to the Gorilla attack when they challenge Brown this Wednesday.

Batsmen split with Rhody

By BOB HIGGINS

The UMass baseball team left its Yankee Conference title hopes up in the air by splitting a doubleheader with the University of Rhode Island Saturday at Lorden Field.

The Minutemen are now 3-3 in the conference (8-14 overall), and will have to sweep a doubleheader from UConn two weeks from now to be in title contention. They will face Fairfield .in a non-conference doubleheader today starting at 1:00 at Lorden Field.

Jeff Reardon and Rich Kelly combined to strike out 18 Rhode Island batters in the first game Saturday, but the one-bad-inning jinx struck the Minutemen again as the Rams won, 6-3. In game two, John McManus pitched three sharp innings of relief of Craig Allegrezza, and the Minutemen salvaged a split, 7-3.

The first game had to be a big disappointment to the UMass squad. Reardon came out throwing extremely well, mixing up a hard rising fastball, a low curve, and a tough slider. The result was twelve strikeouts and a no-hitter through five and two-thirds innings.

Reardon's teammates picked up two runs for him in the fifth, thanks to two URI errors, followed by a double off the bat of first baseman John Seed, by far UMass' most consistent hitter all season.

Reardon seemed to tire some in the sixth, but he didn't deserve the lack of support his teammates gave him. URI's Scott Campbell led off that inning with a double. Reardon than struck out Ed Zabilski before giving up a single to Dave Zyons and a double to Lou Pullano. Then, once again, the UMass fielders lost their poise and threw the game away.

With men on second and third, shortstop Jim Cullen failed to come up with a well-hit grounder to load the bases. Then, three men let a towering pop fly fall among them in short center field. Kevin Reichler then lifted a fly deep to the wall in center. Freshman Al Lopriore did a good job to get to it, caught it, and dropped it. That was it for Reardon,has Kelly came in and gave up a hit and run (charged to Reardon) before retiring the side. But it was 5-2, URI, and it was just about over for the Minutemen.

Rhode Island's final tally came in the seventh on a double by Zabilski and a subsequent single by Ron Ledoux. The Minutemen scored run number three in the ninth when Allegrezza singled, John Healy got a pinch-hit single, and Bob Moore hit a sacrifice fly to score Jerry Erb, who pinch-ran for Allegrezza.

In game two, once again Allegrezza did not look as sharp as he did two weeks ago. "There just isn't as much zip in his pitches," said a concerned coach Dick Bergquist.

Trackers 2nd as UConn dominates

By SCOTT HAYES

First place finishes often tell the story of a track meet and Saturday's Yankee Conference championships in Burlington, Vermont were no exception. Connecticut outscored the UMass trackmen 9-2 in first places and defeated the Minutemen 102-74 to win its third straight YanCon title.

UConn dominated the throwing events and enjoyed supremacy over UMass in the jumps, hurdles and middle-distances. The UMass distance runners managed to outscore the Huskies in their respective events.

Bob and Ken Adamson placed third and fourth respectively, in the long jump as UConn's Herb Davis won the event. Toney Pendleton was fifth in the long jump trials, but pulled a hamstring in the 100-yard dash and was unable to compete in the jumping finals. Davis overtook Bob Adamson on his last jump of the triple jump competition to capture first place. Mike Geraghty placed fourth in the event and Pete Ryan finished sixth.

John Willis and Steve Mason placed two-three in the discus. Willis recorded a 143-7 ½ throw as UConn's Rich White took first with a distance of 159-9 ½".

In the javelin, Todd Holt placed third. Teammates Jim Golonka, a freshman, and Kevin Hall finished fifth and sixth. UConn took one-two in the javelin, offsetting the UMass showing, with Kurt Lorenzen earning individual honors.

Rhode Island's Kerry McKay was a double winner in the 100 and 220-yard dashes, but Tommy Beland wasn't far behind the URI speedster. Beland finished second in the 200 with a 22.1 clocking.

Vermont's Mike Berry upset Bill Gillin in the mile, setting a YanCon record of 4:08.5 in the process. Devin Croft placed fourth, running the four-lap race in 4:11, his personal best.

Steve Crimmin won the second heat of the 440-yard dash and finished second to UConn's Daryl King. King won the event in 49.3 while Crimmin was timed in 49.5.

BC's Jim Taylor won the 880-yard run as Minutemen Jim Hunt and Steve Rich, a freshman, captured third and fourth. Taylor's 1:51.7 was another conference record. Hunt completed the race in 1:54.9 with Rich close behind in 1:55.2.

Curt Stegerwald won his third YanCon individual title in the 440-yard hurdles, setting a conference mark of 53.3. Sophomore Chris Nelson was fourth with teammate John Richards fifth.

John McGrail led four UMass competitors in the first three-mile run in the meet's history, with his standard-setting time of 14:04.7. Teammates Bob Carroll, Gillin and John Scheer placed second, third and fifth, respectively.

According to UMass coach Ken O'Brien, UConn had a good day and gained early momentum, while UMass performed slightly below expectations. Pendleton's injury may have cost the trackmen several points, but the Huskies dominated the meet as every Archie Post track record except the 100-yard dash was re-set. Andy Bessette's hammer throw of 210-1 might have been the top individual performance of the competition.

Rhode Island captured third in the team battle with 39 points, Boston University (30), Vermont (22), Maine (13), and New Hampshire (8) rounded out the team finishers.

Globe wins Pulitzer for desegregation coverage

Compiled from Wires

NEW YORK — The Boston Globe won a Pulitzer Price in journalism yesterday for meritorious public service in its "massive and balanced coverage of Boston's school desegregation crisis."

Others of the 59th annual awards went to a reporting team of the Philadelphia Inquirer for national reporting and a Chicago Tribune team of correspondents for international reporting.

Garry Trudeau won the prize for editorial cartooning for his cartoon strip "Doonesbury," distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Awards were given in .11 journalism categories by the trustees of Columbia University on the recommendation of a Pulitzer Prize advisory board. The Globe won a gold medal and the other winners won $1,000 each.

The Globe's citation noted that the newspaper had been a target of anti-busing demonstrations, paper hijackings, boycotts, bomb threats and actual bullets for its editorial support of school desegregation. In spite of all this, the citation said, the Globe persisted in its massive coverage of every phase of the controversy.

In recommending the Globe for the award, an advisory jury said in its citation: "The Boston Globe...is recommended for massive and balanced coverage of the Boston school desegregation conflict in a bitterly emotional climate.

"The Globe courageously withstood pressures from both pro and anti-busing forces to put the issue into perspective and inform the public impartially."

During the months of turmoil over the busing controversy, the Globe deployed about 60 reporters to cover the story.

The Globe won the service award in 1966 for its reporting which blocked the United States Senate confirmation of Boston Municipal Court Judge Francis X. Morrissey as a federal district judge.

It was the Globe's second Pulitzer gold medal for public service.

Globe Publisher W. Davis Taylor yesterday congratulated the newspaper staff on winning the Pulitzer Prize for coverage of last fall's school desegregation crisis.

"Everyone on the Boston Globe has just won the gold medal for meritorious public service. You all performed professionally, evenly and honorably. It is fine to win prizes, but it is sobering to realize that this honor grew out of such a trying period in our city's history."

Donald L. Barlett and James B. Steele of the Philadelphia Inquirer were honored for disclosing inequities in the federal taxing system in a seven-part series which claimed the poor and middle income taxpayers were more harshly treated than the rich.

The Chicago Tribune's William Mullen and Ovie Carter won Pulitzers for a 5-part series on the African and Indian famines that threatened the lives of 500,000 persons. The team traveled 10,000 miles in the famine areas.

The staff of the Xenia, Ohio, Gazette won the award for general local reporting for covering the tornado that flattened the city and for rallying the community to the job of rebuilding. The 80 employes missed only one day's publication and worked in a plant without a roof, some walls and electricity.

Before a crowd of 3,000

Dukakis restates stand on budget

By CHRISTINE DILLARD
MDC Staff

Governor Michael Dukakis restated his proposals for the UMass budget to a mixed and vocal overflow crowd of UMass students last night.

Facing a crowd of approximately 3,000 in the Student Union Ballroom, Dukakis said it was possible to "trim the fat" 10 per cent without hurting instructional or student affairs. He said this would be possible without "one dime's increase in tuition." His remarks were met with a mixture of boos, cheers and applause.

Dukakis said he favored continuing fiscal autonomy to make the budget cuts without hurting students. He said students should be active in determining where the cuts be made. He added, "You've got to do more than go down to the Commons and sing. You've got to help."

Dukakis said he wanted a student committee to meet with Secretary of Higher Education Paul Parks on a regular basis. He said students must work with the faculty and administration and provide information as to where the budget cuts should be made. He added, "We haven't got time for working against each other."

When asked where he stood on a student union, Dukakis said, "I think you have the right to take collective action."

Another question from the floor asked how those under 40 who will be removed from welfare will be able to survive when there already aren't enough jobs. Dukakis responded that the only options were to cut the elderly, disabled, or children, and that it's best to cut those most able to help themselves. He added, "We're not going to have any jobs at all if we don't get some order in this state."

Dukakis said that even with budget cuts, additional taxes were a possibility. He explained he wanted to avoid this if possible, as Massachusetts already taxes low and middle income people the heaviest. He added that this tax structure could not be changed until 1977 because of the state's constitution. He also said that in a state where one in eight is unemployed, and when those that are employed are having income problems, something has to be done.

The use of bonds to pay the state's bills has never been done in Massachusetts before Dukakis said. The disadvantage of this is that the bonds require the state to pay interest.

Dukakis described what his administration faced "when it arrived in office and began to discover ... with great surprise and astonishment, that the deficit was not 75 to a 100 million, but 300, 350, 400 ... We face a budget deficit of 520 million dollars." He said that the only reason the deficit was trimmed to 450 million was because every agency in the Commonwealth had been asked to make a reduction with the exception of higher education.

The governor also said that the deficit for fiscal year 1975-76 will be $700 million dollars without any possible increases for inflation, welfare, or cost of living raises for state employees.

Dukakis added that how and why we have the deficit is unimportant, but that the budget must be balanced. He said he wasn't trying to affix blame, but to explain that the problem was "very, very serious."

Dukakis said he had a reputation of being a liberal, but that he couldn't stand waste. He explained that we no longer have an economy surplus. Instead, we have an economy of scarcity. He said that when there are limited resources, the state can't continue to spend in the same way. He said "I don't think that makes me, or anybody, else a conservative."

Dukakis said his office has cut back between $500,000 to $600,000 and has not been adversely affected. He cited this as an example of what could be done. He said, "There's 10 per cent fat in the university. You know it's true. Hundreds and hundreds of students and faculty have told me it's true.

"What we need is not just your collective expression of unhappiness, but your intelligence, good will, energy ... I believe it can be done," he said.

When asked how students could be assured that the administration would only make cuts that would not hurt students, Dukakis said "I really think this has got to be a cooperative process."

When the student suggested abolishing fiscal autonomy as a possible control on the university, the governor again said he felt the cuts would be made best if the university retained fiscal autonomy.

The governor entered the Ballroom to face a crowd shouting "No budget cuts." After one and a half hours, he left. As he made his way to the exit, someone yelled, "You work for us, and when you need to work overtime — you work." Some in the audience booed, while some left quietly.

Rezoning proposed at Town Meeting

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

The town planning board presented to last night's Amherst town meeting a zoning proposal which would divide Amherst into several "village clusters" separated by rural open land.

The 14 article proposal which faces another night of discussion by town meeting members before it comes to a final vote, is designed to "preserve existing open areas, avoid urban sprawl, and accomodate growth in Amherst" according to the planning board.

The proposal involves the present town center, surrounded by town residences, several village centers with village residences, and several neighborhood centers and residences. Each classification represents a decrease in the number of stores and the overall population.

Selectman Chairman Nancy Eddy said the proposal would "change what is becoming a suburban slurb into a village pattern. It will encourage people to use public transit or walk instead of jumping into their cars to run down to the town center."

Some town meeting members spoke in opposition to the proposal on the grounds that it would force farmers to sell their land now before they are locked into rezoning which would decrease the profits.

"Farmlands may be rezoned into two-acre lots," said Eddy. "But farmers will not lose equity. They may not realize as high a profit as formerly, but eventually the land will regain its value.

"The logical alternative to this would be to zone the land commercial and let the farmers sell out," said Eddy to groans of displeasure from the packed Junior High Auditorium.

The specific purpose of the by-law is to "accommodate and shape the Town's growth by directing future development into several centers which are well served by community facilities and the Town's water supply, and sewage and transportation systems."

Five-college symposium proposal seeks funding

By NANCY DAWSON
Staff Reporter

A proposal for a Five College Symposium Series on Law, Science, and Ethics, backed by the Five College Student Coordinating Board (FCSCB), will be submitted for funding application today to the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy.

Skip Singer, a UMass senior majoring in a Human Ecology BDIC wrote the proposal.

He has been developing and planning the Symposium Series during this semester with the aid of faculty supervisor George Armelagos, director of the Honors Program at UMass and an Associate Professor of Anthropology.

In a meeting Wednesday night, the FCSCB approved the proposal and voted to lend it verbal support.

The Symposium proposal is based on a larger program idea dealing with Law, Science, and Ethics.

As Singer has defined it, "The purpose of the Five College Program on Law, Science, and Ethics is to develop a fully integrated, multi-disciplinary and inter-institutional course of study with which to explore the ethical, legal, and moral implications and responsibilities of science in today's society."

An abstract of the Symposium proposal states, "Beginning in September 1975 and continuing through the academic year, monthly issue-oriented programs of public interest will be presented at alternate sites on the Five College Campuses, the UMass Medical School and the neighboring communities.

"Issues at the interface of science, technological change, and the humanities will be examined by academics, professional, and community leaders," states the proposal.

Some of the issues suggested include abortion, social aspects of technology, health care delivery, and behavioral control.

Singer said there is "a superlative steering committee of five college faculty" that will help oversee the decision-making process of the implementation of the Symposium Series and the Program.

He said he is hoping to tape the series for radio and cable television so it can become a permanent record available for future use in education.

An experimental symposium organized by Singer and sponsored by the UMass Department of Legal Studies was presented over a period of two days this past January.

Women's Conference workshops: Health, survival, unemployment

By ANN EMERY
Staff Reporter

This is the second part of a five part series reporting the results of the 1975 University Women's Conference, which was held January 21-25 at UMass. Part Two relates the issues and recommendations of three areas of workshops at the Conference: Health, Survival, and Employment.

HEALTH:

Twenty-one per cent of the workshops at the Conference dealt with health issues, attesting to the recognition in the Women's Movement of the critical need for women to take control over their own bodies. Workshops were offered dealing with "V.D., Vaginitis, and DES," "Sexuality and Contraception," "Women as Consumers of Health Care," and many other topics.

468 women attended the 25 workshops centering on health issues, with an above average participation of 19.5 women per workshop. This area drew a proportionately younger population than the Conference average, with 53 per cent in the "under 22 years" age bracket.

The elimination of the profit motive from the health industry is seen as a high social priority in the health area. It is for women, the largest consumers of health care, to demand the basic human right of a health care system responsive to human needs.

SURVIVAL:

There were 21 workshops concerned with issues categorized under "Survival," drawing an average of 17.8 participants per workshop. There was good student participation, showing higher than average attendance by undergraduates and graduates.

The scope of these workshops was very wide. Topics seemed to fall into two categories: economic survival and personal survival.

The economic perspective included a diverse range of workshops, beginning with basic economics and extending to practical issues such as food co-ops, day care, rental housing, and legal concerns.

There was a large turnout for workshops concerned with personal survival. This reflects the serious need and desire by women on campus to take active control over their own lives. And although women need to discover and develop their abilities, and work for their own personal growth, the University does not integrate this kind of personal learning into its curriculum.

There were many recommendations from women in these workshops. A major concern was child care facilities.

Other concerns raised were: on-campus housing for single mothers, a place for women to meet socially on-campus, courses to teach life planning, life preparation, and survival skills, and women lawyers on-campus.

EMPLOYMENT:

A 50 per cent return of rosters showed about 100 women attended the 7 employment workshops. The workshops dealt mainly with non-traditional careers, career counseling and development, resume writing skills, and the Equal Employment Act as it applies on-campus. Next to political action and communication organization related issues, employment-related concerns were listed as a top priority within the University. These concerns break down into two areas: career development for students, and employment issues on-campus.

Employment may be underestimated as a crucial issue by younger undergraduates, as well as by the University. These workshops attracted mainly older undergraduates and community people. The mandate is clear for career-related education, career development and information, and counseling at all levels.

Concerning employment issues right on-campus, many women faculty, staff, students, and women's groups here are continually aware of the subtle, and the not so subtle, discrimination in University hiring, firing, salary levels, allocations, and promotions. One reflection of this is the seeming reluctance of the University to promote women from classified to professional staff. Another is the widely acknowledged discriminatory classifications of male and female staff. Some current attempts to unionize clerical workers reflect that awareness.

Now, in the light of fiscal crunching, the University is being tested: Where does it stand, and where will it fall back? The key issue was well stated by one woman who said she was afraid that the crunch would eliminate women's jobs first. The recommendation to the University is implicit in her statement.

Copies of the report can be obtained at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall.

UMass commencement slated for May 31

By BRUCE FREDERICK
Staff Reporter

The 1975 UMass Commencement will be held Saturday, May 31, 10 a.m. at Alumni Stadium, according to Arthur J. Lahait of the Public Affairs Office in Whitmore.

The Stockbridge graduation exercises will occur Friday May 30 at 1:30 p.m.

Participants are encouraged to report to the south end of the stadium at least a half hour before the ceremonies are to begin.

Unlike previous years, there is no alternate location in case of inclement weather. This change in procedure is due to the graduation fiasco last year when locations were changed several times in the course of a few hours. Graduates are advised to listen to radio announcements for possible postponements of the ceremony.

There is no limit on the number of guests a student may invite. People will be admitted on a first come-first serve basis. Parking will be allowed on grassy areas surrounding the stadium as well as in parking lots.

Caps and gowns are being distributed at the University Store as of yesterday and continuing to May 30. Gowns may also be picked up at Alumni Stadium on the day of graduation. There is no fee for the gowns as they have already been paid for in the semester bill.

There will be no rehearsal, and the exercises should last approximately two hours. The final list of speakers will not be released until May 15. The ceremony on May 31 will include those people graduating with Masters and Doctorates as well as those receiving Bachelor's Degrees. Approximately 5,000 people are eligible to take part in the occasion.

After commencement, light lunches will be available for a nominal fee at Hampshire Dining Commons in Southwest.

Senior Day will be held on Friday, May 30, at the Quad in Northeast. It will start at noon, and run until about 6 p.m. Live entertainment is planned.

Information about graduation will be distributed by fliers and Collegian ads. No individual mailings will be sent out because of the prohibitive cost.

For additional information, contact the Public Affairs Office in 231 Whitmore. Their telephone number is 545-2560.

Collegian press conference

Dukakis says budget cuts won't hurt students

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

Speaking at a press conference last night in the Collegian office, Governor Michael S. Dukakis said the proposed budget cuts would not affect "the quality of higher education and the instruction of young people" at UMass.

Dukakis was invited to an exclusive press conference by the Collegian Board of Editors.

Dukakis said it is possible to make the cuts without affecting student services.

The University has "a role to play in working with us in the government on the state level to achieve creative solutions to the economic and social problems we face. I think that until recently the University had not really fulfilled that role," Dukakis said.

Both students and faculty, he added, should be involved in finding and creating solutions to the problems in the state government.

Dukakis said, "We are inheriting a $520 million budget deficit. No other state in the country can make that statement."

Every other state agency has had to make cuts which have resulted in a saving of $75 million, he added. Education cuts have been held back until the end.

Dukakis said, "Public institutions have a special obligation to young people who otherwise couldn't get an education, and that includes not only young people of limited means and families of limited means, but minorities and other segments of our society that have been traditionally disadvantaged."

UMass has a "very unique" relationship with public education in the Commonwealth, he added, but has to be looked at as part of a "totality."

In clarifying the special role of UMass in public education, Dukakis said, "UMass is clearly the place where we can expect to achieve a high degree of specialization on a graduate level.

"Because of that role," he continued, "it also provides, on an undergraduate level, a quality of education which should be as rich as any in the state because of the faculty and resources available."

Dukakis said he is trying to get UMass to focus in on the budget process so they can provide the government with "an independent, and perhaps different, view" of where the cuts ought to be made.

"We're terribly concerned," he added, "that in setting these targets, cuts will be made in areas where we don't think they ought to be made and you don't think they ought to be made."

Dukakis supported last Wednesday's demonstration at the State House, but said more than a demonstration is needed.

"I'm all for people expressing themselves," Dukakis said, "but it isn't really going to help the process very much if all the people do is demonstrate.

"You can't look at a state's budget in those terms," he added. "We rank in the top three or four in the total per capita burden of state and local taxation in the country. We are running an unemployment rate of about 12 per cent."

Massachusetts offers many services which other states do not offer, including possibly the most comprehensive public medical system in the country, Dukakis said.

GSS unanimously elects Stack to presidency

By AL COLARUSSO
Staff Reporter

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) voted former Vice-President Barbara Stack to the office of president in an unopposed election last night.

Also elected was Michael Federow as vice-president, Dorothy Bellows as treasurer and John Clauson as secretary.

Stack said, "I realize the political scene is changing drastically at this university and there is a dissatisfaction with traditional channels."

Stack says she plans to focus her attention on the solution to this problem.

President Stack expressed concern over the lack of communication on campus and said the production of better verbal contact within the graduate community will also be a primary goal.

Federow, who was unopposed, says the GSS is having problems reaching out to students and plans "to seek input from graduate students across the campus to see what they want."

Bellows won her election by a one vote margin. A graduate student in accounting, Bellows has been in contact with the Amherst community for the past seven years and says she has a good sense of what the students want.

The runner-up for treasurer, Clauson, was unanimously elected, filling the final GSS position. Clauson says he hopes to work with President Stack on the communication problem on campus.

In other business, the GSS voted to fund $2850 to the Teachers Aid (TA) Organizing Committee. The TA Committee hopes to "unionize through collective-bargaining," according to a TA Organizing Committee spokesperson.

The GSS funding will go toward the salary for a full-time union organizer who will conduct a feasibility study and gather information.

The TA Organizing Committee spokesperson "guarantees a union election by the Fall of 1975."

The Graduate Senate also allocated $190 to support the University Women's Caucus. According to the proposal to the GSS, the Women's Caucus was formed "to protect the growth of programs and services for women and minorities on campus."

The $190 will go toward printing and mailing costs.

Vandals strike SBA

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Three separate cases of larceny and malicious destruction to state property occurred at the School of Business Administration (SBA) during the weekend, according to UMass Police reports.

Damages included the destruction of two glass doors on the East stairwell, and one glass door on the ground floor of SBA. The cost of the damages is not yet estimated, said Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass Police.

A wall clock valued at $40, and some keys were also stolen from the building.

"I'm not saying that these incidents were related to the Schiltzarama, but there is a possible connection," Joyce added.

Another case of larceny, and breaking and entering occurred at the Graduate Research Center, yesterday morning, according to reports.

Entrance was gained to rooms A-2 and A-4 where a cabinet was pried open and ten sets of keys to various areas of the campus were stolen.

Joyce said the case is currently under investigation by the UMass Police.

Staff party!

The annual Collegian end-of-semester party for all staff and friends will be held next Saturday at a private home in Hadley.

Reporters, photographers, editors, ad reps, ad and news layout staff, editorial personnel and circulation staff are encouraged to attend, according to coordinator Bill Densmore.

The party will begin about 8 p.m. Some refreshments will be provided but not enough to cover the expected attendance, Densmore said.

Staffers who need directions and other information should read yellow fact sheets posted in the Collegian offices, or contact Densmore at the Collegian office.

Additional copies of the directions are available on the bulletin board in the news room.

Students plan for Dukakis speech, 350 rally on student union steps

By BRIAN COYNE
Staff Reporter

Approximately 350 students rallied on the steps of the Student Union last night in preparation for Governor Michael Dukakis' speech.

Ellen Carracciolo, Student Action Committee (SAC) organizer of the rally said, "What we're here for is to prepare for the Governor's speech and think about what kinds of questions we want to ask him."

Carracciolo asked that people attending the speech be orderly enough to enable the governor to speak. "He should be heard and we should be heard," she said.

Jim Leas, member of the Coalition for the People's Budget (CPB), said, "Dukakis' presence proves our moratorium, demonstrations and rallies have had an effect." Leas added the governor might try to pit the students against those in need of social services by forcing a choice between cut in higher education and welfare programs.

"He fears our demonstrations and wants to see your unity broken," Leas said.

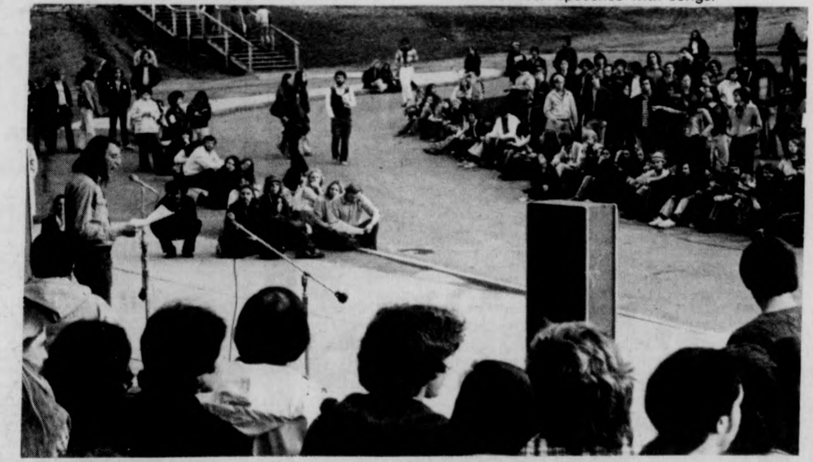
Leas offered two "positive alternatives" to the proposed budget cuts. He said the governor should tax the wealthy and the state's corporations more extensively, through progressive income taxes and increased inheritance taxes. The governor should also petition the federal government for "funds being wasted on defense," he said.

"It is essential that Dukakis campaign to get that defense money just as hard as he has campaigned to force the cutbacks down our throats," said Leas.

Lucia Bruno spoke against the proposed welfare budget cuts, saying that welfare mothers would not be able to adequately care for their children under the proposed allocations for next year. "Asking welfare mothers to absorb 50 per cent of medical costs is outrageous," she said.

Suggested questions to be addressed to the governor were distributed to the crowd.

Ann Ferguson and Samuel Bowles, of the UMass Economics Department faculty, entertained the crowd between speeches with songs.



Students listen attentively to speakers outside the Student Union before Dukakis' speech. The resonance of 'no budget cuts' heard again and again...

Communists free 'tiger cage' inmates

By United Press International

Communist news agencies reported yesterday South Vietnam's new Communist rulers have freed political prisoners from "tiger cages" on Con Son island, welcomed two Soviet ships to Da Nang and allowed foreigners to move freely on the streets of Saigon.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug, in a dispatch from Hanoi, said the new government released all political prisoners of the old regime held without trial on Con Son island off the Mekong River delta and was organizing a ceremonial welcome for them in Saigon.

The Soviet news agency Tass, meanwhile, reported that two Russian ships have carried food and fuel to the South Vietnamese city of Da Nang, becoming the first ships to enter the port since it fell to the Communists. Da Nang was headquarters for the Marines during the U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

Western diplomats in Moscow said they expected the Soviet government to move quickly to supply the South Vietnamese Communists in a move to blunt Chinese influence in the area.

Tass also reported that the new government's newspaper, Saigon Liberation, said North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces killed or wounded more than 400,000 troops of the Saigon government in the final days of the war.

"The communique says the puppet army's casualties in the battle for the liberation of the Saigon-Giadinh area amounted to over 400,000 officers and men and that a large quantity of arms, ammunition and equipment have been seized," Tass said.

The Saigon army at the end of the war was believed to consist of about one million soldiers and officers. The report suggested that more than 40 per cent of the country's troops had been put out of action.

Hanoi radio reported that all foreigners in Saigon are well treated and can move freely in the South Vietnamese capital.

The radio broadcast, monitored in Singapore, based its report on information sent from the French Embassy it Saigon to Paris, but it was believed to be North Vietnam's first mention of foreigners who stayed in the capital after it was surrendered to the Communists last Wednesday.

"All foreigners are being well treated and there had been no incident as far as we know. The situation is very calm," the radio quoted the embassy as reporting.

"The French Embassy has reported that foreign journalists including five UPI newsmen were free to operate throughout the city," the broadcast said.

Although it did not identify the newsmen, the five who stayed on were Asia division news editor Leon Daniel, Saigon bureau manager Alan Dawson, reporters Paul Vogle and Chad Huntley, and photographer Hugh Van Es.

Tanjung quoted two Communist news agencies in South Vietnam as reporting the release of the prisoners from Con Son. It said prisoners freed from the island previously were often unable to walk erect, their muscles crippled from lack of use.

The agency said a television station in the old imperial capital of Hue began broadcasting yesterday and showed film of May Day celebrations and of "students greeting liberators" of the Viet Cong army.

In Paris, French government officials said the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government is clearly preparing for a prolonged period during which it will operate independently from North Vietnam.

They said the new Communist government has applied for admission to the United Nations World Health and International Meteorological Organizations, actions it would take only if it did not expect prompt reunification with North Vietnam.

Ford requests aid for refugees; official downplays burden on US

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford asked Congress yesterday to approve a new $507 million program of aid for resettling South Vietnamese and Cambodian refugees. He warned the government otherwise will run out of money for them in another week.

Ford said the money would be spent on refugees who have already left Indochina and none of it would go to those who were left behind. He estimated 150,000 refugees will be coming into the United States and he pledged to try to resettle them so as not to further aggravate the nation's high unemployment rate.

Meanwhile, the administration gave assurances yesterday that South Vietnamese and Cambodian evacuees will be distributed evenly around the country to ensure that no area suffers economic hardship.

L. Dean Brown, coordinator of the refugee program, outlined relocation plans before a House subcommittee as President Ford asked Congress to authorize up to $507 million for this purpose through the middle of next year.

"Every effort will be made to ensure that resettlement to the extent possible will not be concentrated in a few enclaves in the country and will not result in economic or social service hardship," Ford said in a report accompanying his latest refugee aid bill.

The House last week killed a Senate-passed compromise measure that authorized $327 million humanitarian aid. The main objection to that measure was that it included authority to use U.S. troops to get the refugees out of Saigon — a provision that was no longer needed after the evacuation ended last Tuesday.

Ford's program calls for processing of the refugees over 90 days — 30 days on Guam and Wake islands and 60 days at three military bases in the United States. Then they would be turned over to nine private welfare agencies or private, sponsors to find them jobs, schools and housing.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said 20,000 of the refugees will be resettled in countries other than the United States. Canada, for example, may take 3,000 refugees, he said. Diplomatic sources in Brussels said Secretary of State Henry Kissinger sent a note to the Common Market last week asking help in resettling refugees.

Brown — both in his testimony and in a telegram to the governors of all 50 states — said resettlement of the refugees will be handled so that they will not become a financial burden on any community.

He said the United States will have to absorb or divert to other countries about 125,000 South Vietnamese, about 69,000 of whom have been picked up at seas or are still aboard small boats.

Indochina developments

US to withdraw

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The United States said yesterday it was withdrawing more than 25 per cent of its troops in Thailand and taking back about 130 U.S. aircraft flown into that country by fleeing South Vietnamese airmen.

The Thai government, with an eye to future relations with the communist government in Saigon, had said last week that it would turn the planes over to the new South Vietnamese regime. But Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger insisted the United States holds title to the aircraft.

The troop reduction was described in a Thai ministry statement as the first step in an effort to phase out the American military presence in Thailand by March, 1976.

Ky criticizes Thieu

AGANA, Guam [UPI] — Former South Vietnamese Premier Nguyen Cao Ky yesterday called ex-President Nguyen Van Thieu a rich man who "does not have to care" about the fate of the Vietnamese people. Ky said he would "take physical action" if he ever met Thieu on the street.

The flamboyant Ky, former air force commander, told a hastily called news conference at this refugee camp on Guam that Thieu's military and political ineptness was to blame for the fall of his country, not the American people who "have done a lot for us."

His remarks contrasted with statements by Thieu who accused the United States of reneging on its promises to South Vietnam.

Viet embassy closes

TAIPEI [UPI] — The South Vietnamese Embassy in Taipei closed down yesterday, eliminating the possibility that former President Nguyen Van Thieu might set up a government-in-exile on Taiwan.

The embassy, which until last Saturday had been operating as usual, failed to raise the South Vietnamese flag yesterday morning and its front gate remained closed.

An embassy official told UPI that effective yesterday the embassy ceased to operate as a diplomatic mission. Its ambassador, Nguyen Van Kieu, Thieu's brother, and other officials arrived at their offices Monday to "wind up a few necessary things," he said.

New England highway study urged

Environmental Report sought for Route 7

WASHINGTON [AP] — Conservation groups fighting construction of a new U.S. highway in New England urged Congress yesterday to require the federal government to prepare its own environmental impact statements for such projects.

The groups told a Senate subcommittee that two House-passed bills would give the bulk of the job to the states, which they said generally are prejudiced in favor of road building projects.

The National Resources Defense Council of New York and nine other conservation groups said the bills were an obvious attempt to circumvent a ruling by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals requiring an active federal role in preparation of impact statements.

They said the original mandate of Congress was for federal agencies, including the Federal Highway Administration, to conduct their own environmental impact studies and not rely upon the judgment of interested parties.

The federal appeals court ruling came in a suit filed against the project by the Conservation Society of Southern Vermont, which said improvement of the road would profoundly affect the environment of the state.

The court held that the Federal Highway Administration had failed to carry out its responsibility to participate in the preparation of the impact statement.

After the December ruling, the administration halted the processing of a number of major highway projects in New York, Connecticut and Vermont, including U.S. 7. The states complained that the action idled thousands of workers and ultimately would raise the cost of the projects.

The House then passed two bills, one that would apply to all the states and the other that would apply only to Vermont, Connecticut and New York. The legislation generally would redefine the federal responsibility for impact statements and allow use of some environmental impact information provided by the states.

Russell W. Peterson, chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, said he supported the bill that would apply to all the states. But, he said, "neither bill would lessen the role of the federal government to assure the adequacy or accuracy of the impact statement in terms of scope, objectivity and content."

Harvey D. Carter Jr., one of the conservation group's lawyers in the case, disputed Peterson's testimony. He said enactment of the legislation would almost insure a biased impact statement for the Vermont portion of the road.

He said that under the legislation, the responsibility for a large part of the statement would fall to John Gray, Vermont's highway commissioner. He said Gray already has been quoted in newspaper accounts as saying "passage of these bills quite clearly indicates that Congress favors progress on construction" of the road.

"Can any member of the public reasonably expect that the Vermont Highway Department will not objectively and faithfully carry out the congressional mandate, set out originally, said Carter.

He asked whether Congress is willing to "cede to inherently biased state agencies ... the power to commit millions in federal monies to projects which may not serve environmental and social goals?"

Brandeis president says no demands met

WALTHAM [AP] — The president of Brandeis University said yesterday the school met none of the demands and granted no academic amnesty to a group of students that occupied a classroom and an office for nearly a week.

Speaking at a news conference on campus, President Marver Berstein also said, however, the university would drop all court actions against the 35 members of the Student Action Group which began the occupation of Pearlman Hall last Tuesday as a protest against planned budget cuts. The sit-in ended Sunday night following weekend negotiations between administration and student representatives.

A spokesman for the students said that during the talks, administration officials agreed to give detailed consideration to certain demands, including major increases for scholarships, faculty and administrative staffing for the next academic year.

The students have asked for an increase in the budget for the transitional year program for ill-prepared students. However, Bernstein said, an increase from $40,000 to $60,000 a year had already been suggested by a faculty group and agreed to by the administration.

"The university cannot commit resources that it does not have," Bernstein had said Friday. "And the university community cannot condone the deprivation of academic freedom implicit in the student action group's illegal seizure and occupation of Pearlman Hall."

An estimated group of about 200 students outside the occupied building cheered as the demonstrators left the hall at 11:52 Sunday night.

Moe Howard dies at 78

HOLLYWOOD [UPI — For more than half a century, Moe Howard with his soup-bowl haircut and eye-gouging, face-slapping antics entertained three generations of Americans as the pioneer and leading member of one of the world's best-loved comedy acts.

The last of The Three Stooges, Howard died of lung cancer Sunday night at Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital where he had been admitted only 24 hours earlier. He was 78.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p.m. Tuesday at Hillside Memorial Park in Culver city.

Howard attributed the success of The Three Stooges to their universal appeal to all audiences.

"The working class people like to think of us as being a real part of them," he said. "The middle class enjoys our work because they don't dig opera and art and they think they're better than we are. The few upper class people who watch us like to see what happens on the other side of the tracks. That's why we're so popular.

"We specialize in upsetting dignity. We only throw pies at guys wearing top hats — obviously high class people. We never throw pies at old ladies."

McGovern in Cuba

HOMESTEAD AFB, Fla. [UPI] — Sen. George S. McGovern flew to Cuba yesterday at the invitation of Premier Fidel Castro for a four-day visit seen by some as part of a thaw in U.S. relations with the island's Communist government.

The trip by McGovern's party of 30, including about two dozen journalists, was marked by security measures evidently stemming from fears of violence by anti-Castro activists among the more than 350,000 Cuban exiles in southern Florida.

Phone study sought

BOSTON [AP] — The state Public Utilities Commission may ask New England Telephone Co. to develop a cost-of-service study before making a decision on the company's $210 million rate increase request.

The commission has postponed a decision on a motion to dismiss the case entirely.

The motion was filed by Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti on grounds that a cost-of-service study has not been submitted.

Kissinger denies role

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said yesterday that during his tenure in Washington the National Security Council has never directed or approved domestic spying operations by the CIA.

Kissinger heads the NSC, which has general responsibility for the Central Intelligence Agency. He and Defense Secretary James Schlesinger, a former CIA director, were the main witnesses at a closed meeting of the Rockefeller commission.

Public power defeated

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts House yesterday voted down a bill to establish a state authority to build and operate all new power plants in the state.

The vote against the proposal, filed in initiative petition form by Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., was 179-46. The vote came after an hour of debate.

The petition was signed by more than 90,000 voters last fall. Harrington has said he will gather another 9,800 signatures in order to place the proposal on the 1976 ballot for a binding public vote.

The Harrington bill received an adverse report from the Joint Government Regulations Committee last week

Globe mistakes UMass folksinger for Arlo Guthrie at rally in Boston

By SAMUEL HASSAN
Staff Reporter

In a Boston Globe column Saturday, David B. Wilson said Arlo Guthrie sang at the Boston Common rally last Wednesday, when in fact Guthrie's manager Harold Leavanthol said the singer was in Florida that day.

The Collegian has telegrammed Guthrie at his home in Beckett, Mass., and is awaiting his reply.

Wilson's column entitled "Student Trap" quotes a song written by Richie Aaron called, "Listen To Us Mr. Legislature Man." According to Wilson, Guthrie wrote the song and sang it in Boston Wednesday when actually Aaron did.

Aaron was heard singing his song in the background of television news reports from the Common and was apparently mistaken to be Guthrie.

Aaron teaches a guitar colloquium in Sylvan and said, "I just taught my last class, and everyone's really proud to have been taught by Arlo Guthrie."

Wilson has been notified by the Collegian and is expected to make a reply today.

In Saturday's column Wilson said, "the youngest established, permanent, floating leisure class on earth sent a few representatives to Boston Common the other day to romp among the daffodils and demand more money from the government."

He also characterized Guthrie as, "Arlo, son of Woody, dissatisfied customer of Alice's Restaurant, muse of the synthetic folkschlock of the 60's, indispensable bard of paranoid protest ..."

Wilson made other erroneous statements in his column saying of the demonstrators, "Most of them, one reflects, had not yet entered kindergarten on the day John Kennedy was shot."

Most of next year's incoming freshmen were first graders in November 1963.

Concluding, the Globe columnist said that students, "have been conditioned to feel oppressed. They are programmed for dependency. It is a trap. It is sad."

Student health insurance plan may suffer

The financial pinch is hitting still another program of services to students, the supplementary health insurance plan, which provides its 12,000 plan members with hospitalization, surgical, emergency and other care not available at the University Health Services.

A high utilization of the policy and rising costs may cause revision of the plan for the coming year. The Finance Committee of the Student Health Advisory Committee is considering a number of possible changes, such as the establishment of a deductible amount for out-of-area claims, and modifications in oral surgery coverage. A 10 per cent increase in the premium, bringing the annual charge to $55, it also being considered.

The Finance Committee will hold an open meeting about the insurance policy on Wednesday, at 3:30 p.m. in the 2nd floor conference room of the Health Center. Interested students are invited to attend and to participate in this meeting.

Spring Concert!

Next Sunday the Program Council Music Committee will be presenting a free spring concert in the stadium from 1:00 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.

A special bus service will be provided on May 11 to the stadium as there will be severely limited parking near the stadium.

The peripheral ("P") lot on the north end of the stadium adjacent to the press gate will be inaccessible on May 11. Students who park in this lot should park in some other lot before that day so that equipment trucks can get in early Sunday.

Glass containers and flip-top cans MUST be kept OUT, of the stadium as these items pose a great danger to all present at the concert as well as those involved in athletic activities. The stadium must be treated with respect or else we will jeopardize any future musical events there.

Amherst music group to honor John Duke

The year-end meeting of the Amherst Music Group will take place tonight at 8 p.m. in the Amherst College Almuni House (Spring and Churchill Streets). The concert will honor John Duke, a well-known local composer.

Tonight's program will present three of Duke's compositions. First will be "Six Song-settings of Emily Bronte's Poems" (Worlds of Light, Love and Friendship, Remembrance, On the Moors, The Old Stoic, The Messenger) for mezzo-soprano (Phyllis Paige) and piano (John Duke). This song cycle was composed in 1970 and was first performed last November.

Preceding each song, Dorothy Duke will give a brief commentary and will recite the text of each poem. Next will be the first public performance of "String Quartet No. 2" in four movements (composed in 1969) performed by William MacKnight and Patricia Itzkoff, violins, Elsa Brown, viola and Seymour Itzkoff, cello.

"Three Songs in Praise of Death" for voice and string quartet (with voice considered a fifth instrument) will conclude the program. The text of this 1935 composition is an excerpt from Walt Whitman's "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloomed," an elegy to Abraham Lincoln, and despite its gloomy title it ends on a lively note.

Duke joined the music faculty at Smith College in 1923 as assistant professor of music and teacher of piano; he retired as professor emeritus in 1967. He has appeared as a solo pianist with several orchestras, and since 1935 has devoted more and more time to composition, mostly songs and chamber music. He has won annual ASCAP awards for the past fifteen consecutive years. A graduate of the Peabody Conservatory, in 1969 he was the winner of the Peabody Alumni Association Award for distinguished service in the field of music.

The Amherst Music Group meets once a month, usually in different members' homes, and is open to all interested musicians and listeners. The aim of the group is to bring together local performers and an appreciative audience in informal, intimate settings and to encourage formation of new ensembles. Group members get to meet a diverse group of people with similar or complementary musical interests.

Because of Duke's popularity, this meeting is being held at the Alumni House and will be open to the public (admission is free).

OPINION

Duke-ing the issues

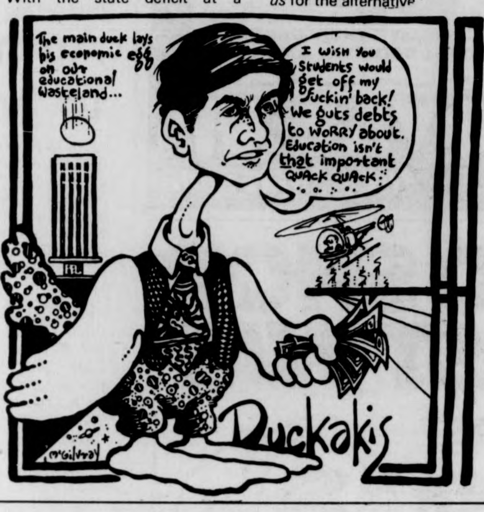
By B.J. ROCHE

The catch phrases and double talk flew last night, as the Student Union filled with the largest crowd since "Behind the Green Door." The subject was green of another kind, money, and the star was not a blonde porno queen, but another member of the royal family, the Duke: Governor Michael Dukakis.

The Governor proved himself the politician extraordinaire as he fielded questions from the right, center and particularly the left of the audience range. But the Duke was not the only one manipulating the proceedings, a number of students found their way to the microphone either misinformed or intentionally twisting Dukakis' statements to state their own purposes. The catcalls and jeers may have been valid expressions of frustration toward the political system, but they also served as displays of irresponsibility and the same pigheadedness we acuse state and University bureaucrats of possessing.

The political points seemed to shift back and forth last night; it was difficult to judge just whose victory the event was. Using such phrases as "corporate capitalism" and "organic question," the Governor drew loud applause; he knew his audience well. However, the Governor's idealistic earth shoes faded back into wing tips when dealing with a question regarding alternative economic proposals such as corporate taxation, graduated income tax, and consulting with the UMass Economics Department.

It was noted that these alternatives had not been explored, and he agreed. Fifteen love.



The main duck lays his economic egg on our educational wasteland...
I wish you students would get off my fuckin' back! We guts debts to worry about. Education isn't that important quack quack
Duckakis
McGilvray

With the state deficit at a whopping $521 million, perhaps it is time to look at alternatives. Where the Governor failed was in asking us for the alternative proposals. We do not have the time, experience (or authority) to develop and offer feasible alternatives. At this point all we can offer is our ideas, and they must be listened to and accepted.

In the process of offering their own answers, the politicians, students, and officials alike, have succeeded in confusing both the issue and everyone else. What is needed now is some clear definition on the part of the state as to exactly how much money will be cut. Considering the fact that every other state agency has taken its cut, it is totally unrealistic and maybe a little unreasonable that we do not get a budget cut.

The question now goes to Whitmore and Dr. Wood as to exactly what will be cut. Through the bureaucratic shuffle we have been sent from one part of the state to another; perhaps it is time that we extend an official invitation to the budget administrators to sit down in a "marathon session" with exact figures on the budget and the rationale for every dollar spent. The administration as well as the Governor have reiterated the statement of desire for student input. If the administration refuses, they will be going back on their word. We now have the backing and momentum to prevent that action. But it means putting aside the placards and guerrilla theatre, sitting down and doing a little homework through that vast pile of figures known as the budget. Can we handle it? We had better, otherwise we will have defeated our own purpose.

Relativity of terror

The references to terrorism and the attack on Susan Saxe in a Collegian editorial on Monday raised the question of the role of terror in revolutionary struggle. First off 'policemen' were not killed by Ms. Saxe, one policeman was killed — and it was not planned that he be shot. So let's not judge Ms. Saxe on that score just yet. The editorial likened terror to criminality and after having 'established' that fact, went on to further castigate Saxe for her declarations of lesbianism and Amazonism. Why should her avowed lesbianism be any measure of her effectiveness as a revolutionary? Does Mr. Karoutsos' sexual preference[s] inhibit his functioning in any way?

Discriminate terror, the art of inflicting psychological damage on the master always been a legitimate and effective tool in the hands of the oppressed; slaves burning down a master's tobacco sheds, John Brown at Harper's Ferry, workers throwing a wrench into the assembly line's gears, guerillas in Cuba attacking an army barracks ... are but a few examples of this. Colonizers of any kind act on the minds of those they colonize. They work to creat docile, weak-willed, dependent, fearful, drugged-up, and ashamed-of-themselves people, because a people kept in fear of even themselves cannot begin to take actions necessary to free themselves. Over time, successful acts of terror begin to break down the aura of invincibility the boss thrives on. One does not take human life lightly, but the terror the United States government and its supportive institutions, like prisons, mental hospitals, and schools inflicts daily, is far more brutal than anything one Susan Saxe ever did.

Stop the munching

This letter is prompted by the concern the People's Market has for its survival.

As most of those who read this letter know, we are a student-run, non-profit organization. The Market came into existence in order to provide students a place to buy food without getting ripped off. Our prices are lower than those in area stores because we pay ourselves very low wages; i.e., workers are paid for only ten of the approximately eighteen hours of weekly work at the Market. This system works because from its birth the Market has been dedicated to the ideals of community and cooperation — not capitalism.

The problem is this: our mark-up is so low that it covers operating costs, and nothing more. We simply cannot afford what has become a common practice among customers — MUNCHING! Even though people often try to compensate for what they've consumed by dropping some change in the "munchies" box — it's not working. The Market is in the red now and our deficit is increasing!

So, basically, this is a plea from the People's Market to the people who use us: Help us survive, support an alternative economic structure which fills the needs of a large community — and wait until you pay before you eat.

The People's Market

A letter to Dean Allen

An open letter is probably not the most efficient way of communication between you and me, but these are difficult times and I would like to make my views known to the whole university community, above all to our students. I am deeply worried about this university and its future to which both of us have devoted such an inordinate amount of time and energy.

I am getting angry. Angry not at you for a totally inadequate assignment of junior staff [and graduate students] but at the State for never having bothered to put our graduate school on a sound economic basis. In the past it was possible [though often painful] for our administrators to scrounge enough money out of the undergraduate budget to run a fairly acceptable show on the graduate level. To this end you blessed all those faculty members who for one reason or another decided to take leave without pay for a year. But when the undergraduate program no longer has any 'fat' that could be trimmed because of a series of previous austerity budgets, the whole structure is in jeopardy.

If we have to take the step of dismantling our graduate program we shall lose the best younger members of the department in no time, and I shall be the first to suggest to them to try to get located elsewhere. The State, on the other hand, will one day have to face the decision of whether it really wants nothing but undergraduate drilling grounds or a 'good' and respectable university.

I am worried, Jerry, and I assume that you are, too. It is time, I believe, that some of these basic issues get aired in public.

Thanks for the dance

We, the brothers of Phi Mu Delta, would like to take this opportunity to express our deepest thanks to all who took part in, and all who attended the annual Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon. We would also like to thank the following bands who so generously donated their time to provide some very very good music for the entertainment of all who attended: Grampaw, The Smiling Washington Band, Bear Mountain, May Apple, Easy Hollow Union, Freedom Rode, and Rush.

Again, thank you all for helping out and God Bless You. It's nice to know there are some people here at UMass who are still willing to help others in need.

Chorus line needs help!

When in the course of an already active day to day student's life an individual undertakes the severing of miles of red tape necessary to secure permission to bring 50 fellow human beings together through something different, for fun and to make some new friends ...

And, in response, less than 50 show up ...

And she optimistically hopes for more ...

All along hearing classmates assure her that they will come and bring many more than the needed 50 ...

... And the day arrives when only 7 show up for a rehearsal ...

The student who began it commences to wonder about the responsibility and self-confidence lacking in the non-showing individuals.

If you are 1 in 50, you are absolutely still needed. Whatever gave you others the impression that you would not be missed at one rehearsal?

And are you other curious readers not t involved in this little melodrama still going to shake your heads and say "Enough more will go — I wouldn't be needed if I went"???

I guess I'll get my answer this Wednesday night at 7:45 on the pond steps of the Fine Arts Center.

... Yes, YOU!

In a curiously anticipatory state of waiting —

1975 — year of the victory?

May 4th to May 10th has been called National Farmworker Week by the United Farmworkers Union. It is a time when boycott organizations across the country engage in massive actions and educational work to increase the visibility of the boycott. This particular week was chosen in order to call renewed attention to the necessity of the boycott just prior to the shipment of the season's first grapes to market. In the past year, the boycott has caused grape growers to place more grapes in cold storage than ever before. Grapes have been dumped at various times throughout the past year because of the lack of a market. Many growers, when they do find a market, are taking a loss on their grapes in order to get rid of them. The boycott of scab grapes is not over and it is now time to prepare for another season of the boycott.

Although renewed pressure is being placed on the boycott of non-United Farmworkers grapes and lettuce, this does not mean that the boycott of Gallo wines will be dropped. That boycott is being effective and has produced a whole chain of responses from Gallo, including a doubling of public relation expenditures, much of which is probably aimed at breaking the UFW. Representatives from the Winery have been sent to schools and communities in areas where committees have been able to bring about an effective consumer boycott of the scab wines. Nevertheless, few have been fooled by Gallo's slick P-R men and the boycott remains strong.

To mark Farmworker Week in Western Massachusetts, UFW support groups have organized several major events. They have called for our support for two in particular. On Thursday, May 8 there will be Human Billboarding on the Calvin Coolidge bridge on Rte. 9 in Northampton. This will take place from 7-9 a.m. to greet those who commute over the bridge with giant picket signs, reminding them of the boycott. On Saturday, May 10, there will be a mass demonstration at Town and Country Liquors, Riverdale Road in West Springfield at 1:00 p.m. This store has actively promoted Gallo products in defiance of the strike and boycott.

As well as drawing attention to the boycott, union supporters will be attempting to recruit full time staff people to help promote the boycott throughout the country this summer. A wage of $5 per week as well as room and board is all the union can offer, but for students credit for work done can often be arranged. The union needs your help and the rewards go far beyond those offered by many jobs. They have labeled 1975 the Year of Victory and with your help it will be.

Present shock

It's not easy being a senior. Especially in 1975. This is the worst economy any College graduating class has stepped into in over forty years. Economists predict that over 500,000 seniors will hit the unemployment lines this summer, with no end in sight. It's no song and dance.

Seniors here at the University have been, for the most part, wandering about in a daze all year. Most have had mild to severe cases of the Senior Blues — a dreaded sickness. The Blues begin with the realization in the fall that this is the last year of the "College Experience," the last of the so called best years of your life. Depression sets in when the Senior realizes that College has not lived up to the ideals and visions that society proclaims it to, "So that's all there is to it."

Things go from bad to worse when the poor Senior knows that in June, she-he will head for parts unknown and adioses and arivederchis will have to be given to many friends. Or at least some goodbyes. The case becomes terminal when the Senior realizes that s-he has no place to go. What next? More School? Job? Travel? Derelict? All feasible alternatives, but none promising. Except for the last.

Jobs are scarce. All jobs require several years of experience. And they get the people who have been laid off recently. Interviewers come and interviewers go, ask silly questions of cums and outside hobbies, and leave a trail of "We'll call you's and "I wish you much future success's."

"Well maybe I can volunteer my services to a needy cause for a year or two" mutters the hapless Senior. "The Peace Corps and Vista are the answer." Ah but no? They only take people with specific skills, and what kind of skills do people pick up here at UMass. None worthwhile. The poor Senior can't even give away his-her time. Even the French Foreign Legion is defunct.

"More school!" thinks the Senior. "After all it's kept me out of trouble and the job market these many years. Let's see, maybe I'll apply to Harvard, Yale and Berkeley. They'll see that I'm really one of them. Another degree won't hurt. Maybe even give me a better crack at the job market later on." But every other Senior in the country thinks the same thing, and the pitiful cum laude Senior can't even buy his-her way into the University of Southern North Dakota at Hoople. So the Senior writes away to an ad in the Phoenix for Jose's Quik Mill in Tijuana, promising degrees in medicine, law and plumber's helper in only a year.

"Well maybe I'll hit the road and see this country. But first I'll have to get some bread — to pay for the trip and the loan that let sent me to this great institution" reasons the irrepressible Senior. "But I'll have to get a summer job!" Good Luck Chump. The whole world is looking for that one.

The only answer, the poor Senior comes to understand is dereliction. To sit, vegetate, write odes and sonatas to beauty, truth and freedom. In short, the American dream. And people are going to wonder why nobody has any life to their pallor stricken smiles, at graduating exercises this year.

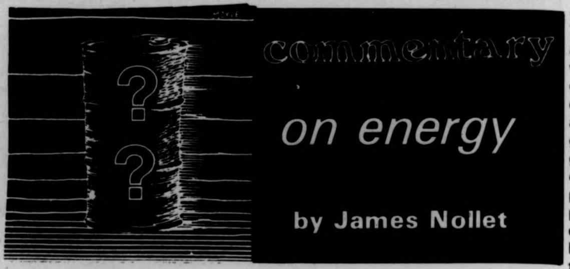
Future fuel; ulterior combustion



commentary

on energy

by James Nollet

There is no better a topic for presentation than a discussion of the implications of the use of our most common source of energy, to wit, the combustion of carbon based fuels like gasoline. Everyone knows there are many by-products of the burning of these fuels. Mostly, these occur as a result of impurities in the fuel and in its inefficient combustion. However, there are three by-products which can never be eliminated no matter how clean and efficient combustion is, because of the chemistry of combustion itself. I will not go into the specific chemistry itself, but it is enough to say that the unavoidable products of all combustion are water (H2O), carbon dioxide (CO2), and heat.

Of the three products of perfect combustion, water is manifestly harmless, and since this is a column devoted to energy problems, it is unnecessary to devote any more of the discussion to water. Heat is unavoidable because of the laws of thermydynamics which state, among other things that work, which always requires the consumption of energy, must be accomplished with the liberation of heat. This could have vast implications ecologically, but fortunately heat is not a material substance, but is itself a form of energy which will radiate away in time. It will not accumulate.

CO2 is the really noxious by-product of combustion. According to Science News, the amount of atmospheric has increased by 50 per cent since 1910. Although we have been in a period of global cooling since 1940, the long range effect of this accumulation must be to heat up the environment. This is known as the so-called "greenouse effect." CO2 is an increasingly hazardous substance, and as long as we stick to using our present mode of energy, its production is unavoidable. But we need not use carbonbased fuels, for the ideal alternative to carbon fuels is hydrogen (H2). As you can see from the brackets, hydrogen in its common molecular mode contains only two hydrogen atoms. It is the simplest compound in nature. It never contains carbon, and so can never produce CO2 when it is burned. It does indeed product water and heat, but as we have seen, these are relatively harmless products.

How is hydrogen produced? Basically, there are two ways. One is the catalytic way. A carbon based fuel can be passed over a nickel catalyst while heated, and this will produce H2. Unfortunately, it also produces CO2 since a carbon based fuel was used, so no real benefit is derived from this method.

The other way is viat the electrolysis of water, where an electric current is passed through water in order to break up the water into hydrogen and oxygen gas. This is ideal, for not only is the source of hydrogen (which is water) immense, but the source is also automatically replenishable, since the source eventually also becomes the product of the combustion of hydrogen. As long as one has an independent source of energy to drive the reactions, one literally can have an endless and pollution free cycle.

But as was stated, one needs a source of electricity. Where can this electricity come from? That's easy. It can come from existing facilities, and can be built from existing technology. To wit, it can come from hydroelectric power, and could be developed from the far vaster potential of wind power. To illustrate the possibilities, consider that the Soviet Union has a hydroelectric plant on the Dnieper River capable of producing 6,000 megawats (6,000,000 kilowatts) of electricity. I did some rough calculation, based on the fact that 150 kilowatt hours can produce 1,000 cubic feet of hydrogen STP (Standard Temperature and Pressure), which is the energy equivalent of about four gallons of gasoline. This one Soviet plant can produce enough hydrogen daily to supply the daily fuel needs (at about two gallons of gasoline per day) of about 2,000,000 American cars.

So why don't we do it? Presently, our technology is geared to using carbon based fuels. No single private industry could afford to switch over. Yet, as our fossil fuels run out, it is inevitable that we will have to convert to hydrogen fuel. Someday, the government will have to get into the business of overseeing the utilization of hydrogen. On principle I don't like to see it, but in the future it may be necessary for the government to nationalize things like the oil companies in order to coordinate more efficiently an intelligent energy policy. If it happens, it will simply be a manifestation of a reality which suggests that the energy problem is getting too big for the private sector to handle efficiently.

ellen gavin

Michael Dukakis has a smooth rap. It's a principle qualification for a man in his political position.

While appearing quite rational (within his frame of reference) and quite arrogant, last night he defended the very proposals which will decide who will go without food in this state, who will go without shelter, and who will be denied an education. He did it very mechanically, without emotion, without shame. He and others like him will have to live with the decision they make, decisions made without any fundamental changes in the basic premises and priorities of this system. He, and others like him will have to live with the chaos, strife, and human devastation that the next decade will bring.

Dukakis will go through with his proposed 10 per cent budget cut to UMass, all his promises about administrative cuts rather than cuts in student services will go out the window in a frenzy of political compromise and bureaucratic back-patting, to UMass administrators.

For all the work, energy, and committment of the students of UMass what do we get? Another committee to "advise" the governor, another committee without any real power, Dukakis understood that what students were asking for last night was full and equal participation in decision-making, and he was unwilling to make that committment. Dukakis doesn't believe that we have the smarts to come up with any solutions.

Damn you Dukakis! And damn you Bartley! and Damn you every Globe columnist who attempts to turn student concern into a picnic, who attempts to translate conscious responsible adults into a pack of spoiled, squealing children.

We are adults, old enough to understand the issues arising out of the current economic problems, as well as the solutions to those problems. I believe that many of us have a clearer understanding than those middle and upper class white men who have been pretending for years that they have all the answers.

Hey Wood, and Bromery, and Gulko and Gage, and the rest of you, do you think we've forgotten you? In the midst of these legislative and gubernatorial half-time activities, do you believe that we'll have forgotten how to tackle when Dukakis throws the ball back to you? We haven't forgotten, we're just waiting to check out your game plan.

You students, do you believe them when they call you ignorant, and incapable of understanding these difficult grown-up matters?

I don't believe it, and I doubt whether you do. And in this is our power. To quote a patriot of long ago, Josiah Quincy, "The people, I say, are the only competent judges of their own welfare."

Vets may earn credit for service experience

Veterans who attend UMass as regular undergraduate students may now, in most cases, receive some academic credit for their service experience.

Veterans who are applying for credit must submit a legible copy of their DD214 separation paper with their student number written on the top to the Registrar's Office.

Students who have other than dishonorable active military service of six months to one full year, including the completion of basic or recruit training, may be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman level (two "military science" credits). Military service over one year will be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman and sophomore levels (four "military science" credits).

A veteran who has been commissioned as an officer by completion of a program such as OCS is eligible for eight "advanced military science" credits. In addition, credit may be given to veterans who have attended certain military schools while in the service. If the veteran wishes to pursue this he must bring to the Registrar's Office a legible copy of this DD214 and Diplomas of Certificates of training. The Veteran who wishes to pursue this credit must also be present when the forms are turned in at the Registrar's Office so that he can interpret any unclear abbreviations or numerical codes and provide a course description if necessary.

Credit may also be given for on the job training received in the service. However, the veteran must request the related academic department to examine-evaluate his knowledge or skills in that area.

Any veteran who wants to have his forms checked for possible academic credit should bring them to Bill Staton at the Registrar's Office Mon., Wed., Thurs., Fri., from 3 to 5 or Tues. all day.

Positions open for OH instructors

Orchard Hill Residential College has positions next fall for at least 9 graduate assistants- associates. We are looking for people with the following qualifications:

— Interdisciplinary study in at least one of these subject areas: Ethnic Studies, Sex Roles and Human Identity, Urban Citizen-Politics, Science, Technology, and Society, Society and the Arts, Career and Education, The Third World and Racial Awareness, Consumers and Corporations;

— Capacity to work collectively with other instructors (faculty and graduate students) and students in both team instruction and program development;

— Willingness to examine the practical implications of course work, possibly developing options for some students "in the field," e.g., places near the University, the University itself, or the Orchard Hill community;

If interested, write to Professor Michael Wolff, Director of Orchard Hill Residential College, no later than May 9, 1975. Please outline in this letter — personal-professional background,

— your response to this description of the positions, and

— names of one or more University (or Five College) faculty members with whom you have been working.

Evening College

June 24 to August 15

If you like to learn after the sun goes down, you can take advantage of Summer Evening College. 50 courses are being offered in this program, including everything from Art to Zoology. As with all of our programs, we offer those important extras like financial aid, counseling services, and a lot of friendly personal attention. UMass is big enough to provide you with what you want, and small enough to give you what you need.

Registration is by mail or in person at Boyden Gymnasium on Monday, June 23, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. The Evening College is brought to you by the University of Massachusetts' Summer Program Office and Division of Continuing Education. For more information contact Continuing Education at Hills House North or call (413) 545-0905.

GOLLY, MARTHA, DON'T YOU HAVE ANY GUILT FEELINGS OF ALL THIS HOT MONEY WE HAVE, WHILE EVERYONE AROUND US IS BROKE?
OH, YEAH!... JUST LAST NIGHT, AS A MATTER OF FACT---
TODAY ONLY! MARTHA IN A DRESS!
--IZZY AND I WERE FEELING SO BAD THAT ALL WE COULD DO IS LAY THERE, HOLDING EACH OTHER, AND ROLL ANOTHER FAT JOINT OF COLUMBO AND PLAY THAT NEW JONI MITCHELL ALBUM--
I THINK, SOMEHOW, I'LL RATIONALIZE IT---
SUCH STRENGTH!
BUT THE HUMAN SOUL IS SINFUL, AND CORRUPT!
HOW CAN YOU SAY THAT, WHEN THE VEDANTAS SAY--

Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Tuesday, May 6 — Born today, you have been gifted with artistic talent, very likely in more than one field. With exceptional self-discipline -- which you are entirely capable of -- and determined application of your talent(s) to a single medium of artistic expression, you could very well achieve both fame and fortune through your own creative nature. You will, however, have to fight against a tendency to move from one artistic field to another; if you are wise, you will find your milieu and stick to it.

You possess extraordinary intuitive powers where your relationships with others are concerned. You know immediately when a friend is in difficulty, when he or she is in a good or bad mood, or when the relationship as a whole in in trouble or rolling along smoothly. This intuitive understanding of others' moods, feelings, tendencies, and so on can gain for you an exceptionally good and solid marriage, for it will enable you to deal with problems before they arise!

Yours is a naturally adventurous nature which, since childhood, has thrived on new experiences. Your spirits are always uplifted by travel; even a short journey of a business nature -- boring and uninteresting to many -- causes you to feel the regeneration of energy, good will, optimism. At the same time, however, you are a homebody and have no desire to become a "rolling stone"; you enjoy gathering moss too much!

To find out what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Wednesday, May 7

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Put your effort and energy into the matters at hand. To waste your time weeping over what was or what might have been would be foolish.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Allow your new plans for the future the time they need to gel. You may find that, on second thought, new goals are really not for your.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can make social contacts count in business matters today. Make sure others know precisely what you have in mind before you put them to work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Social gatherings could turn into business meetings if you let them. You might, however, be wise not to let them! Be influenced by past experience.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can gain both romantically and financially if you are careful to make the right choices early in the day. Redirect your energies.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Your progress may be slowed down by technicalities this morning. But afternoon hours should see things moving along well -- and profitably.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Direct your attention to the weak spots in new plans. You should be able to come up with feasible alternatives by day's end.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make it your business to learn the whereabouts of loved ones. You may have been allowing yourself too much individual freedom; seek family ties.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You should find yourself the object of considerable admiration today as a result of your recent efforts to help another attain success.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — An unexpected gain may be unexpectedly lost if you are not wise enough to catch the signs of a reversal in trends. Observe well!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You would do well to put a financial windfall in the bank -- or to make a purchase with such wisdom that you can't possibly go wrong.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you would gain entry into circles other than your own, cultivate and develop interests outside those you presently possess. A time for growth!

'Woyzeck' opens Thursday

Woyzeck, Georg Buchner's anti-romantic and starkly realistic tragedy of a common soldier, opens Thursday (May 8) in the Studio Theater of the Fine Arts Center.

Newly translated by D. M. Knauf, chairman of the Department of Theater, this University Theater production marks the first attempt at a comprehensive version of the German dramatist's uncompleted play. The translation is also the culmination of some ten years of scholarly research.

May 8:
Fine Arts Center

Although written in 1836, Woyzeck was not produced until seventy-five years after its author's death. Since that time the play's influence on the world of theater has been widespread. It was the source for Alban Berg's opera Woyzeck, first performed in 1925, and was a highly acclaimed stage production by Swedish director Ingmar Bergman in 1969. The first English language production of Buchner's play took place in 1948.

The University Theater's mounting of Woyzeck, scheduled for a fifteen performance run (May 8-11, 13-18, 20-24), is the result of a year's pre-production work.

Tickets for Woyzeck, at $2 for Students and $3 for Non-Students, may be reserved by calling the University Theater Box Office (545-3511), open daily between the hours of 12 and 5 p.m. The curtain for all performances is 8 p.m.

Both UM boats victorious as crewwomen down MIT

By TERESA HANAFIN

It was the type of day that rowers dream about — no wind, calm water, and sunshine. A perfect day for UMass' Women's Crew to demonstrate their competence in preparation for the upcoming championships.

Competence and confidence combined took MIT as victims Saturday on the Charles. Both UMass boats were victorious, as the varsity again sprinted the last 200 meters to pull by MIT by half a length at the wire.

In a psychologically uplifting race, the JV stormed from behind to nip MIT's second boat in the last few strokes by one tenth of a second.

The varsity had a very close race up until the last 200 meters or so. MIT rowed a higher stroke at the start and was a bit ahead, but the two boats were essentially right next to each other the whole way along.

UMass attempted to move ahead around the halfway mark.

"I called a sprint at the 400-meter mark," recalled coxswain Nancy Tompkins, "but we really didn't move on them. So I called a second one with about 150 to 200 meters left in the race."

The second sprint was effective as the women pulled by the Boston school and beat them by two seconds, the unusually fast times being 3:18 for UMass and 3:20 for MIT.

"I was very happy with the way they rowed," intoned Coach Bob Spousta.

Senior Barb Andreas had another perspective. "As my last race on the Charles, it was really nice. You didn't have to think about the elements of wind and waves — just concentrate on rowing. It was great."

The JV race had all the excitement you could have wanted from a competition. This boat of first-year rowers was behind after a weak start, and at one point was trailing by almost a whole length.

"We had two sprints called right in a row at the last 250 meters," explained stroke Louise Romanow. "We had been holding our own, and the first sprint helped us to start to catch up. With the last spring, we managed to pull past."

The second boat tore up the water on the last few strokes, and just edged MIT with the last stroke.

"This was a good team victory," enthused Spousta. "The girls were ecstatic. It proves that a race is not won until the boats are over the line."

The race served as a confidence builder for the heretofore unvictorious JVs. "It made a big difference to a lot of people on the team," explained Louise Romanow.

"We needed a victory psychologically. It would have been depressing to go into the sprints without one. At least we have won now."

With this victory, UMass has a good chance at being seeded fourth in the Eastern Association of Women's Rowing Colleges (EAWRC) Sprints.

"These races have been good tune-ups for the sprints," claims Spousta. "The women have not rowed their absolutely best race yet. We can reach deeper inside ourselves and do better. Hopefully we will peak at these championships."

Although a final decision has not been reached yet, probable high seedings would go to Yale, Radcliffe, and Wisconsin, in that order.

Golden State gamble fails as title search resumes

OAKLAND [UPI] — With hopes for a series advantage gone, the Golden State Warriors Monday resumed preparation for their National Basketball Association Western Conference finals against the Chicago Bulls.

Games No. 4 and 3 of the best-of-seven series, which Chicago leads 2-1, are scheduled for the Oakland Coliseum Arena Tuesday and Thursday nights.

The Warriors, by virtue of their better season record, had the option of playing the first two games against the Bulls at home. Instead, they opted for the first at home and the next two in Chicago.

The Warriors, in addition to seeking a rest after a difficult semifinal series against Seattle, felt they could take the Bulls in the opener and with a split in Chicago, would be in an excellent position to sew up the division title at home.

It didn't work that way. The Bulls were "handed" the second game and then punished the Warriors in no. 3 Sunday, 108-101, as guard Norm Van Lier scored 35 points and handed out nine assists to pace the Chicago attack.

"We're not out of it — not by a long shot," said Coach Al Attles as he sent his team through a regular workout at the Oakland arena. "We're confident. We had several lapses Sunday, but Chicago also played its best game of the series."

Dick Motta kept his Bulls in the Windy City for a workout before flying west Monday night.

"We've got to have the killer instinct," Warrior center Cliff Ray said as he stepped onto the court for the practice session. "We can't let them push us around. We had them on the ropes Sunday (the — Warriors held an 11-point lead in the second period), but we eased up. We can't do that. We've just to play tough defense and work for the good shot."

Rick Barry scored 21 points Sunday, but was only 9 for 23 from the field.

Softballers yet to put game together

By GREG LEVINS

The UMass women's softball team, coming off a disappointing 4-3 loss at the hands of Keene State, will attempt to rebound this afternoon against Worcester State College.

The Minutewomen, whose record is a deceiving 1-6 on the season, have had trouble as of late with their base running. This aspect of their attack has hampered their run production which in turn can account for many recent losses, including Keene State.

The club as a whole has yet to combine all aspects of their game. The timely hitting and clutch defense just hasn't been present. Many factors could account for this, but the overall lack of playing experience has to be considered the most noticeable.

UMass pitcher Lu Ann Fletcher, although having absorbed most of the club's losses, will attempt to handcuff Worcester State at 3:30. Fletcher's record does not indicate the type of ball she's been pitching. Except for occasional wild spells, most of Fletcher's trouble has come due to lack of defensive support.

A strong game from Fletcher coupled with some solid defense and power at the plate, is needed not only to defeat Worcester State but to supply the squad with enough momentum to finish out the year in fine fashion.

For naught...Maine wins YanCon

Basemen pull Fairfield split

By BOB HIGGINS

The important news of the day came before yesterday's UMass-Fairfield doubleheader even began.

UMass baseball Coach Dick Bergquist mentioned, almost casually, that Maine, by sweeping a doubleheader over the weekend, had clinched the Yankee Conference title.

The Black Bears finished their YanCon schedule with a 5-2-1 record (the conference awards two points for a win, one for a tie). The Minutemen, after splitting with Rhode Island over the weekend, have a conference record of 3-3. Thus, even if UMass sweeps their two remaining conference games, they will fall short of their season's goal by one point.

The Minutemen then went out and dropped the first game to Fairfield, 5-1, but came back in game two, behind the pitching of John McManus and the hitting of Jerry Mondalto to whip the Stags, 5-3.

The Minutemen couldn't do anything with Fairfield hurler Steve Glowa's assorted junk in game one, as he scattered five hits and two walks, and kept the UMass batters off balance all afternoon. The sole run came in the third when Paul Abramowicz singled, moved to second on Jim Cullen's sacrifice bunt, and scored on Pete Backstrom's single.

Freshman Pete Rankowitz started game one for UMass, going the full seven innings and allowing eight hits and six walks. But again, it wasn't the opposition's hitting but UMass' own mistakes that led to the team's demise.

In the fourth, Fairfield's Keith Garvey led off with an infield hit, and moved to third when Rankowitz threw away a pickoff attempt. Rich Augustus knocked him in with a single, went to third on Bob Johanson's single, and scored on a passed ball charged to Jim Black.

In the sixth Augustus walked, stole second, and was doubled in by Pittsfield's Mark Walsh to make it 3-1. The Stags added a couple of insurance runs in the seventh, the big play being a tough grounder which third baseman Jim Cullen threw away, which led to the two runs.

In game two, McManus turned in his third consecutive solid performance, pitching five innings before yielding to Chris Kirby, when he gave up a homer and single to start the sixth. The big righthander gave up five hits, three runs, and just one walk on the day. Kirby, who came up from the JV's, shut out Fairfield over the final three frames.

Offensively, Mondalto was the whole story in game two. The compact (5'9", 180) but amazingly strong cleanup hitter went two for two, scored three runs and drove in three. In the third, after Steve Wright walked and Backstrom singled, Mondalto smashed a fastball deep over the left field fence to put the Minutemen ahead to stay.

The injury bug which has hampered the team all season just won't go away. The squad's three top hitters, John Seed, Backstrom, and Black, all were at about half-speed yesterday due to leg injuries. Jerry Erg will be out of any pitching action for a while with a sore shoulder, and, to top it off, freshman hurler Rick Kelly turned an ankle doing hits running during the second game.

The Minutemen, now 9-15 on the season, will travel across town to take on Amherst College Wednesday afternoon. Jeff Reardon, the team's hottest pitcher of late, will start in that one.

SQUEEZE PLAYS ... Speaking of injuries, Joe Marzilli has been more than an adequate replacement for second baseman Mike Koperniak. An all-YanCon shortstop the past two seasons, Koperniak is out for the year with a dislocated finger ... A perfectly timed pickoff play at second got Rankowitz out of a bases-loaded jam in the first inning of game one ... The Minutemen have now played six doubleheaders, and split five of them. They lost two to Dartmouth a couple of weeks ago in the other twin bill.

Yes, folks, it's him again. Craig Allegrezza didn't pitch yesterday, but he did go one for three against the Stags of Fairfield. But it's a pisser picture.

Golf win string snapped; finish third in Salem

By RON ARENA

Realistically, it probably wasn't the eery mystique of Salem which caused the adverse weather conditions. Maybe the witches had little to do with it, but the temperatures in Salem yesterday seemed to perfectly fit the script of a Salem mystery movie.

The wind was blowing, the frost biting, the rain falling, and the weather wasn't that great either. As a result, scores ballooned, and after all the cards were tallied, the UMass win skein had come to an abrupt end.

The winning total, a soaring (as in windy) 330, was earned by Central Connecticut, with second place going to — no, not UMass — but host squad Salem State. The Minutemen squandered nine strokes behind with a 339 as each of their golfers shot over 80.

Sure, excuses can easily and frequently be a substitute for admitting your team was outplayed. But when the weather becomes so brutal (it was 35 degrees) that players have trouble gripping the club, it deserves more than just a casual mentioning. Claimed freshman Glem Sullivan, who carded an 86 after two great rounds at Stow, "It was so cold that I couldn't even feel my hands. I couldn't even grip the club."

Central Connecticut players, with one exception, felt the same effects of the conditions. However, they possessed one individual, Ray Kwasnik, who caused one to wonder if he indeed might be immune to the cold. Kwasnik captured low medalist honors with a 74 and single-handedly (actually he did use both hands) led his teammates to the upset, as the rest of his scores were 83, 86, 87, and 93. Considering that the entire UMass team scored sub-80's last week in Stow, the winning total seems anything but impressive. But again, "the weather was impossible for golf," according to UMass mentor Fan Gaudette.

For the record, John Lasek had the best minuteman score with an 81, even though for him also, "the weather conditions were the worst he's played in." Rick Olson followed with 85, while Joe Artman, who played minus the advantage of even a practice round on the course, shot an 87. Howie Terban struggled with a 90 which didn't result in the total.

UMass, although seeing their chance of an undefeated season literally fly away with the wind, appeared somewhat unconcerned with the defeat. "Sure, we don't like to lose, but we still beat a lot of teams. The kids are disappointed, but I'm not too upset.

"We're really shooting for the Nationals now," added the coach.

Qualifications for the Nationals will be held this Thursday and Friday at Dartmouth. Only twelve players will make the trip to Ohio State in June, as two teams will qualify, along with a pair of individuals. The scoring will be based on 36 holes of play.

FAIRWAY FACTS ... Central Conn still deserves credit for their win. Says Gaudette, "I'm not trying to take anything away from them. They are a good team." ... Harvard, one of the tourney favorites, made the trip without its two top players, Alexander Vik, and Tom Yellin, who had conflicts with their exam schedules.

Only four of the fifty participating performers shot less than 80 on the day.

Sox stab Indians 7-5

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Consecutive doubles by Fred Lynn, Jim Rice and Rico Petrocelli highlighted a four-run fourth inning Monday night when the Boston Red Sox ran their current winning streak to three games with a 7-5 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Luis Tiant, who was 1-4 at this time last year en route to a 22-13 season, went the first six innings for Boston but it was reliever Dick Drago who came on in the eighth inning to get pinch-hitter Leron Lee to hit into a force play with the bases loaded and preserve Tiant's third victory against three losses.

After George Hendrick's two-run homer gave the Indians a 2-0 lead in the first inning, the Red Sox got a pair of walks from starter and loser Jim Perry prior to the trio of doubles in the fourth.

Boston pushed across single runs in the fifth and seventh innings and scored its final run in the eighth when third baseman Buddy Bell bobbled Bob Montgomery's grounder with the bases loaded.

John Lowenstein homered for Cleveland off Tiant in the sixth, Jack Brohamer hit a run-scoring single in the seventh.

What's wrong with this picture? Answer: the UNH goalie is gone. Actually the UMass passing game was so good that the goalie was caught outside the net. Jeff Spooner takes the pass and scores. The Gorillas hope to take this passing game to Brown tomorrow in the biggest game of the season, for the NE Championship.

Ford requests acceptance for flood of immigrants

Compiled From Wires

WASHINGTON — President Ford said last night he opposes any post-mortem investigations into America's involvement in its longest war because the lessons of Vietnam already have been learned — by presidents, by Congress, by the people.

Ford appealed to Americans to turn away from preoccupation with the past. He said they should welcome — in the tradition of a land of immigrants — the 120,000 who fled South Vietnam and to pay honor to those Americans who served and were wounded and killed in the war.

"The lessons of the past in Vietnam have already been learned — learned by presidents, learned by Congress, learned by the American people," Ford said.

"We should have our focus on the future."

"It would be unfortunate to rehash who might be to blame" he said. "A congressional inquiry would be divisive and not helpful."

At a news conference, Ford also reported "hard evidence" that a bloodbath was underway in Cambodia with the killing of 80 or 90 former officials and their wives. There was no evidence of similar recriminations in Vietnam, he said.

The news conference was Ford's first public appearance since South Vietnam fell to Communist-led forces a week ago.

He repeated statements issued from the White House at the time. "The war is over," Ford said, "it seems to me we ought to look ahead" and not try to assess blame.

After the U.S. setback in South Vietnam, Ford said he understood the perception of other foreign powers that the United States may not remain totally firm to its past commitments.

"That perception is not a reality," he stressed, "because the United States is strong militarily...economically, and we are going to maintain our leadership on a worldwide basis.

"We want any potential adversary to know that we will stand up to them," Ford said.

Asked about the sacrifices of the Americans who served in Vietnam and gave their lives or suffered crippling wounds, Ford said: "I honor and respect them and their contribution was most significant. I think their contribution was not in vain."

Ford said Americans who served in Vietnam under five presidents honorably carried out public policy in defense of freedom.

"I think we should praise them; congratulate them. And we have an unbelievable commitment to them in the future. All we can say is thank you very much for what they have done for freedom."

Ford said although "there is always a chance" that he will reconsider his amnesty plan for deserters or draft dodgers, he anticipates no immediate change in his clemency program.

Student leaders begin planning budget cuts

By PAUL BRADLEY
Staff Reporter

Student leaders yesterday began to lay the groundwork for trimming the budget by 10 per cent in an attempt to forestall detrimental effects in student services.

The move follows pleas made by Governor Michael S. Dukakis for students to assist him in showing where the "fat can be trimmed." Dukakis Monday told a crowd of 3,000 students assembled in the Student Union Ballroom that cuts can be made without effecting student of instructional services.

Incoming Student Government Association (SGA) President John O'Keefe called the meeting which was attended by members of various campus groups.

O'Keefe said that he believes that a 10 per cent cut can be made at the University without impairing student programs and services. "There is enough fat, enough bureaucracy so that cuts will not have to come in student programs. A 10 per cent across the board cut is ridiculous," he said.

Some of O'Keefe's plan calls for forming a "collective cabinet" and a committee of up to 25 persons who will examine the budget and recommend cutbacks. The committee will branch out, said O'Keefe to study sections of the budget which will "facilitate the flow of information."

One specitic recommendation that will be presented to the Governor will be the establishment of a graduated tuition system, he said. Under a graduated tuition system, each student will be billed by their ability to pay with a limit as to how high the tuition rates will be. O'Keefe also said that he believes many students at UMass come from families that could probably absorb a tuition hike.

O'Keefe and a contingent of other UMass students will travel to Boston next week to present their recommended cuts to the Governor and Education Secretary Paul Parks.

UMass President Robert C. Wood has contended that cuts cannot be made without affecting enrollment levels and academic programs.

A chunk of the cuts should come out of administration, but he said all segments compiling the budget will be reviewed. A bureacracy has two roles, he said, "to survive and to grow. They never cut themselves back."

However, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said that cuts will be made in all areas, from high administrative levels to other areas.

In addition, O'Keefe, who will be sworn in as SGA president-tomorrow, said that he believes that some cuts can be made in the SGA budget. This would not affect the 10 per cent cut but would result in a lower student activities tax.

O'Keefe said that he favors the idea of fiscal autonomy if students are allowed "equal input" into where monies appropriated by the Legislature will go.

O'Keefe reiterated that he does not want to make budget cut recommendations alone. He said he will seek input from faculty, staff, graduate students and administrators.

"The governor wants proposals, we'll give him proposals. But I do not want to make all of these decisions myself."

"Value judgements are going to have to be made as to where the priorities lie," he said, "and student input is needed for this."

Fiscal autonomy allows flexibility

By JUDY BOUCHER
and SAM HASSEN
Staff Reporters

Although many state universities in the country have fiscal autonomy as a constitutional right, it was only 13 years ago that Massachusetts granted fiscal autonomy to public institutions of higher education.

"Fiscal autonomy permits the University to respond to changing societal preferences and needs. It allows us necessary flexibility to change with the times," said Budget Director Warren Gulko.

The Legislature in 1962 authorized fiscal autonomy for the 30 state colleges and universities. However, the Legislature approves 16 subsidiary accounts submitted by the UMass Board of Trustees. Fiscal autonomy allows the transfer of funds between each account without legislative approval.

Before the granting of fiscal autonomy each budgetary item over $20 had to be approved individually by the Legislature.

UMass President Robert C. Wood has recently come under fire for alleged abuses of fiscal autonomy when he moved into a $200,000 a year office in Boston.

However, Wood said that with the fiscal autonomy he has been able to save $3.8 million this semester on the three UMass campuses.

Gulko said the Amherst campus has generated some two million dollars in savings on a voluntary basis.

Gulko, the top official in formulating the budget, may be faced with the task of revising the budget to accomodate a possible 10 per cent cut.

COP organizes in academics

By CHRISTINE DILLARD
MDC Staff

With all the acronyms floating around UMass lately, do you know what COP stands for? It's the Community Organizing Project, and it's organizing students in departments for greater student input in academic decision-making.

Spokesperson Sue Rivest said the COP's role is primarily to advise students as to how they can become more active within their own departments. "We come where we're needed . . . We don't want to come in and take over," she said. COP itself doesn't want power, but wants to make it available to those most affected by the decision, according to Rivest.

In the past students have been involved in advisory positions within departments. When it came down to actual votes, however, students either had only "token representation," or no vote at all, she said. COP wants to "equalize" decision-making power for students, she said yesterday.

When asked how students could become more active in departments, Rivest suggested they get involved in departmental committees for personnel, curriculum and undergraduate studies.

Rivest said students appointed to key committees would represent other students within the individual departments. She also said that she hopes the students on the committee would establish a network of communications in order to keep others informed.

COP member Lynn Washburn said because of lack of communication in the School of Education many positions on committees there were not filled. Students do not know they exist, she said.

Rivest said a different circumstance existed in the journalism program. Some students were dissatisfied with a decision by the department to allow only a double major of journalism and English. Previously, any major was acceptable, provided the student met the requirements of both departments.

In both departments, students utilized the COP information and organization skills to deal with their problems, Rvest said.

Marty Miller, another COP member, said student involvement in departments would help to make the University a place where students could "come together and act like a community."

Rivest said that the COP was different from some of the other groups on campus that are involved in organizing students in that COP was organizing around academic affairs.

COP differs from recent attempts to rally around primarily economic issues such as possible tuition increases, and budget cuts, she said. "We're organizing on the concept that students should have some say in what goes on in their departments."

Lynn Washburn, Marty Miller and Sue Rivest (from l to r) are heading up a student organization drive in departments to provide students with "more decision making power."

Women's Conference workshops: Education, creativity, communication

Bv ANN EMERY

This is the third part of a five part series reporting the results of the 1975 University Women's Conference, which was held January 21-25 at UMass. Part Three continues the issues and recommendations of three more areas of workshops: Education, Creativity, and Communications.

EDUCATION:

The area of education focused mainly on the teaching aspects of women in education, as indicated in some of the workshop titles: "Women and Language," "Sexism in Our Classes," "Feminist Pegagogy," and "Political Theorists' Views of Women."

The education workshops also focused on the concerns of admissions and academic opportunities for women students: "The Older Women Student," "Educational Alternatives," and "Admissions for Women."

The concerns raised in these workshops focused on the needs and rights of the non-traditional. Women shared experiences and analyses of the non-traditional student, and the dearth of support and academic services to serve this increasing segment of the student population.

These non-traditional students have few places to turn for help. The services offered to them should not be dependent upon the volunteer time of full time students.

Women are also seeing a need in education to expand options, rearrange priorities, question the structure, values, and goals of education.

On another level, a high priority concern revolved around admissions, and hiring and firing procedures. It is necessary for nondiscriminatory access to the University, as well as an equal guarantee of survival for women students, faculty, and staff.

Women at the conference were aware that budget decisions impended.

And finally, questions were raised regarding the content and process of education itself at UMass. How can sexist curriculum and sexist professors and discriminatory practices be wrenched from the protective nest of "academic freedom?"

CREATIVITY:

Nineteen of the conference workshops were directly concerned with creativity, both to unwind and plan in while exploring particular media, and workshops which explored creativity and art conceptually. The workshops attracted a higher proportion of un-

700 volunteer blood for Red Cross

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY
Staff Reporter

"I'd term this as a success," said Dorothy Swanson, co-ordinator of the Red Cross-UMass blood drive.

There have been over 700 persons volunteering their blood to the semi-annual blood drive here. Although there were more people pre-registering at the last blood drive, there has been a nice steady stream of walk-ins, said Swanson.

Swanson said that the number of pre-registrants was lower than the last drive was probably due to the fact that the sign up sheets were on the concourse level during last week's moratorium. "There wasn't the usual number of people walking through the concourse," she said, "which is probably why not as many signed up."

Swanson said that volunteer nurses from all over the community donated their services. She also said that the Canteen sandwiches and refreshments were made by the Senior Citizens of Amherst, the Junior Women's Club, and University women. She also said that the clerical services were donated by the University women as well. Swanson cited Alpha Phi Omega, Gamma Sigma Sigma, and ROTC as being very helpful organizations in the blood drive.

Swanson said that the whole blood donating process takes about an hour. But the actual blood donation takes "between 10-15 minutes."

To give blood you must be in good health, 18-66 years of age, at least 110 pounds and not taking any medication. Swanson and staff will assist any donor if they have questions.

The semi-annual blood drive, sponsored each spring and fall will be held until May 9.

UMass credit union 'in healthy state'

By CHERYL WALSH
Staff Reporter

"We're in a very healthy state," said Peter Birnbaum, president of the UMass Student Federal Credit Union, commenting on the newly formed organization, now in its second month of operation.

The second of its kind in the country, the student credit union has approximately 140 members with approximately $30,000 assets.

According to Birnbaum the food stamp program is "picking up". The selling of food stamps has increased from 5 on the first day to 60 transactions yesterday. The credit union began selling food stamps April 15.

A "smooth running operation" is attributed to the 25 member volunteer staff who Birnbaum says are, "working very hard and are constantly busy."

Included in future projects of the credit union, which could be operative by next fall pending expenses, are the formation of a NOW account for students, life and auto insurances and group travel which would include discounts on regularly scheduled flights, according to Birnbaum.

Now housed in roon 166 Campus Center, the credit union sees an expansion and possible relocation in the future, he said.

In addition, the school of business administration will be working closely with the credit union in the future to develop an educational curriculum where students will gain practical experience as a volunteer with the UMass operation, said Birnbaum.

Many independent student organizations, who now depend on RSO for keeping accounts, have inquired into the credit union to compare services, Birnbaum added.

A credit union is a cooperative owned and democratically controlled financial institution. Membership in the credit union is open to all UMass students.

The credit union germinated from an economic survey on student needs last year. John Fischer, economic coordinator of the student organizing project, said the survey indicated that students needed the services a credit union offers and to "gain economic power."

"We still believe that interest rates will be five and one-half per cent annually," said Birnbaum. The first dividends will be in June.

Loans to undergraduates while not yet possible look "positive and promising," said Birnbaum.

Residential Life maintains paint policy

By BRIAN COYNE
Staff Reporter

The Residential Life Board decided last night to retain the present policy concerning dormitory room painting next semester and discussed a proposed change in the room key policy.

In other business, Board Chairperson Lynne Miskewich citing too much work announced her resignation effective at the end of the semester.

The present policy provides for the repainting of dormitory rooms only if the Office of Residential Life considers the room "unrentable" with its existing wall color. The student must submit a request for a room inspection if a change of paint color is desired. If the request is granted, the physical plant then comes to paint the room with a "suitable pastel color."

Robert Campbell, of the Office of Residential Life, said the office knew that students were painting their rooms independently of the physical plant and the office would not try to monitor such activity. The present policy provides for a charge of $55 per coat of paint to the student if the university must repaint the room before another occupant moves in.

Board Member Jeff Berkovitz said the policy was being clarified "to let students know that a risk exists when they paint their rooms."

Acting Director of the Office of Residential Life Ken Dean, said students were provided with paint for their rooms for two years prior to 1974, but the program had been unsuccessful because "there had not been proper supervision of students that we had anticipated."

He said the major problems with the program were sloppy paint jobs and vandalism. "If we can get increased supervision next year, a paint program for the students would be a very beneficial thing. But I'm not ready to say right now that the supervision will be there," Dean said.

Board members discussed a proposed change in the key policy which would eliminate the replacing lost room keys for students. Instead of replacing a key for $2, the proposal calls for the replacement of the door locks at a minimum cost of $10. The policy also calls for taking the master keys away from dorm counselors and keeping them in a separate box accessible only to the head of residence and counselors.

Dean said, "The object is to reduce the operating costs of the dorms." He said over 8500 keys were replaced last year and the total bill to the university came to over $53,000. The proposal to keep tighter security on the master keys stems from the fact that eight dormitories required an entire change of locks at a cost of over $1,000 per dorm, due to the loss of a master key by a counselor.

SW Assembly adds facilities to Hampden Student Center

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

By a near unanimous decision, Southwest Assembly (SWA) voted last night to better utilize space by adding facilities to the Hampden Student Center in Southwest.

After reviewing recommendations gathered by an assembly subcommittee chaired by Fran Brock, SWA voted 23 to two to locate a darkroom, crafts area, copy facilities, post office facilities, change machine, lecture notes, shops, media center, SWA office and activities coordinator office in the student center.

Brock submitted a space utilization report to the entire assembly after she had compiled student and staff suggestions as to what should be located at Hampden.

According to Brock, Southwest Business Manager William Brown does not fully back the report. He has "two objections" concerning facility location conflicts, Brock said.

Another proposal recommended in the space utilization report called for improvement of Hampden theater facilities. Central staff supported this particular recommendation, Brock said.

The vote to support the space utilization report came shortly after SWA President Gary Lewis voiced his approval of the report. Lewis presided over his first SWA meeting as president after being elected last week.

Other space that will be made available at Hampden, according to the report, will be used for a metal shop, leather shop, pottery shop, wood shop, bicycle repair shop and a record co-op.

"The idea is to get as many student activities in the center as possible," Brock said.

Even though the report was almost fully supported by the assembly, Brock was disappointed with the vote. "I'm sorry Southwest Assembly didn't support it 100 per cent," she said. "I still foresee a lot of negotiation before anything goes into Hampden Student Center."

SWA executive council and Central staff must now decide what will happen next with the report.

UMTA to study co-op plan

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) in conjunction with campus administrators hired a lawyer to study the legal feasibility of changing married student housing into a cooperatively managed system. The outcome of the study will make or break the cooperative housing plans.

Lawyer David Burres of Amherst will probably have a preliminary report on the cooperative feasibility by May 8, according to UMTA member Carol Walker. The legal fees are being paid for by the administration, under the terms of an April 14 "statement of understanding" signed by UMTA and the campus administration.

UMTA say they hope that the three UMass married student housing complexes will become cooperative by September.

Some 140 students comprising UMTA have been on a rent strike since last September when a 15 to 39 per cent rent hike was imposed on the tenants.

However, UMTA is prepared to turn over the rent strike monies now held in an escrow account to the UMass housing office on May 23, in exchange for the administration's signing of a cooperative management agreement.

Plans for the cooperative agreement are contingent upon the ongoing feasibility study. It is hoped by UMTA that the cooperative would include the need for a planned 13.5 per cent rent increase in the 395 apartment units as of September.

In other business the UMTA steering committee elections were held yesterday at the three complexes. There are nine available positions on the steering committee to provide representation for residents of the 395 apartment units in Lincoln, University and North Village complexes.

Results of the elections were not known last night and will be announced today. It is believed that several incumbents to the offices will be re-elected.

UMTA has acted as a representative of married student housing tenants since the beginning of the rent strike in September. The rent strike began in September and will continue until the signing of the cooperative management agreement, according to UMTA spokesperson Karen Forsgard.

Under the terms of the proposed agreement, the tenants will be responsible for managing the apartments themselves. UMTA members believe that a cooperative setup is the best way in which the tenants can avoid further rent increases and at the same time provide low cost housing.

Vietnam Communists may lift news embargo

Viet Cong flag flies in Paris

By United Press International

Diplomats of South Vietnam's new Communist government hoisted their red and blue, yellow-starred flag in triumph over their legation building in Paris yesterday and said foreign newsmen would soon be allowed to file again from Saigon.

They hinted privately that permission for correspondents to send out their stories might come during large-scale victory ceremonies planned for later this week.

The French newspaper Le Monde said the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government shut down press communications with the outside world after Communist forces captured Saigon April 30 because it was anxious not to let Western journalists still in the city be the only ones to transmit dispatches.

Le Monde said newsmen from Socialist block countries were en route to Saigon and would be flown there shortly from Hanoi.

PRG officials said France has not yet given official consular privileges to their mission. The Paris government has not yet decided when to exchange ambassadors with the new Saigon government.

Communists and leftist groups called for a rally in front of the embassy yesterday night to demand that France extend diplomatic recognition to the PRG.

PRG officials took over the embassy unobtrusively Monday night after the remaining few members of the previous Saigon regime departed.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug reported from Hanoi that a dispatch printed in the North Vietnamese capital spoke of resistance to the Communists on some islands, including Con Son, site of the "tiger cage" prisons.

Tanjug said the dispatch said Viet Cong forces "completed liberation of South Vietnam May 2 when they definitely crushed resistance of the puppet Saigon regime on Vietnamese islands of Phu Coc, Con Son and Truon Sa archipelago."

The nature of the resistance was not specified.

In Canberra, Australia announced it has recognized the PRG and will accept Vietnamese refugees if other countries do so.

Nationalist China said yesterday that its troops still occupy the Spratly Islands in the South China Sea, despite claims by the new Communist government of South Vietnam to have "liberated" them.

The 200 islands if the Spratly chain, about half way between Vietnam and the Philippines, are claimed by those two countries, China and Nationalist China.

The Nationalist Chinese occupied only a few of the islands and one source in Taiwan said Vietnamese Communist troops could have landed on some of the islands without the knowledge of Taiwan troops, since the islands stretch over a wide area.

Last year, the Saigon government under the leadership of Nguyen Van Thieu tried to take the Paracel Islands in the South China Sea which have also been claimed by the same four countries.

Indochina developments

Naval presence ends

SUBIC BAY, Philippines [UPI] — The last U.S. warship to leave Vietnamese waters docked at Subic Bay yesterday with 177 refugees aboard, ending 11 years of American naval presence off the Vietnamese coast.

The guided missile destroyer USS Benjamin Stoddert, part of a U.S. 7th Fleet flotilla that evacuated South Vietnamese refugees in an operation called "Frequent Wind," steamed into the sprawling American base 90 miles northwest of Manila.

The departure of the Stoddert from the Vietnamese waters ended the U.S. naval presence there that began in 1964 when North Vietnamese patrol boats attacked U.S. destroyers.

Thai planes held up

BANGKOK [UPI] — The United States yesterday temporarily stopped stopped repossessing aircraft flown to Thailand by fleeing South Vietnamese, but by then it had transferred the most valuable planes to an aircraft carrier at sea.

North Vietnam denounced Thailand for acting "in complicity with the looters and said, "Washington has blatantly pillaged the South Vietnamese people's properties."

Executions reported

By United Press International

Reports reaching Thailand yesterday said officials of Cambodia's new Khmer Rouge government have apparently executed at least 90 officials of the former regime in the northwest in systematic killings that could signal a bloodbath.

Many of the reports coming across the border into Thailand were difficult to verify and eyewitnesses impossible to locate.

Hostility to refugees draws Ford's anger

Compiled from Wires

WASHINGTON — President Ford, soliciting support for his $507 million refugee relocation program for Indochinese, told Republican congressional leaders yesterday "it makes me damn mad" that some Americans oppose the humanitarian effort.

At a White House meeting in advance of his early-evening news conference, Ford was reported to have "stated strongly he believes it is morally right to help these refugees."

As of yesterday, only 11,851 of the refugees had been processed and sent on to their new American homes. Most of them were wives, children and in-laws of Americans.

The rest of an estimated total of 120,000 refugees were jammed from California to Florida in three hastily assembled tent cities teeming with men, women and children. Thousands more were en route to America from staging areas in the Pacific.

For the lucky ones came helping hands from Americans and a chance at a normal life. For the others it was the day to day uncertainties that symbolize refugee life.

"I really don't know what is next," said a father of two youngsters at a stopover in Hawaii. "We just somehow gave ourselves to the U.S. immigration, probably for the rest of our lives."

The frustrations of finding ways to ease the refugees' plight triggered President Ford's outburst Tuesday as he tried to convince Congress to okay $507 million for resettlement.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen expressed the President's view that it is "morally right" to take in the refugees and to help them.'

He quoted Ford as saying "it just burns me up. These great humanitarians, they just want to turn their backs. We didn't do it with the Hungarians. We didn't do it with the Cubans and damn it, we're not going to do it now."

Pointing to the fact that normal annual immigration into the United States amounts to 400,000 persons a year, Nessen said that only 35,000 or less of the Vietnamese refugees are heads of households and 60 per cent are children.

Almost 12,000 of them were living in tent cities at Camp Pendleton, Calif., where 2,300 more were scheduled to arrive yesterday.

At Fort Chaffee, Ark., 4,183 refugees were to be joined by an additional 1,950 yesterday.

At the third camp in the continental United States, a makeshift settlement on a remote airstrip at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., 265 refugees sweltered in tents that soaked up the hot Florida sun but leaked in downpours. Three more flights, with an estimated 350 refugees aboard each flight, were scheduled for Friday, next Monday and May 15.

Study finds states in fiscal crisis

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A congressional survey showed yesterday that state and local governments are being forced to cut services and raise taxes this year, removing $8 billion from the economy and eliminating about 140,000 jobs.

It showed that most states and localities are being squeezed by falling tax collections and by rising costs and increased demands for their services while prevented from engaging in deficit financing.

Hit hardest are the 20 states with unemployment rates over the national average. Half of these are attempting to increase taxes this year.

Rep. William S. Moorhead, D-Pa., chairman of the urban affairs subcommittee of Congress' Joint Economic Committee, made the survey public.

Moorhead and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, are the chief sponsors of a bill to provide revenue sharing funds to state and local governments during periods of recession. When unemployment averages over 8 per cent, as it is now, the measure would provide $4 billion a year in additional aid so that state and local governments will be less likely to accelerate the downturn through their own fiscal reactions.

Opponents of the bill argue against financing the day-to-day operations of state and local government with funds the federal government must borrow in competition with private borrowers.

"The days of overflowing coffers have vanished for most state and local governments," Moorhead said. "For the next couple of years, tax increases and service cutbacks will be the rule, not the exception."

At a hearing conducted by Muskie on the bill, economist Robert Nathan of the Brookings Institution said states and localities are cutting expenditures and raising taxes to such a degree as to undercut the economic benefits of the anti-recession federal tax cut and of other federal stimulants.

The survey covered every state except Alaska and Hawaii and 140 local governments, including most big cities. The localities account for 40 per cent of all expenditures by local government.

The survey showed:

— 20 states have increased or plan to increase taxes this year by a total of $2.1 billion. Four states are cutting taxes by a total of $50 million.

— State and local governments plan $3.6 billion in tax increases and cutbacks of $3.3 billion in expenditures for services and $1 billion in construction outlays — removing nearly $8 billion of stimulation from the economy.

— About half the states have cut payrolls through layoffs, hiring freezes, reduced work hours or other means. Forty per cent of surveyed localities also cut back bringing a total state-local work reduction of about 140,000 jobs.

— Surpluses from plush years are diminishing. Forty-six states reported surpluses of $6.5 billion as of last July 1, but these will be down to $3.9 billion by next July 1.

State legislature may ban forced busing

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts House and Senate will meet in a joint session this afternoon to consider several proposed amendments to the state constitution, including one which would bar forced school busing.

The busing amendment, sponsored by Sen. Arthur Lewis, D-Boston, would prohibit school assignments on the basis of race, color or creed.

Other amendments to be taken up would abolish the Executive Council; authorize the state to impose a graduated income tax; limit legislative authority to impose new costs on the cities and towns, and authorize the classification of property according to use for taxation purposes.

Others would write an equal rights amendment into the state constitution and restrict state officers to two four year terms.

Constitutional amendments must be approved by two successive legislatures and then go on the ballot for ratification by the electorate.

Lewis said he anticipated arguments that the proposed amendment would be unconstitutional under the federal consitution but, "as a legislative branch of government we should not be giving judicial opinions."

He said that, if passed, he expected that the amendment would be tested in the courts but "that should not prevent us from acting."

The graduated income tax proposal has been defeated on the ballot three times in past selections, and it is expected to be on the ballot again in 1976.

Dukakis says state has 'legacy of corruption'

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday the state "has inherited what may be a legacy of corruption" in its agencies and that investigations are under way.

The governor cited intensive investigations of the Civil Service Commission, possible criminal activity in the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission (ABCC), and $11 million in overpayments to nursing homes.

Speaking at his weekly cabinet meeting, Dukakis said he also had been informed that "we may have similar problems in another state agency." He did not name the agency.

"It appears that we have inherited a fiscal mess that we must cope with, but I'm afraid that we've also inherited what may be a legacy of corruption," he told his cabinet.

Former Gov. Francis W. Sargent said at a news conference that he was not pleased with Dukakis' reference to a legacy of corruption. "It was a rather extreme sort of statement to make," he said.

A spokesman for Dukakis said several doctors have already been fired after it was found that they falsified eye examinations for civil service police and fire department candidates.

Charges involving administrative workers in the Civil Service Department will be brought later this week, the spokesman, Mary Fifield, said.

The charges will be the result of an investigation initiated five months ago by Civil Service Director Edward W. Powers. The investigation has recently been intensified.

Few jobs foreseen

CAMBRIDGE [AP] — An oversupply of college graduates for managerial and professional jobs will last until far fewer young people go to college, a Harvard economist said yesterday.

Prof. Richard B. Freeman said seniors leaving college for the rest of the 1970s will find "there is going to be a long delay period before they get the kind of jobs they want."

"And an awful lot of people are going to end up in non-professional, non-managerial jobs," he said.

Freeman, who presented findings from a computerized study at a symposium sponsored by the Center for Policy Alternatives at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said in an interview, "I don't think the situation is going to get any worse than it is right now, but it's not going to get any better until the early 1980s.

In 1973, he said, 17 per cent of the work force held college degrees.

River diversion urged

The diversion of water from the Connecticut River to supply the Boston metropolitan area has been recommended by the New England River Basis Commission, the Associated Press reported yesterday.

Water would be diverted from the Northfield Mountain and the Millers River Basin to meet the needs of the state capital region, according to Robert Kasvinsky, director of the study by the commission.

The report also said that better growth policies for the state are needed to prevent the destruction of the environment.

McGovern tours Cuba

HAVANA [UPI] — Sen. George McGovern, on an "educational" visit to Cuba, set out yesterday on a tour of a mental hospital, school, museum and Havana nightclub but had yet to announce a meeting with Cuban Premier Fidel Castro.

The South Dakota Democrat, who arrived in Havana Monday night, immediately called for an end to the U.S. trade boycott against Cuba.

McGovern, the third U.S. senator to vist the island as part of a thaw in Cuban-American relations, denied carrying any message from the Ford administration to Castro but said he conferred with the State Department and Pentagon before making the trip.

B1 suffers setback

WASHINGTON [AP] — In a major setback for a big Pentagon weapons program, the Senate Armed Services Committee today cut $338.3 million in advance production funds from the Air Force B1 strategic bomber program.

By a vote of 11 to 3, the committee directed the Air Force not to buy items for use in manufacturing the huge planes, designed to replace the B52 bomber fleet.

Campus-wide fast to aid starving Ethiopians

By JIM KASSNER
Staff Reporter

In an attempt to aid the thousands of starving victims in famine-stricken Ethiopia, a campus-wide Fast day is going to take place Thursday, sponsored by the Amherst chapter - Ethiopian Students Union.

Gary Hartley, coordinator of Fast Day cited the urgency of the situation, saying that the famine victims "need aid now, not next semester." Hartley explained that meal tickets Thursday may be voluntarily turned over during the lunch and dinner meals today. In return, the dining commons has agreed to donate approximately 75 cents for each meal ticket received towards the purchase of food. Hartley also said that "There is a possibility of having a Fast Meal on the 8th'', which would probably consist of such non-solids as soup.

Last semester during a similar campaign, the Southwest Center for Racial Understanding raised about $4300 for other famine victims. Although cash donations will not be formally collected, they may be sent to the following address: Committee to Help the Famine Victims in Ethiopia - World Wide Federation of Ethiopian Students (CHFVE), 215 West 101 St. No. 4E, New York, New York, 10025.

The urgency of the situation is illustrated by some of the statistics that have been released recently. For example, Ethiopia, a country of some 25 million has an average life expectancy of only 35 years, while the mortality rate stands at 60 per cent. Already, some 150,000 people have died, in some cases at the rate of 1000 per week.

Along with the need for food and medicine, doctors are also needed. Currently, the doctor to population ratio is about 1:70,000 people, with over 70 per cent of these located in the capital city.

Ethiopia, an agricultural country has been especially hard hit - for seven years, there has been little or no water in the area. As a result, whole farming communities have been wiped out, while 80 - 90 per cent of the cattle population has perished.

Compounded to the problem is a law that requires "tenants" to surrender 75 per cent of their products to an "overlord" (land owner). In addition, 60 per cent of the arable land in Ethiopia is held by the Royal family and other monopolies.

CHFVE has accused the Ethiopian government of being "archaic, bureaucratic, corrupt, self-seeking, and servile to foreign interests."

CHFVE was organized in May of 1973 by the World Wide Federation of Ethiopian Students. It is a voluntary non-profit organization, and operates in cooperation with 20 different local committees throughout Europe, the United States and Canada.

dergraduates and younger women than the conference average, but do not include statistics on the Coffeehouse Tuesday night and the dance Saturday night, each of which had full-capacity attendance.

Creativity workshop facilitators, in their evaluations, suggest that the lower representation of older women was due to the high-risk nature of some of the sessions, and a general hesitancy to participate in something of an undignified or unserious nature, such as the workshops emphasizing creative self-expression through spontaneous body movement, noise-making, etc.

This outlook exemplifies the major issue addressed through the creativity workshops: that creativity is inextricably linked with self-concept. A major concern of facilitators was to provide women with supportive, nonjudgmental space in which to begin to be creative — giving permission to make mistakes, act out, be crazy — break through the society imposed roles that press us into safe and non-creative conformity.

Space of one's own was identified as a key element necessary in promoting personal creativity. The second crucial element was identified as a supportive community in which to give permission, encouragement, and support while sharing skills in non-competitive ways.

COMMUNICATIONS:

Nine workshops were convened around the issue of communications, with three dealing specifically with taking action on the issue. In the post-conference evaluations, communications was the second highest priority issue.

The University Women's Conference was repeatedly cited as an excellent model of how events can be sponsored to maximize the sharing of similar concerns among women.

Another issue identified was a lack of access to campus media.

While no local media was exempt from criticism, the Collegian and WMUA were the subjects of a large portion of discussion as student-operated media that have the largest impact on campus, and should be the most accessible to women undergraduates.

Recommendations within existing media included attitudinal change, recruitment, and support. It was strongly recommended that persons involved in campus media, particularly those with editorial power, attend consciousness raising seminars on women's issues, and the role of media in changing society.

It was also recommended that media convene recruitment sessions specifically for women, that are facilitated by women currently working in that media. Once recruited, women should be encouraged to communicate and work with other women internally, to avoid the isolation and alienation frequently experienced on male-dominated staffs.

Development of a cross-campus, and perhaps Valley-wide women's publication was seen as a highly desirable, but long-range goal. In the meantime, as a result of the conference, the UMass Women's Communication Network has formed in an effort to share information, coordinate news, and provide support.

Copies of the report can be obtained at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall.

Lifestyle surveys area apartments

By NORM ROBINSON
Staff Reporter

This guide to apartments has been compiled to assist all who are interested in apartments for the coming summer and-or-fall. Almost all of the apartments in this area have been covered, with the exception of some lesser known and smaller apartments.

The basic information provided includes location, rates, facilities and utilities, recreation, and transportation availability. The waiting lists recorded were as of writing (AOW), and are subject to change. If anyone desires an individual house or an apartment, check with the local realtors, the housing office, or the want ads.

VILLAGE PARK — located off East Pleasant Street, Amherst, behind Orchard Hill. These apartments are for moderate income families, and eligibility requires certain maximum income limits. Mainly for families. Because of FHA affiliations the rents are low, but also regulations such as income limits and a maximum of twenty singles have been set. The present rates are as follows: $143.00 per month for one bedroom, $165 for two bdrm, and $182 for three bdrm. Includes all utilities. Very pleasant environment, quiet and woody surroundings. On the bus route, fairly long waiting list. Facilities include disposal, range, frig, and a central laundry unit. Phone: 549-0099.

PUFFTON VILLAGE — located on 1040 N. Pleasant St., Amherst. Summer Rate Schedule: Puffton Village I - One Bdrm-$135.00. Two bdrm-$195.00. Three bdrm-$220.00. Rent includes all utilities and cable TV. Puffton Village II - One bdrm-$100.00. Two bdrm-$150.00. Three bdrm-$175.00. Rent includes all utilities except electricity. Also cable TV. If planning to rent for just the three summer months. Also cable TV. If planning to rent for just the three summer months, security deposit is equal to one month's rent. Leases terminate Aug. 20. If renting for coming year and summer months, security deposit based on two months rent from September Schedule. Schedule effective Sept. 1, 75: One year conditional lease. One bdrm-$185.00. Two bdrm-$230.00. Three bdrm-$260.00. Rent includes all utilities except electricity. Heat, water, and cooking done by gas. Recreation includes Cable TV, 4 tennis courts, playground, basketball court, and large swimming pool. On the bus route, close proximity to campus, short waiting list :AOW), and positively no pets. Friday night smut

Collegian finds little worth rating 'X'

By DAVE EIBEL
Staff Reporter

If you're the type of person who finds school a bore, and spends all his time in the Blue Wall, the TOC, the Hatch, or the Pub, I have a suggestion.

If you're the type of person described in the above paragraph, and you also like to spend hours playing Spanish Eyes, Royal Guard or El Toro, then I have another suggestion.

Save two dollars out of your budget, ($2.75 if you like popcorn, $3.25 if you like Coke as a chaser for the popcorn), hide in the back of a dingy Volkswagen with the running board rattling dangerously and drive out to that staid establishment of cinematic art, the Amherst Cinema.

Sit back, relax, pop a few corns, and watch...a dirty movie.

It might seem strange to some of you that the same theater that offers Scenes From a Marriage by Ingmar Bergman, children's matinees Friday and Saturday, also shows an "x" Friday night at 11:30. But when you consider that the Amherst Cinema is only serving one of the many needs of this highly student-oriented area, x-rated films late on Friday night are not too hard to swallow.

Excuse the pun, but if you expect to find Linda Lovelace on the screen practising oral gymnastics, or Marilyn Chambers trying to score with a four-on-one, you'll be disappointed. Since the censorship laws were restricted once again last spring, the prurient theatergoer has been forced to stomach x-rated movies that are x-rated in name only, in order to lure unsuspecting frustrated students who've given up on the Blue Wall to satisfy their natural drives in a plain, bleak theater.

Although the smut palaces of Boston and New York are supposedly attended by men in their 50's with long raincoats, Amherst has few of those creatures foaming at the mouth on the corner of Amity and Main

The majority of the people hiding out at the Cinema on Friday night are the same people you find in Food Science 101, English 221, or Chem 100. Ninety per-cent of them are males, and the few women you see there are always accompanied by a grinning escort who sneaks as many smiles at the screen that his female friend allows.

It's difficult to say what the people come for. If it's kicks, they're in the wrong place, and if they're frustrated they should realize that 69 out of 70 dirty movies are supposed to make you more frustrated. Besides that, the movies shown in these trying times, are just that; trying.

Take a recent Friday night fare, "Last Foxtrot in Burbank." The Burbank Press called it a "mish-mash of Last Tango in Burbank, but that's about as far as the analogy goes.

During the 75 minutes there is little to sigh about and during one of the rare moments that a coupling occurs it is always a dry one. Whether it's a scene with a fifty year old man making it with a nubile nymph on a motorcycle, or the same man making love with the same woman against a wall, (no it's not a new type of demolition), it's fakery at its best.

The lack of true sex leads many in the audience to cheer at the simple sight of an uncovered breast, and the sight of (Oh my lord) pubic areas is enough to cause a standing ovation. Some characters get so bored that they exhort the actors with cries of come on, come on! But unfortunately nobody ever seems to.

In truth, it's the audience and not the film that's the real turn-on. The unbridled crudeness of those in the theater would lead Shakespeare, if he was still around to retract his maxim "the play's the thing," and come up with a new one like "the playgoers are the thing."

But come to think of it, Shakespeare would never have spent two dollars or 15 shillings to go the Avon Theater on a moonlit night to seek smut.

He'd rather write another play.

Grow your own with homemade plant propagator

By PHILIP THOMASON
Special Correspondent

Beating the high cost of indoor plants can be aided by a homemade plant propagator.

The propagator, used for rooting plant cuttings, is easy to construct with household and natural materials. These materials include:

A No. 10 tin can

An eight inch piece of garden hose

Rust stopping paint (optional)

Half a can of gravel

Half a can of sand

A seven square inch piece of fine nylon or plastic mesh

Water

Plant cuttings

Number 10 tin cans are the extra large fruit and vegetable cans. A discarded can is usually open at one end, making an ideal container for the propagator. Although a No. 10 can is not absolutely necessary, the larger the can the better.

Wash the empty can out and punch a small hole half way up one side. The hole only needs to be large enough for water drainage, between 1-8 to 1-4 of an inch in diameter. An eight penny nail makes a good punch.

After this is done, the can may be painted with rust stopping paint. Although painting is optional, it will increase the life of the propagator. Also, different colors may be used to make the can more attractive.

When the paint is dry, hold the piece of hose upright inside the can. It should be placed against the side opposite the drainage hole and run from the top to the bottom of the can.

Fill the can up to the drainage hole with gravel. This should be about half the can. The gravel will hold the hose in place.

Now, cut a circular piece of plastic mesh to the diameter of the can. This mesh should be fine enough to prevent sand from passing through while porous to the water. If necessary, more than one layer may be used.

The plastic mesh may be found at a hardware store for about 25 cents. A more thrifty minded person will find a discarded nylon stocking to work just as well. Plastic and nylon are suggested because they will not rust nor rot in water.

Cut a hole at one edge of the mesh to go around the hose. The mesh should be placed on top of the gravel, covering the entire surface. Any extra pieces of mesh can be used to cover the drainage hole.

Carefully pour the sand in over the plastic mesh, making sure the mesh lies flat. The sand should fill the can up to an inch below the rim. Pack the sand tight.

Now, the propagator is ready for the water and cuttings. Pour a half cup of water over the top surface to moisten the sand. Then slowly add additional water through the hose until it runs out the drainage hole.

Following this procedure the sand is kept moist enough for rooting yet will not be so wet as to rot the cuttings. The propagator should be watered through the hose daily so as to keep these conditions without disturbing the cuttings.

With a pencil, make holes in the sand for the cuttings. Make the holes far enough apart to avoid crowding and allow for adequate root growth. Place the cuttings in the holes and firmly pack the sand around them.

The completed propagator should be placed in a warm place with indirect sunlight. The average cuttings will root in about two weeks but some plants may take up to a month. The cuttings should not be checked too often, for this will disturb the roots.

When the cuttings have a good clump of roots they should be potted. New cuttings can take their place in the propagator. In this manner one can start many new plants.

This easily constructed propagator is a good rooting medium which makes indoor gardening fun and inexpensive.

Music Theater Guild accepting applications

Applications are now being accepted by the UMass Music Theater Guild for the production staff of their fall musical. This musical, which will be announced later in May, is scheduled to take place in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall on November 20, 21, and 22 of the 1975 fall semester. Since the show has not been announced, if any applicant does not wish to participate in the show chosen they may withdraw their application at any time.

The UMass Music Theater Guild is an independent student organization not affiliated with the Theater Department in any way. The organization has been at UMass for 39 years. Productions in the past have included "Company" in 1973, "Dames at Sea" in 1974, and the overwhelming success "Pirates of Penzance" performed in April of 1975.

The unsalaried staff positions, which are open to anyone in the Five College Community, include producer, director, musical director, choreographer, set designer, costume designer, lighting designer, props manager, stage manager, master carpenter, master electrician, and assistants to these positions. Interested people should prepare a resume of their theater experience, especially experience dealing with the desired position. Included in the resume should be name, address, telephone number, class, etc. Applicants will be contacted for an interview.

Applications can be mailed by campus or five college mail to:

Avis J. Yuni

A gubernatorial showcase

By JIM PAULIN

Before the Governor addressed the masses Monday night, he held a press conference in the Collegian office. Questions were restricted to staff members; the outside media was present but tacit. He came in through the back door to avoid premature public confrontation and ensconced himself in a wooden armchair.

It was a spectacle. There must have been at least 15 still photographers and five TV cameras in the room. Super bright lights were clamped to the wall for the TV cameras: between the TV lights, ceiling lights and the glittering reflected glare from many lenses, there was not a shadow on his face. His humbleness, out from the dim subway underground getting a media suntan. In real life, he lacked the baby face that many of the photos of him convey.

The photographers, in a cacophony of nervous, twitching shutters, captured his face, his left sideburn profile, his right sideburn profile, his serenely crossed legs and his fiscally conservative wingtips for the next front page, telephoto machines and personal achives-portfolios of the superfluous, unassigned Collegian photographers, whose cameras had never before hosted such a distinguished subject.

They stumbled about in a tight semi-circle, some of them almost falling a few times, but buoyed up by a crouched peer who didn't want a picture of himself playing twist with a professional brother or sister.

There were photographers and TV cameramen standing on layout and typewriter tables. Unfortunately, no one had the ribald foresight to weaken one of the table's legs, but I suppose it was politically tactful not to have, because the malicious destruction of state property is terribly wasteful and the Governor abhors waste.

Dukakis was accompanied by Secretary of Education Paul Parks, who seemed to have come mainly as a decoration, since he said nothing. I suppose a governor takes his cabinet members with him when he travels to their assigned areas as one wears shorts to the beach, sneakers in a gym or a tuxedo to a formal ball.

The reports on the Dukakis-Collegian budgetary dialogue could have been written before he came. He knew what the questions would be and he had the answers in his pocket weeks ago. — But why are you being so stingy, governor? — Me? I'm just doing Sargent's dirty work. This deficit is here because he was such a wasteful incompetent. Big daddy's in the hole, and your allowance just isn't going to be as big as it used to be. — Someone asked him his opinion of Dr. Wood, and Scretary Parks squirmed in his chair and twitched out an uncomfortable smile. Mike and Bob were doing fine, but Bob has been a sore sport for a little while.

The press conference was a preliminary to his grand, noble, and slightly cathartic performance in the grand ballroom of the Student Union where he met passion with relative dispassion, shrill accusations from the floor occasionally produced sighing exasperation like — I just can't understand why they can't understand. — And the cameras, cushioned by the crowd, faced the man of the 50 cent subway ride out here among free buses but probably delivered beyond the suburbs to Amherst in a chauffered limousine. To the strident voices from the ballroom floor crying — more money, more money, — he was Rockefeller, King Porker, and Nero playing the violin as UMass goes to hell. Outside the ballroom, a cynic sneered "Tax the dead."

letters to the editor

Monday night Governor Dukakis came to the UMass campus to see how he could "handle" UMass students and, unfortunately, discovered that he could deal with us fairly easily. Since we began our struggle to fight the budget cuts against human services across the state, we have been a continual thorn in his side. Our willingness unite with the underpriviledged and our ability to formulate alternative methods of fund raising have made us particularly embarassing...

After an initially hostile reception, the Governor found that he could obfuscate, browbeat and even lie almost at will. I will not exaggerate. The hard work and determination of the many groups that have participated in this struggle and the unity of the student body was evident in the intelligent questions that were asked and the support that they received from the audience. By and large we were well behaved, respectful, and polite. I have nothing against these qualities, but even good things can be carried too far. Should we have been polite when he accused us of irresponsibility in merely singing and chanting at the Boston Common? Should we have been well behaved when he browbeat the student who asked him for his stand on student unionization? Should we have been polite when he tried to bumble through a clumsy obfuscation of the real reason for his opposition to measures that would really "tax the rich"? Should we have been respectful when he attempted to convince the former welfare mother that there actually were extensive day care services when in reality hardly any exist at all, or when he cavalierly suggested that able bodied general relief recipients be thrown off the welfare rolls to get jobs that don't exist? I think not.

Our good bahavior was evidently misinterpreted for weakness and vacillation, and served only to increase the Governor's initial arrogance and contempt. I am not advocating indignation and hostility as a general style of behavior at public gatherings. I am only suggesting that we, as hardworking citizens of this state should not have to put up with such rudeness and contempt on the part of an elected official. We should show respect only where respect is due.

Jim Wooster

Last night Governor Dukakis asked for constructive input on the UMass budget.

We see here layer upon layer of very highly paid bureaucratic administrators who have spent a great deal of their time lately scurrying about trying to preserve their jobs. Fat jobs in our huge police adminstration go on, while security guards are reduced. Janitors in dorms are cut back; Residential Life asks $10,000 for a fancy office telephone system. Physical Plant has no idea of the meaning of productivity.

Solution: suspend fiscal autonomy for about three years to put this house in order.

Gregory S. Nolder

No matter how much I support the students' protests against budget cuts, I must applaude Governor Dukakis in his efforts when he visited our campus last night. The issues were clear. The state, it was explained, is in a financial deficit of $700 million and needs money desperately. Cuts have to be made. The Governor asked students again and again for their proposals and suggestions concerning possibilities of where money could come from. Not one student who had the opportunity to speak proposed anything with which the Governor could work. Each appealed to their own individual concerns in groups such as welfare recipients, students on financial aid and those in special programs. They voiced their grievances but offered no solutions.

Figures concerning two-thirds of the Federal aid to states for higher education that go to private schools were not even mentioned, and yet we were given this information to be used in a proposal to our representatives when we demonstrated in Boston last week.

Another disappointment I found was the fact that few of the issues discussed at our town meetings here on campus were raised to the Governor. He asked us for information concerning what areas would be affected by the proposed cuts, and no one mentioned Third World Centers, Women's Centers, BDIC, Outreach and other special programs that make UMass a unique learning institution.

It was unfortunate that the Governor did not stay to hear those who did not get to voice their ideas, and I agreed with the statement made that other employees work overtime, why not the Governor, but, I also find it unfortunate that the people who did get to speak did not raise any of the issues I have mentioned so far.

I hope that our efforts as students and faculty do not end and that it is not too late to bring up these issues.

Don't let Dukakis walk away thinking we have nothing to say but "No budget cuts" ... let's give him something to think about!

Andrea Pollinger

FORUM: Governor at UMass

To claim that the May 5th Amherst visit of Governor Dukakis was not a high point in that long and distinguished tradition of noncivility, intolerance, and manifest discourtesy that we at the University so proudly maintain, is to unjustly underrate our efforts. Friends, we were nothing short of utterly magnificent in our display of distemper and uncouthness. Our heartiest congratulations to those present who made it possible.

For those readers who may not appreciate the subtle approbations of the preceding paragraph, our sincere apologies. Plainly speaking, the minimal level of respect that entitles opposing and unpopular viewpoints to be heard and defended was so blatantly denied to the Governor, that for us to self-righteously claim that same right when our own viewpoints and desires are up for debate, is to unabashedly profess our own monumental hypocrisy...

The undersigned don't claim to agree with all of Dukakis' policies. But the Governor is faced with certain constraints; the 500 million dollar state budget deficit is a FACT. Money to pay for programs must either come from somewhere, or some programs requiring money must be cut. Our observations tend to lead us to conclude that the latter choice is somewhat unpopular. Ergo, we could raise taxes. Who might volunteer to pay for these? The rich of course, right on...!!...Uh, who are the "rich"? The undersigned have tried sorely to come up with the solution to this critical question, but decided first to tackle the simpler ones, like "which comes first, the chicken or the egg?"...The point, friends, is that many of the simplistic answers so politely hurled much like rotten tomatoes at the Governor [figuratively, of course], don't address the problem, but merely represent the short-term interest of just one more group, namely us students.

We of this state are all confronted with hard times. We are all seeking some sort of half-way equitable means out of this mess. But out here in our concrete-gilded cages, some of us seem to resent the fact that our keeper must also be concerned with the rest of the menagerie.

We have the right to make our desires felt, as do other groups in this state. The Governor came out for the purpose of attempting to synthesize some sort of approach to the problem of keeping up the standards and opportunities of this University. He came in part for our responses, suggestions, and input. He failed, perhaps because he made the mistaken assumption that we were the mature adults that the Legislature declared us to be some short while ago. Perhaps they should have required basic civility as an additional requirement for admission to that exalted status, as well as merely being 18.

Friends, before we try your patience any further, we can only add that we enjoyed the show, and sincerely hope that further applications for position of gladiator of the Student Union Ballroom will be accepted.

J. M. van Tol
Caryn Blayer

Watching a replay of the meeting with Governor Dukakis last night, I was appalled. Here at last was UMass's voice opportunity, the students' opportunity to ask questions and voice opinions face to face with the man behind the budget cuts. We, the educated, the rational stood up with paper in hand, offering no alternatives, few valid questions and told the Governor, "he sucked", like a three-year old bantering names. Is this an example of the well educated, logical thinkers we are supposed to be?

I for one, and for the first time was ashamed to be a student at this university; ashamed that students could be so emotional, irrelevant, illogical and naive.

Well, we had our chance and "we showed 'em!" Didn't we??

Suzanne McCarthy
Muffy Trafton
Sara Moses

I was upset to hear so many questions showing so little sensitivity to the realities of scarce resources after the Governor's speech last night. If we are to give to each according to his need as the tone of the questions suggested, we all must pitch in and help stretch budgets further. I don't sense this awareness with vocal students. All I hear is "more, more, more" with no consideration as to the price.

Students whose departments are bearing more than their fair share of the brunt and students who need more financial help win my sympathy. I sense that these are few in number, when considering the wealth of student owned cars and expensive stereo systems on campus.

The few who do need more deserve everyone's support. To serve the interests of these people, we need to fight for equitable budget cuts. In order to facilitate these cuts, we need to select our administrators, faculty, students who don't belong here. It only seems fair to me that increased revenues come from a graduated tuition hike. From each according to his ability to pay is the philosophy behind such a move.

While in support of the principle behind a student union, I am alienated by many of the so called "demands" and uncompromising positions the student union takes. I fear that it would simply become another self-interest group.

Last, but not least, a few words for private colleges. People don't recognize that one of their roles is to select out the wealthy and make them pay more of the cost of their education. Many scholarships come from private funds. These colleges are essential to stretching a people's budget; without them higher education would require even more state funds. Why are we pointing the finger at them?

Curtain call

As the scene begins, a boy walks onto stage, a bit hassled by previous past experiences but determined to get into this scene in newer and better ways. He knows his mind and he knows his life so far but he doesn't know what to make of it or what it will make of him. He only knows that it's led him this far.

He begins perplexed and frustrated by this new awesome experience called college. And throughout the action of the scene, he's never sure what to expect and what to be fooled by at this magnificent manufacturer of human wisdom.

Sylvan days and nights prove tedious in the beginning and the energy pours into other sources. More wasted than not, the experience gained is still helpful in determining future directions and the search continues. There's a lot to be learned from new freedom and from those who share it.

Into the long summer flood of political power and disappointment, and the boy finds himself searching again for something that might never be.

And Fall's return brings the humanity experiment and other personal experiments and a more pensive look at it all. He finds himself on the brink a million times but he never seems to cross all the way over.

'There's a lot to be learned from new freedom and those who share it.'

Spring finds pages of his life sprawled about the floors in a frantic search to recapture academia. Experiments sometimes leave purpose aside until the very last minute becomes a way of life.

And then there's love. It doesn't happen all too often but enough to make itself known.

And the boy enjoys it all and forgets and lets the summer slide by till the fall chases it away and he's on the brink and out on the streets again.

He discovers what friends can be as he searches for someplace to bring it all back together.

Thoughts and pages dominate his action and his mind's typewriter works overtime and time again. He won't let it rest now.

And it's off to Oregon to play shuffleboard and learn from a legend. Cruisin' again down September road to find a few more reasons. But old statesmen never fade away. They just die, and leave things in Los Angeles. And the boy has to stop.

And he has to realize that he's reaching the end of it all and he's not even ready. He's not going to be prepared for the shit he'll get . . . out there.

He knows what he wants and he sees a break and he tries to work at a camp that's broke and he's not at all sure about what will happen when spring rolls around, closer and closer to the end of the scene . . . . And the time is now and he's still not sure of anything as he searches again.

'...old statesmen never fade away. They just die...'

Walking to the center of the stage, he looks at the audience and tells them he still doesn't know, and he tells them he's got to keep trying and he wonders what they'll think of it all.

Slowly, he scans the audience before turning and walking off stage.

Melancholy Mother's Day

Happy Mother's Day mothers of America. For one day in your life you are honored, cherished, and are brought breakfast in bed. Even though your children are ruining everything that you gave them life for it is your day.

Happy Mother's Day Welfare Mothers of Massachusetts. The Governor might take all able bodies persons between the ages of 18-40 off General Relief to encourage incentive for employment seeking. That means you'll have to get a job. And, if you do find one, you'll have to support a babysitter to take care of your children while you're out trying to make ends meet.

Happy Mother's Day mothers of Vietnam. Now that you've given your children away to save them from the Commies, who is going to grow up to rebuild your country? Who will you have to tell your histories to? And who will you have to take care of you when you grow old?

Happy Mother's Day mothers of students. Aren't you glad that you've scrimped and saved all these years to put your children through school so that they'd have a better chance of having the things that you never did? Wasn't it worth tightening the belts a little bit so that you now have a bunch of overeducated capitalists who can't even grow their own food, who wage wars all over the world to protect their corporate interests?

Happy Mother's Day mothers of men. The ones to whom you gave life do not recognize their sisters as their peers. The ones to whom you have life now turn against you in your basic rights of the pursuit of life and liberty and even in the control of your own body.

Happy Mother's Day Mother Nature. Your children ravage your beauty in the name of industry, hedonism and pride. You are the most neglected mother of all.

Happy Mother's Day future mothers of the world. For you have the most important decision to make. Can you in all good consciousness bear a child? Can you take care of its needs? If you can, then can you teach your child the basic respects of life?

Can you teach your child to love? I hope so. I hope so so that your children will not turn against their mothers as we have.

PETER PENNIE

At this point, the UMass budget cuts seem inevitable. Michael Dukakis wishes to have students believe that their grievances concerning the proposed budget cutbacks are irrational.

Giving examples of Massachusetts' large per capita expenditures, of state money for welfare and medicaid, the governor laid a guilt trip on the student unity movement for trying to merely maintain the present level of services at this university.

When describing the areas of state spending, Mr. Dukakis carefully excluded higher education, and with good reason, since Massachusetts' per capita expenditures for public higher education rank 49th in the country.

Dukakis justifies our low-ranking expenditures by speaking of other "comprehensive programs" implemented by his administration. But if increasing the monies for enlarging the Boston police force constitutes a "comprehensive program", this rationale tells us where his priorities lie. Refering to the budget, the Governor said, "There comes a point when you cannot maintain the same level with others when you are competing with them in the economic arena."

It would appear that Mr. Dukakis wishes to be applauded for putting higher education cutbacks at the end of his long list.

There is obvious reason for this. The legislators that make this decision do not have children supported by welfare. They are not unemployed.

They may not wish to see change in our regressive tax structure since it is this very tax structure that works for their benefit. But many of them do have children in state colleges and universities. Thus, we have another case of "conflicting interests" which serve to complicate the possibility of solving the problems that affect everyone.

Once again the same old game of setting off one interest group (i.e. welfare and elderly) against another (in this case, students) for a small piece of the fiscal pie was implemented in the hopes that the two groups would fight each other for what funding was available instead of realizing that they share common problems.

That this state is in a fiscal crisis is irrefutable. However time and time again, both during his speech and the question and answer period, the Governor refused to discuss the reasons for how we got where we are and who was responsible. To merely attribute the crisis to the previous administration is beggin the question of where and how the money was spent that brought us to our present situation. Not even the Governor would go so far as to blame the plight of this state on the education budget. Our state is not renowned nationally for its low tax rates. To put it simply, where did all the money go?

The Governor made no bones about where the money was going to come from in an attempt to solve these problems, welfare cuts, education cuts and gasoline and cigarette taxes. Somehow due to state laws the possibility of increasing corporate taxes or the implementation of a graduated income tax is out of the question until 1977. Cigarette and gasoline taxes have come to near realization in a period of less than three weeks. Regressive taxes are easier to pass than progressive systems because the general population has no one to speak for tax structure changes in the State House.

Above and beyond all of what Dukakis said, we have to realize that the buck has been passed back to the administration and they will eventually pass it on to the students. Clearly, our input through the suggested student conferences at the State House will have no real effect on the decisions Whitmore will make in the future. Students may wish to utilize this channel but we have to realize that without student unionization, we will have no real influence over those who make the budget decision. Without a legal entity for the consolidation of student power, we will continue to be at the mercy of Beacon Hill, and Whitmore, and we know where that keeps us.

Graduate students sought to work in Advocate program helping youth

The Advocate Program is looking for a few good persons. The Advocate program is a residential program designed to provide an alternative placement to institutional care for adolescent youth adjudicated 'deliquent' by placing them with advocates or advocate families within the community.

Typically, these young people have a history of 'delinquent behavior' breaking and entering, auto theft, larceny and drug-related charges. Most of the youth are from low-income homes, broken families, or of parents who have a problem with alcoholism.

In bringing a 'delinquent' youth into the home the advocate is asked to make a serious commitment. Typically, the youth will act out and demand attention requiring the resourcefulness, understanding and sensitivity of the advocate. It is a difficult but rewarding challenge to handle troubled youth and provide a stable environment on a long term basis.

For this commitment, participating advocates will receive a weekly income of approximately $100; divided into a 'youth stipend', covering the youth's living expenses and paid every two weeks and an 'advocate stipend', for services rendered in behalf of the youth, paid weekly. Assistantships are available for university graduate students who enroll in the program at the beginning of the semester in the amount of $3,500; academic credits may also be negotiated.

If you are interested and would like to find out more about the Advocate Program, please come in: Room 375 Hills South, or phone 545-3622; 3263.

Horseback riding as therapy

Horseback riding is being used internationally as a highly successful method of physical therapy. Improvement of muscular tone and coordination goes hand in hand with the enjoyment of working with animals and finding refreshment in the natural environment. The current instructive staff of the Belchertown State School riding class for the physically handicapped wish to expand their program to the community.

Although facilities are not yet decided upon, officials hope that a riding program for local residents with physical disabilities will be established next year. Instruction would be given on a one-to-one basis for all age groups, with cost held to a minimum. The only requirement is that the individual have sitting balance. If interested call the handicapped affairs office at UMass (545-0892), Lisa Donaldson (665-4144), or Candy Kelly (323-4047).

FS&N 140 corrections

Food Science & Nutrition course 140 titled: Man & Nutrition will satisfy an (E) core requirement next semester.

Prof. Berts' FS&N 140 course this year will have its last exam on May 15, not May 23 as listed in the final examination schedule.

★ Fiscal autonomy

"Our first priority is to maintain the integrity of the Amherst campus as a major public university," he said.

Students here will also review the budget and make specific recommendations as to where cuts should be made. Student leaders will take their recommendations to the Governor for a hearing next week.

Gulko said that to maintain its integrity the University needs to be "balanced" and therefore, no particular area will suffer excessively from cutbacks.

Economic coordinator of the Student Organizing Project (SOP) John Fischer said yesterday, "I think to a large extent we seem to be suceeding in holding back on human service cuts. All things considered, Whitmore will take the money from where they can get it. If an existing program or department at the University is unable to defend itself, then it will lose its money."

According to Fischer, figures presented by the Student Action Committee (SAC) indicated a 50 per cent cut in financial aid and 33 per cent cut in teacher assistants (TAs) were attained from "options that were discussed by the administration."

The University Budget Document is available for public inspection in the Archives section of the main library. It shows that financial aid, $1,550,000 worth in fiscal 1975, is not incorporated in the total UMass request from the state for operation and maintenance of the three campuses.

Both the state and federal governments supply funds for financial aid, and according to Richard Dent, director of financial aid, federal appropriations will increase next year.

Bash plans

The annual Collegian end-of-semester party for all staff and friends will be held Saturday at a private home in Hadley.

The party will begin about 8 p.m. Some refreshments will be provided but not enough to cover the expected attendance.

Staffers who need directions and other information should read yellow fact sheets posted in the Collegian offices.

TOC holds elections tonite

The Top of the Campus Club, the largest club on campus, is holding elections tonight at 6:00 p.m. in Room 904 Campus Center.

All officers are up for re-election and all students holding TOC cards are eligible to vote. Sidney Myers, UMass attorney, is the outgoing president. Myers announced earlier that he will not seek the presidency for another term.

The TOC club holds the liquor license for both the TOC and the Bluewall.

English undergrads to organize

There are decisions being made about the future direction of the English Department which willl affect your education here at UMass. As undergraduates, we can organize to present an intelligent, coherent, and responsible statement of our views on various departmental and administrative decisions. Futhermore, if organized, we can elect voting representatives to participating positions on English Department committees.

At our third organizational meeting, we will discuss:

—Our final course of action with regard to the dismissal of two Assistant Professors recommended for tenure by the English department.

—Election of students to voting positions on the following faculty committees:

English Department Meeting; Undergraduate Studies Committee; and Long Range Planning Committee

—The formation of a newsletter to be circulated among undergraduates, informing them of developments within the department, and possibly containing some creative material as well.

If you are at all interested in any of these activities, or would like a voice in who is representing you in the department, PLEASE come to the meeting: 7:30 p.m. tonight in Campus Center 171-173.

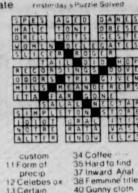
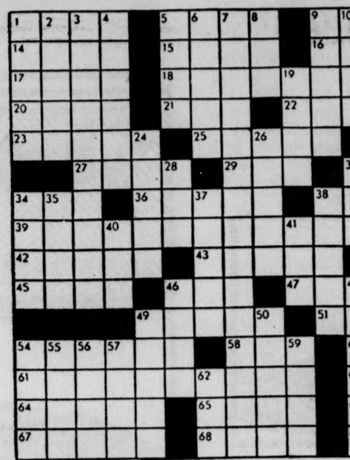
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved





Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

Wednesday, May 7 — Born today, you are not a highly competitive person. In fact, you work with a better will and with better results when you do not feel the pressure of competition. On the other hand, you are ambitious and quite determined to succeed according to both financial and critical standards. This being so, it is absolutely essential that you learn to produce under pressure, that you learn to work at your greatest capability regardless of the fact that others may be after the same goal or prize you're after.

You are a spirited individual who is at his best in the company of others. You have a genuine gift for making others happy and because of this may find that a great deal of your time is taken up by those who bring you their problems to solve. It is not, however, at problem solving that you shine; rather, it is at making others realize their good fortune even in the midst of ill, in enabling them to see their problems on a relative rather than an absolute standard.

You are somewhat prone to believing that all clouds have silver linings if only one will look. Thus, you are inclined to accept difficulties with an optimism that at times prevents you from doing what might be done to help the situation. You would do well to develop the habit of delving deeper into difficulties; once you learn to find the source of trouble, there will be less of it.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

* * *

Thursday, May 8

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — What you thought to be a poor investment may turn out to have been an exceedingly wise move. Don't allow another's pessimism to depress you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Don't make threats you have neither the intent nor the means of carrying out. You will only appear foolish to others if you do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — There may be so many opportunities for gain today that you will allow all of them to pass you by as you attempt to make up your mind about them!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — It would be easy for you to bite off more than you can chew today. In feeling good about yourself, you may act through overconfidence rather than wisdom.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Consider well a matter of property. You could do yourself out of a considerable profit if you are too quick to accept an initial offer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take the time to go over finances carefully. If you are not adequately insured, you may be in for a rude awakening. Listen to a word of wisdom.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you are insistent upon having things your own way today, you may be able to provide your own breaks of the game. Help another with a burden.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you give enough thought to what you are doing and enough loyalty to an old cause, you should be able to carry out duties well.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you can make yourself free of another's influence, you will hardly be able to handle your own affairs. You may have to fight a battle of wits today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Be prepared to speak up in behalf of your own and others' rights today. Don't hesitate to express your views on sensitive subjects.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make no promises that would make your future time less than your own. You are not yet firmly enough committed to a goal to know how much time you need.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — The questions at hand may prove more difficult to answer than you had expected. Don't be too proud to say you don't know.

Students can earn 3 summer credits in 3 week session

This summer students can earn three credits in three weeks and still have time to persue other summer activities. The Division of Continuing Education at UMass is offering Summer I, a comprehensive, three week, academic program scheduled to take place from June 2 through June 20.

Summer I offerings include: modern languages, mathematics, entomology, communication skills, technical writing, statistics, several education courses, and many more three-credit classes. Most courses are scheduled for the mornings from 9 to noon, with selected offerings in the afternoon. Classes are intended to be smaller than those held during the regular semesters. All courses carry UMass credit which is transferable to most other institutions.

Summer I is designed for undergraduates already enrolled in school, as well as for other special groups who find it difficult to attend the regular summer session because of commitments to teach, travel or work. Parents with children in school and teachers will find Summer I well timed to fit into their summer schedule.

Newly graduated high school students who plan to attend college in the fall, or who have not yet decided to attend, could use Summer I as a head start in college. Students anticipating a heavy fall schedule can lighten their expected course load by enrolling in Summer I.

Dormitory and Food Services are available to students at an optional extra cost. For further information on Summer I, or any other summer programs, contact the Division of Continuing Education, Hills House North, or telephone 5-0905.

Greenfields Free

The Yiddish film, Greenfields, with English subtitles, will be screened tonight at 8 in Herter 227. The film, which tells a charming and delightful story of life in the shtetl is open to all, free of charge.

Alliance to discuss oppression

There will be a meeting of the Western Massachusetts Alliance against Racist and Political Repression tonight at 5:30 in room 102 of the Campus Center. The meeting has been called to discuss plans for the summer and next fall. Discussion will center around cases of oppression.

Irish poet performs here tonight

"In Dublin's Quare City," a dramatic one-man presentation written and performed by Irish poet Basil Payne, will be given tonight at 8 p.m., in Bartlett Auditorium.

A mosaic of Dublin life in all its vitality from the times of Sean O'Casey and James Joyce to the present, this dramatic collage was first presented at the Abbey-Peacock Theatre, Dublin, in September 1973. It has since been given at Lincoln Center and many university theatres and cultural centers in the United States and Canada.

Favorable reviews describe a "fascinating program, ending with a lament for the Dublin that has gone, and for the mess that the city has now become."

Mr. Payne celebrates freshness as Dublin's characteristic quality. Never unaware of poverty or of suffering, yet decrying the unthinking abandonment of a tradition of neighborliness, this peripatetic program will share an affection of the qualities, transient or permanent of a unique city." So the Evening Herald and the Irish Times reported.

A third generation Dubliner, Payne is the author of four books of poetry, including his latest Another Kind of Optimism (1974), and twice winner of a Guinness-Poetry Prize at the Cheltenham Festival. He has worked with television, radio and film in Canada, the U.S.A. and Ireland. For the past year Artist in Residence at Glassboro State College, New Jersey, he will be a Visiting Professor in Irish literature at the University of California at Davis during 1976.

Parking notes

Applications for renewal or change in present lot assignment must be turned into the Parking Office, Rm. 1, Munson Hall, by May 16, 1975.

If you have not received a renewal form by campus mail or wish to apply for a change in present lot assignment come into the parking office as soon as possible.

The registration fee must be paid with the application form: Renewal registration fee is $3.00, Change registration fee is $5.00.

All applications received after May 16 will be treated as new and will be processed after renewal and change lot assignments have been made.

If you have any questions please call 5-0065.

Water polo ends; McCafferty leaving

By DEBBY HOXSIE

A woman's tournament at UMass and a men's tournament at Harvard last weekend marked the end of the 1974-1975 water polo season and the last season for California-bound coach Bill McCafferty.

The UMass women, in two sparkling performances against Radcliff and Northeastern, wound up champs of the home tournament on Saturday. In a hard played match, the UMass women put together their best offensive and defensive strategies of the year against Radcliff. The game was marked by hard, fast swimming, double-teaming Radcliff's star Kim Cole, and quick shooting by UMass scorers. Jane Welzel placed herself perfectly for four strong goals, with Kathy MacDonald, Jeannie Abrahamson, Penny Noyes and Deb Hoxsie each scoring one. In the last minutes of play UMass effectively stalled the ball to hold onto a well-deserved 7-6 victory.

In the second game UMass trounced Northeastern 14-6. Everyone on the team saw some action in the pool, and scoring was spread out among nine players. Abrahamson scored three, Carol Leahy two, MacDonald two, Noyes two, Hoxsie one, Welzel one, Janet McGrath one, Polly MacLean one, and Louise Fasser one.

In an anticlimactic tournament in Boston Saturday and Sunday, the men's team came up with a disappointing 0-4 record. On Saturday, without the coaching of McCafferty, who stayed at UMass to coach the women, and agains the tough competition of the New York Athletic Club, the Philadelphia Athletic Club, and the Harvard-MIT "A" squad, UMass didn't fare as well as they had hoped. Sunday's match against Northeastern was marred by several injuries to UMass players and that game, too, ended in defeat.

UMass players expressed positive feelings about the experience of playing higher level competition demonstrated by NYAC and PYAC. The disappointment of the weekend was a tough way to end their season, but most of the players agreed that it couldn't take away from the over-all success of the year and their 21-11 record. The fact that they beat Yale this spring gives them high aspirations for next season, which includes the team's admittance into the Division I water polo league in New England.

At an end-of-season banquet hosted by coach McCafferty this week, both the men's and women's teams voted for next year's captians, and presented departing McCafferty with a gold watch for all his help and non-salaried coaching over the past years at UMass. Co-captains elected by the women were Jane Welzel and Debby Hoxsie. Henry MacLean was voted captain for the men. McCafferty appointed graduate student Jon Nordby and senior Kevin McGinn to take over his coaching duties next year.

Riders finish first

By PAUL LOGUE

The UMass riding team captured first place in the Intercollegiate National Championships this past Sunday at Bennett College in Milbrook, N.Y.

Two UMass riders took top honors in their class competition. Janice Schreurs is the National Open Horsemanship champion and Jennifer Cracknell is the National Maiden Horsemanship champion.

"The team has been vying for the coveted Cartier Cup for seven years, and we finally brought it home," said the coach, Linda Jaskiel-Hamilton.

St. Lawrence University of Canton, N.Y. took second place in the event as the UMass riders overshadowed St. Lawrence by three points to capture the crown.

"It was an exciting day for us all since we have all worked so hard and so long to win," Jaskiel-Hamilton explained.

Riders are faced with a double wammy when competing in away events. They must ride strange horses and still be judged on their style and performance. The UMass riders showed their dexterity in these two categories to win it all.

The National champion is determined by the total points of the overall season, including the Regional championships which UMass won last weekend.

Baseball trivia

Throughout the long history of organized baseball there have been a number of colorful umpires, but none are as unique and legendary as the immortal Bellows Twins. Both Slick and Dick Bellows were hired for the amazing salary of $10,000 each for the 1902 season. What made the Bellows Twins so unique was the fact that they were two-headed Siamese twins and could accurately call both balls and strikes. Slick managed to call all balls, pop-ups, and groundouts while Dick usually called all strikes, foulouts, and foul balls.

Everything went fine during that legendary 1902 season until that bleak Sunday afternoon in Brooklyn, when after a controversial called strike three, the manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, "Krafty Koogan" attacked both Slick and Dick with a two-headed cane, knocking them unconscious.

After recovering from the beating the Bellows Twins found that all four of their eyes had suffered severe impaired vision and that their umpiring days were over.

Out of respect for the fallen umpires the Commissioner of baseball, Ford Frick, ordered that the home team in each major league city play two games each and every Sunday in their honor and call them Double-Headers.

Crew impressive but loses to NU

By BOB NORTON

The UMass men's crew came back from Boston Sunday with their best performance to date and at the same time one of their most frustrating losses. The Northeastern Huskies outlasted the varsity eight by 6.8 seconds while finishing the smooth 2000 meter course in 6:10.6.

Despite the loss to one of the nation's top crews, coach Bill Mahoney had much praise for his oarsmen. "We finally got some execution. I was really pleased with the way the guys responded. I think we gave Northeastern one of toughest races they've had all year."

In asking Mahoney about the loss, he went beyond saying it was a moral victory. "We really came to a point today. The potential that I was looking for came to the surface. We're quickly approaching the level I was hoping for before heading to the Dad Vail. It came just at the right time."

Mahoney had individual commendation for John Mynihan for making a shift to the varsity eight and Rich Berg, a sophomore coxwain, whose performance in his first varsity competition was exceptional. "They both did a fine job," Mahoney noted.

Senior co-capt. Bill Fitzpatrick didn't find much consolation in the defeat. "There was no way we should have lost. It's frustrating when you know you've pulled your hardest and you don't produce a win. There was a noticeable improvement but it was a very emotional loss for me."

The J.V.'s effort was equally impressive although they finished with a time of 6:28.5 to Northeastern's 6:10.6 The race was started twice since the wash from a motorboat abruptly halted the first attempt at about the 350 meter mark. In both the J.V. and varsity races, a launch's wake disrupted the set up.

The freshman eight encountered one of the finest crews they've faced in losing a tough one by 12.6 seconds and three lengths. Freshman coach, Mark Casey, felt that "the start improved, but I'll have to make some adjustments in the rigging (position of riggers) to create a longer stroke; we were too short today."

The third varsity four sunk their shell in Saturday's practice, then dried out to come back for a length and a half victory and the only one for UMass in the regatta.

The varsity pair event saw a freshman duo slighted by a five second margin. Later the third freshman four fell to two Northeastern fours by three lengths.

In summing up the regatta, Mahoney said "we rowed well, we raced well, we came on strong for a fine showing against a fine crew."

No-hitter for Fletcher as Softballers win,11-1

By GREG LEVINS

The UMass Minutewomen, cruising on the arm of freshwomen hurler Lu Ann Fletcher, mauled Worcester State 11-1 yesterday afternoon at Nope field.

Fletcher was untouchable on the mound, going the distance without allowing a single hit. After being nicked for an unearned run in the first, Fletcher breezed the rest of the way. Fletcher struck out 14 batters, at least one in every inning, and whiffed the side in order in the second.

She got plenty of support at the plate as the Minutewomen put at least one run on the board in every inning.

UMass scored three runs in the second inning to break a 1-1 tie. Lynn Barry singled home Chris Basile with the first run of the inning, and later scored on a throwing error. Janet Guilfoyle also came home on an error after being walked.

In the third UMass pushed across two more runs, courtesy of some poor Worcester State fielding.

The fourth inning brought four more Minutewomen markers due largely to the hitting of Karen Dolphin and Lynn Barry. After the bases were walked full, Dolphin greeted a new Worcester pitcher with a beautifully placed squeeze bunt scoring Fletcher. Following a wild pitch that scored Sandy Lunt, Barry laced a single to left that brought Basile in with the eighth UMass run. The inning's final run came when Terri Pudlo was hit by a pitch with the bases full.

The Minutewomen scored single runs in each of the final two frames to complete the scoring.

Today the Minutewomen will journey to neighboring Smith College for a J.V. tilt beginning at 3:00.

Sox clip Cleveland

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Bill Lee scattered six hits and Bob Montgomery singled in two runs Tuesday night to spark the Boston Red Sox to a 4-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Lee, who went the distance 16 times last season while posting a 17-15 mark, struck out two and walked two. He lost his shutout bid in the sixth inning when George Hendrick smacked his fourth homer of the season.

It was the 28-year old lefthanders' third victory and third complete game in six decisions.

The Red Sox raced to their fourth straight win by scoring twice off Cleveland starter and loser Dick Bosman in the second inning on Montgomery's hit following singles by Jim Rice, Rico Petrocelli and an error by Jack Brohamer.

Boston chased Bosman in the third when rookie Fred Lynn, hitting at a .365 clip, doubled home Rick Burleson and scored on Rice's single.

Gorillas oppose tough Brown

By BEN CASWELL

With the New England championship and national prominence at stake, the UMass lacrosse team will take on the Bruins of Brown University in Providence this afternoon (WMUA, 2:55).

At the present time Brown is rated number one in New England and UMass is number two. Nationally, Brown is ranked 11th and Garber's Gorillas (UMass) are 14th.

In competition between these two schools Brown leads the series having beaten UMass nine times and losing only four. There has been one tie.

Last season, in a win that made the Gorillas the New England champions, the UMass stickers edged Brown 10-9 in the final seconds of the game behind Boyden.

Two years ago, in the rain and mud at Providence, Brown crushed UMass 16-3, that win making them the New England champions.

Brown's record this season is a misleading 5-5. Their losses have been to some of the top teams in the nation. (John Hopkins-No. 1, Cornell-No. 2, Maryland-No. 5, Penn-No. 7, and Princeton- No. 8)

"Brown dropped games to Princeton (15-10) and Penn (12-10) last week and that could affect them one of two ways," said head UMass lacrosse coach Dick Garber. "They (Brown) may be flat after two severe setbacks," said Garber, "or they may really be up to come back in a strong way. One thing we do know though, is that regardless of their losses, they are a really good team."

On the other hand Garber's Gorillas are comming off a 26-12 trouncing of New Hampshire, the third-rated team in New England. The Gorillas have also won their last seven games after losing their first two of the season to Cornell and Hofstra.

Brown's particular strength is at midfield where the team has quick moves and quick sticks. Bob MacLeod and Bob Mueller lead the midfielders, while Dave Wasserman is another stand-out who played very well in last season's UMass-Brown game.

Bob Merrick, chairman of the lacrosse all-American selection committee said, according to coach Garber, that Brown has the best midfielders he's seen.

Attackman Ken Swerdloff is a small and quick potential scorer that the Gorillas, especially Bill Blausten, who will cover him one on one, will have to watch.

"Brown plays three midfield units," said UMass assistant lacrosse coach and previous Gorilla star goaltender John "O.J." Rutledge. "But two-thirds of the time in their offensive zone they bring in their first midfield. For us, everybody has come alive at midfield and all three units can play against anyone," said Rutledge.

SCOOP SHOTS — Penalties, or the lack of them will be a key in the game ... throw the ball and move will be the UMass theme for the day. Next game at M.I.T. on Saturday.

Baseballers face Lord Jeffs; struggle to gain respectability

By BILL DOYLE

Having been eliminated from the Yankee Conference race and with no hope of reaching the magic five hundred percentage mark, the only goal remaining for the UMass varsity baseball squad is to attain respectability.

"Respectability and winning our last five games," is the way coach Dick Bergquist put it. By sweeping their remaining five games, the Minutemen would finish with a somewhat respectable 14-15 slate.

UMass will attempt to begin that sweep by pitching Jeff Reardon against Amherst's Lord Jeffs at Amherst this afternoon at 3:00.

Amherst edged AIC yesterday, 4-3, so the Lord Jeffs are 9-8 on the year. Righthander Paul Vater, Amherst's ace, will hurl for the Jeffs today against the Minutemen.

The Amherst hitting attack is led by shortstop Mark Woodbury, who had five homers at last look and who Bergquist rates as a pro prospect, and Paul Horan, the team's centerfielder. Both made All-New England College Division last year.

Coach Bergquist said that he will disdain experimenting in the remaining five games.

"I want to win these games," he said. "I can experiment next fall. Personally, I'd like even more to beat Amherst because I know their coach really well and I have to live so close to him all year."

The only possible changes for today's game would be the switching of shortstop Jim Cullen to third base and of third baseman Jerry Mondalto to short. They switched positions for a few innings against Fairfield on Monday and Bergquist said he liked what he saw of Mondalto.

"Jerry has a major league arm," he explained, "and he can field grounders well, too. He has only booted one all year."

The exact line-up won't be decided until game time, Bergquist said, pending on the team's many injuries. Pete Backstrom, who returned to action over the weekend but is still running only 60 per cent according to Bergquist because of a hamstring pull, may play leftfield or by DH. John Seed could also see some action as DH if his groin pull improves.

Catcher Jim Black is still hampered by his hamstring pull and John Healy came back from a sore shoulder just in time to take Seed's place at first base.

Bergquist said that he has never had a team that experienced so many leg injuries.

"I've tried to think if I've worked my players wrong in practice," he said. "After Rich Kelly sprained his ankle running sprints, the team kiddingly suggested that we have a supervised rest instead of practice."

CHANGE-UPS: Mondalto was also cited by Bergquist for being the team's best all-around performer. He is hitting .289 ("a strong .289," Bergquist said) with three homers, five triples, two doubles, and six for six in stolen bases.

Bergquist also said that John Seed, who is leading the team with a .345 batting average, is UMass' most consistent hitter.

Despite its 9-15 record, UMass leads its opponents in team batting average, ERA, fielding average, stolen bases, double plays, and homers.

"But the stats don't account for dropped pop flies," Bergquist said, referring to one of the team's mental errors that have cost the Minutemen ballgames.

Cindermen ready for Rams

By SCOTT HAYES

Track coach Ken O'Brien would like nothing better than two straight victories before his team enters the New England championships to defend its title. The UMass trackmen can take the first step toward that achievement, today at 3:00 p.m. when Rhode Island visits the Lewleyn Derby Track.

Having finished second in the Yankee Conference championships, the tracksters now have two consecutive home meets to prepare for the New Englands, which they won in 1974.

UMass brings a 2-1 record into the meet, which may be more of an individual challenge than a team battle. The Rams have a fine pole vaulting corps, some respectable performers in the throwing events and hurdles, but the winless URI team is not a strong one. The Rams were defeated by Brown and Northeastern earlier in the season and are 0-2.

Kerry McKay is an outstanding individual competitor for Rhody. McKay was a double victor in the Yankee Conference meet, winning the 100 and 200-yard dashes.

The Rams placed third in the conference championships with 39 points while the Minutemen amassed 74 points.

With the exception of Toney Pendleton, the UMass squad is healthy. Pendleton, who pulled a hamstring muscle at the conference meet, might be back by the New Englands. O'Brien noted that he's going with the regular team, but the distancemen who ran in the YanCon's will be given a rest.

The consistent jumping corps of Bob and Ken Adamson along with Pete Ryan, Joe Martens, and Rusty Kendall may do more than its share of scoring.

The throwing events will include UMass competitors John Willis, George Ennis, Tom Lonergan, Steve Mason, Todd Holt, Jim Shea, Jim Golonka, Kevin Hall and Bob O'Neil.

Eric Gudmand (if he's recovered from an injury and ready to vault), Jay Grammolini and Ted Power will need exceptional performances if they are to place against URI's strong pole vaulters.

The hurdlers, including YanCon 440-intermediate champ Curt Stegerwald, may be involved in a tight battle for places with their opponents. Pete Famulari, Alan Suprenant, Jeff Browne, Skip Cobb and Chris Nelson will also see action in the two hurdle events.

Look for the not-so-well-known names in the distances. Although Bobby Neil, Tom Wolff, Matt Mangan, Cliff Staples, Rolf Meyer, Pete Bloom and Frank Carroll don't have the running experience of a Randy Thomas or Bill Gillin, they can't be counted out in the mile and two-mile.

Tri-captain Steve Crimmin leads a group of middle-distancemen that includes Jim Hunt, Steve Ridge, Mike Hansen, Mike Gillen, John Richards, Mark Healy, Dave Lipinski and Dan Christo.

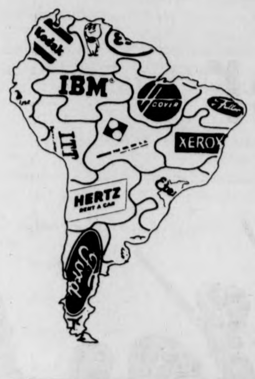
The dashmen will be without speedster Pendleton, but Martens, Cobb, Larry Whitfield, Tom Beland and Dave Hinds are capable of filling the gap.

The trackers host a strong Northeastern team on Saturday to end their dual-meet portion of the season.

Una Vision Historica

America Latina y El Imperialismo

Rome Torres



§El Llamado "subdesarrollo" económico y político de los pueblos de América Latina es el resultado del proceso de expansión política y económica de Europa y de Estados Unidos.

§El "subdesarrollo" de American Latina no es una condición de mero retraso frente a los países desarrollandos, ni el producto de su incapacidad o Lentitud en adoptar Los patrones de modernización de las sociedades avanzadas. El "subdesarrollo" de América Latina, así como de los demás países del Tercer Mundo, es más bien el resultado de expansión mundial del capitalismo mercantil, a partir del siglo XV y, mas tarde, del capitalismo industrial desde el siglo XIX.

Este proceso de expansión ha configurado una estructura mundial colonial e imperialista que ha favorecido el desarrollo de los centros de hegemonía europea y norteamericana, en detrimento del desarrollo de nuestros países.

Mediante este proceso, las clases dominantes de los centros hegemonicos, en alianza con las clases dominantes de las sociedades Latinoamericanas, han super-ecplotado nuestros recursos humanos y naturales y se han apropiado de una parte sustanial de nuestras requezas.

Las formas de dominación y explotación de nuestros pueblos han evolucionado según se ha desarrollado el sistema capitalista en los centros hegemónicos y, según ha penetrado éste en los países dominados, En América Latina se pueden distinguir a grandes rasgos cuatro etapas, que han jado profundas huellas en su actual situactión de dependencia y subdesarrollo Estas son:

Dominación Colonial Española y Portuguesa.; Esta dominación tuvo su base en la producción de metales preciosos y de mercancías exóticas que contribuyeron, en un principio, a las acumulación de capitales en los países europeos y, de esta manera, al crecimiento de una clase capitalista bancaria y comercial. Las relaciones económicas se caracterizaron por un control mercantilista de las colonias, por la producción monocultiva de regiones completas, por la explotación latifundista de la tierra y por formas serviles y esclavistas de explotación de poblaciones indígenas y africanas.

2 — Independencia Formal y Dominio Económico Inglés.

A lo largo del periodo anterior, los grupos productores y exportadones de materias primas se fuenon fortaleciendo gracias, en gran medida, al creciente comercio con Inglaterra, las cual a su vez, fue dominando progresivamente el comercio de las colonias españolas y portuguesas, al tiempo en que emergía como la primera metrópolis, capitalista industrial. Los grupos mineros y agro-exportadores, con el apoyo de los inglese y en un momento en que las guerras napoleónicas debilitan el control colonial iberico, movilizan a la mayor parte de los pueblos latinoamericanos en la búsqueda de su independencia. Sin embargo, al imponerse estos grupos en las guerras civiles que siguen a la independencia, sobre etros sectones de tendencia más nacionalista, no tardan en gravitar en torno al nuevo centro hegemónico: — Inglaterra.

Con todo, la dominación hasta fines del siglo XIX se organízo de tal manera, que permitión el fortalecimiento de los grupos exportadores de materias primas. El dominio económico se daba más

Cuba sponsors case

Puerto Rico at the U.N.

Letter dated 17 August 1971 from the Permanent Representative of Cuba to the United Nations Addressed to the Secretary General

11. The Present Situation.

13. Since 1898, the Government in Washington has done everything in its power to crush the aspirations of the Puerto Rican people for independence and to make the island a part of the United States. Its efforts have resulted in total failure and the struggle of the Puerto Rican people has become irrepressible, forcing the colonial Government to resort to all kinds of maneuvers to silence internal opposition and international condemnation of the oppression of Puerto Rico.

14. Today, United States colonial rule over all aspects of Puerto Rican life is absolute. Puerto Rico is under the Legislative, judicial and executive control of the United States. The United States Government has exclusive jurisdiction over all questions of citizenship, foreign affairs, defense, immigration and emigration, foreign trade, currency, postal service, radio and television, air and maritime transport. Decisions of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico can be overturned by the federal courts of the United States. All the laws adopted by the congress of the United States automatically apply in Puerto Rico.

15. The United States exercises absolute control over the economy of Puerto Rico. American investments in Puerto Rico amount to $1,000 million and, even according to colonial propaganda, yield profits each year amounting on the average to 30 per cent of the capital invested. American investments are exempt from all taxes, corporation or personal taxes for a period ranging from 12 to 17 years. In that way, Puerto Rico has been converted into a privileged preserve for United States monopolies, which use it as a source of cheap labor and exploit the national economy without even being subject to the rules and restrictions in force in the metropolitan country. For example, the average wage of a Puerto Rican worker is equivalent to one-third of what an American worker earns and the average income of the inhabitants of the island is half of what is earned by the citizens of the State of Mississippi, the poorest state in the United States. On the other hand, the United States has a monopoly over Puerto Rican trade, forcing Puerto Rico to depend entirely on the United States market and to carry all goods imported from the United States in ships of the United States merchant fleet, which has a monopoly over the island's shipping. The result is that the average prices of goods and basic necessities are 25 per cent higher than in New York or other American cities.

16. The effects of this situation on the living conditions of the people are easy to imagine. According to official statistics, Puerto Rico has 100,000 unemployed, that is, 14.3 per cent of the labor force. One-third of the population has been forced to emigrate to the metropolitan territory of the United States where they are subject to harassment and discrimination, reduced to accepting the hardest and least well-paid jobs, crowded together in ghettos of the big American cities.

17. The same statistics indicate that 81.9 per cent of the population of Puerto Rico earns less than $3,000 a year. In an effort to mitigate the effects of the poverty conditions imposed on most of the population of Puerto Rico, the colonial regime has established the so-called system of "maintenance," which consists of the distribution of United States farm surpluses to needy families. On 9 September 1963, a pro-American newspaper published in San Juan, El Mundo, reported on the first page: "850,000 people are living on maintenance", that is, approximately 35 per cent of the population of Puerto Rico.

18. The super-exploitation of Puerto Rico by the United States may be summed up in the following statement by Josue de Castro: "Thus, United States policy was one of protectionism for the benefit of an insignificant minority at the expense of the majority of the indigenous population, who were forced to make the heavest sacrifices." (Josue de Castro, The Geopolitics of Hunger, Cuban edition, p. 139).

19. One of the most brutal aspects of United States colonial rule in Puerto Rico is the military aspect. Thirteen per cent of the best arable on the island is occupied by a vast network of military bases, including bases with nuclear weapons, which have transformed Puerto Rico into an enormous military arsenal and constitute a permanent threat to the peace and security of its population while at the same time ensuring military occupation as a means of strengthening colonial control over the territory. United States military activity also encompasses the island group of Vieques and Culebra, which are integral parts of Puerto Rican territory. World

Se hace necesario en estos momentos de crisis, plantear la problematica con la cual nos estamos enfrentando, como grupo en potencia, en este centro formador de conciencia burguesa.

Para realizar un análisis que sirva de andamiaje estructural para la construción del edificio de responsabilidad que nos hemos propuesto contruir, se hace necesario -aún cuando ello parexca contraproducente especialmente, para la vanguardia de nuestra organización-, abordar el tema, partiendo de los materiales desponsible y del terreno que poseemos para dicha construcción, y aplicarlos luego, a nuestra realidad socio-económica y cúltural.

El edificio a que nos referimos no es otro, que la organización "Ahora" y los materiales que la componen, sus miembors y afiliados. "Ahora" nos presenta en su composición, un fenómeno espontáneo que nada tiene que ver con un nivel de conciencia politica fundamentada sobre una base ideológica revolucionaria, que le convierta, en una organización verdaderamente progresista, y por lo tanto, en protagonista de la tranformación de la clase obrera-estudiantil, a través de una metodología marxista y a una interpretación histórica-científica de nuestra realidad.

No, no es cierto que "Ahora" sea en el plano político, un órgano que responda al objetivo de la lucha de masas sino que se ha desarrollado, como consecuencia de las medidas reformistas de un sistema que busca más que frenar el crecimiento científico-cúltural de las minorias puertorri-queñas-

The Dominican Republic Ten Years Later

Historical background

The Dominican Republic and Haiti share the island of Hispaniola which in 1492 was the site of the first Spanish settlement in the Western hemisphere. The Indians on the island, which they called Quisqueya, were then either enslaved or exterminated, but not without a vigorous and prolonged resistance.

The battle for Dominican independence against Spanish, Haitian and then United States domination has kept the country in turmoil for over 150 years. In their attempt to control the Dominican economy foreign powers have employed bribery, intrigue, assassination and military intervention. Each time they have been met with strong resistance by the Domincan people. Only those who have traded their country's sovereignty and development for their own personal enrichment have welcomed foreign domination.

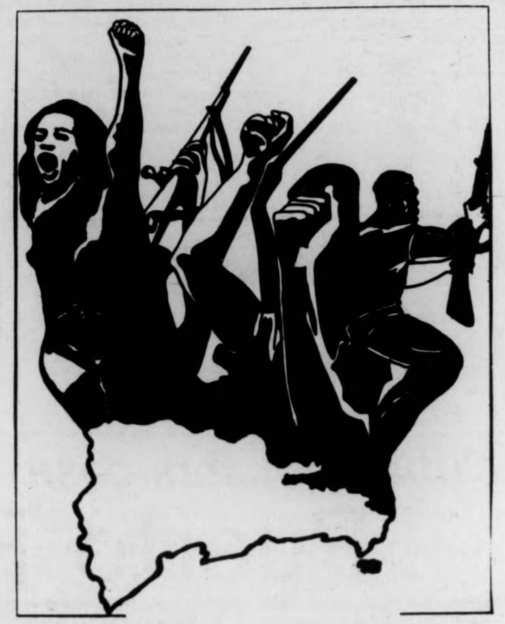
United States' efforts to dominate the country stretch back to the early 1880's. By 1916 these ambitions led to direct U.S. military intervention and the imposition of an occupation government. In the eastern provinces, Dominicans fought a guerrilla war against the U.S. Marines who were carrying out a "disarmament and pacification" program. In some towns the anniversary of the 1924 Marine departure is still celebrated as a holiday.

The U.S. occupation forces left behind a reorganized Dominican military obedient to foreign orders. In 1930 Rafael Trujillo, an officer close to the U.S. forces, seized power. For the next 31 years he ruled the country, terrorizing the people and looting the national wealth. At first Trujillo followed U.S. dictates and played the role of the obedient servant. But near the end, his power and greed began to encroach on U.S. interests. Together with members of the Dominican oligarchy and military, the CIA organized Trujillo's assassination in 1961.

The popular reformist movement which Trujillo so brutally repressed easily won the 1962 election. When he came to power in 1963 Juan Bosch, the leader of this movement, attempted to limit foreign influence and institute economic and social advances. He was unable, however, to touch the powerful Dominican military apparatus that remained close to the Pentagon. Within nine months, the generals organized a coup that ousted Bosch and his followers from the government. Revolutionary groups responded by launching a guerrilla war in the mountains to defeat the military, but they were quickly repressed.

Corruption among high military officers grew along with the increasing U.S. presence. Discontent with this corruption led some younger officers to organize a counter-coup in alliance with the popular parties. On April 24, 1965, their attempt to restore the legally elected Bosch government led to open fighting between the reactionary and popular military factions.

Four days later, the United States government landed an invasion force "to protect American lives." The popular movement was on the verge of victory when the U.S. troops sided with the anti-Bosch forces. Thus the tide was turned in favor of the reactionary generals. In the subsequent presidential election, the U.S. actively backed an exiled Trujillo crony, Joaquin Balaguer. An open wave of repression gripped the country, forcing Juan Bosch, Balaguer's opponent to campaign from his home. In the eyes of the people, the vote was between Balaguer and the U.S. Marines. Everyone felt that if Bosch won the U.S. occupation forces would remain and organize another coup.



Balaguer's sham electorial victory was repeated in 1970 and 1974 — even though the Consitution limited the presidency to two terms. The illegitimacy of the Balaguer government is further underscored by its continual repression of the opposition. The aspirations of the Dominican people — the landless peasant, the undernourished and uneducated underpaid and unemployed worker, the suppressed student, and the child — are contained in the growing anti-Balaguer movement.

10th Anniversary Declaration

April, 1975 marks the 10th anniversary of the Dominican Constitutionalist revolt and the subsequent United States military invasion. In the words of then President Johnson, the aim of U.S. intervention was to permit the Dominican people "to freely choose the path of political democracy, social justice, and economic progress." Ten years after these events, we, the undersigned, believe it is necessary for Americans to examine the fruits of this intervention and reconsider the premises on which it was defended.

For the Dominican Republic, occupation by troops of the United States was not an unfamiliar experience. A U.S. military government, ruling the island from 1916 to 1924, reshaped the army and groomed one of its officers, Rafael Trujillo, to run the country. The Trujillo regime, probably the most cruel and absolute dictatorship in Latin America, finally ended after 31 years with the tyrant's assassination in 1961.

With the passing of the Trujillo nightmare, new democratic forces emerged. In the first free election in over forty years, Juan Bosch was chosen President and his party secured a majority in both houses of Congress. But only seven months later, the new government was overthrown by a military coup which prevented the institution of much-needed economic, political and social reforms.

In 1965, a popular civilian military movement took control in Santo Domingo, the capital of the country, fighting to restore the Constitution and the legitimate, elected President, Juan Bosch. In the ensuing civil war, the Constitutionalists were nearing victory over the anti-democratic forces when the Johnson administration ordered the military invasion under the pretext of saving American lives and countering "Communist subversion."

The support provided by the U.S. troops to the anti-Bosch forces prevented the re-establishment of the legally elected government. United States soldiers remained until Joaquin Balaguer, a long-time Trujillo servant, was installed as the new President.

United States business interests harvested the sweetest fruits of the 1965 invasion. Since President Johnson guaranteed that the country would not become "another Cuba," investors have flocked to the island. Private U.S. investment has reached over $600 million, more than twice the 1965 level. In comparison, the Dominican government's entire budget is little more than $300 million. Private investment has been reinforced by a massive U.S. government "development" program totaling some $439 million in the same period.

Gulf ¶ Western Industries, a New York-based conglomerate, accounts for some $200 million of U.S. holdings. G¶W's agricultural operation in the Dominican Republic is the company's most profitable division. It controls one third of the island's sugar production — sugar representing approximately 50 per cent of the country's exports. In addition, G¶W produces, processes and exports beef, fruit, vegetables and tobacco. In a country suffering from widespread malnutrition, this one company removes over 10 per cent of the arable land from production of foodstuffs for local consumption. G¶W's Dominican activities have been expanding into tourism, the cement industry, finance and real estate. ¶

With a population of 4.5 million in an area no larger than Vermont and New Hampshire combined, the Dominican Republic has become, after Puerto Rico, the prime market for U.S. goods in the Caribbean and Central America. Trade with the United States accounts for one-half of all Dominican imports and exports.

In sum, since the 1965 invasion U.S. investment and trade have greatly increased their domination of this small nation.

While the fruits of intervention have sweetened the coffers of American investors, for the majority of Dominicans they have been quite bitter.

On the occasion of this 10th Anniversary:

WE AFFIRM THE RIGHT OF ALL NATIONS TO SELF-DETERMINATION. Every nation has the perogative to choose its form of government, control its natural resources, and establish an economic system for national development without foreign interference. During the last decade, the U.S. policy of intervention, as best exemplified in the Dominican Republic, Indochina and Chile, has convinced us of the need to publicly reaffirm this principle.

WE DECLARE THAT THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT and the multinational corporations must no longer be permitted to violate with impunity the sovereignty of other nations.

WE CALL UPON OUR FELLOW CITIZENS to join with us in expressing their solidarity with the Dominican nation's right to self-determination by taking the following actions:

— Contact your congressional representatives and demand full and public hearings on the Dominican operations of U.S. corporations, banks and other private institutions.

— Cable or write Secretary of State Henry Kissinger (U.S. Dept. of State, Washington, D.C. 20520) demanding and end to all U.S. economic, political and military-police interference in the internal affairs of the Dominican Republic.

La gramática estuvo fatal en la última edición de el ECO LATINO. Desde la Junta Editorial hasta los preocupados profesores del Departamento de Español, todo el mundo quedó consternado. Rueron las siete plagas de Egipto; pero, esta vez, convertidas en horribles errores.

La Junta Editorial celebró una reunión en la cumbre para tratar el asunto. Asistieron refprsentantes de las diferentes mesas del "Hatch". (Como no hay Presidentes, ni Primer Ministro, ni Gurú, hubo que convocar representantes.)

Hubo grandes discurssos, arengas, homilias, etc. Se hicieron los mas profundos analisis. Peritos en linguistica bajaron las escaleras y fueron contratados. Fueron en lingüística bajaron las escaleras y fueron contratadso. Fueron aceptadas las más abarcadoras propuestas para el inicio de "exhaustivos" y angustiosos estudios al respecto.

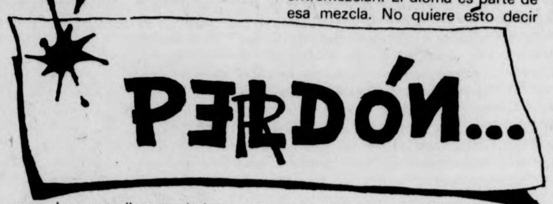
Los más agrios debates tomaron forma esa tarde en medio de tan romantica cafeteria. Dicen los invitados de honor que la Real Academia de Amherst lucía sonrisas de cundeamor. (Señores, llegó al colmo la ioquera.)

Entrada la mustia noche, se llegó a un feliz consenso: parte de los errores fueron cometidos por los autores de los articulos publicados, otra parte fue perpetrada por la imprenta y la suma responsabilidad por ambas dislocaciones recae sobre la Junta Editorial, amén.

Aunque nada de lo anterior expuesto realmente sucedió (excepto, claro, lo de los errores gramaticales), hemos recibido diversos mensajes de compañeros preocupados con los errores gramaticales en el periódico. La Junta Editorial agradece la preocupación. Creemos que es una señal de que la Comunidad comienza a preocuparse, lenta como un suero de brea, por el periódico. Nada más nos puede hacer sentir tranquilos y felices.

Tal vez, el próximo paso a darse deba ser la colaboración directa el el periódico. Estamos neceitando companeros que cubran diversos frentes de noticias. Nuestras companeras comienzan ya en esta edición a producir. Eso el. Aqui estamos.

Pero, have falta que mencionemos otros puntitos que preocupan a varios compañeros. Hemos escuchado que algunos profesores universitarios alegan que los estudiantes latinos no hablamos bien el español. Y nos imaginamos que se refieren al espanol que se habla en algunos lugares de España.



~~PERDÓN~~ PERDÓN...

Dentro de la comunidad de estudiantes latinos, hay compañeros españoles. Ni ellos tienen problemas para entender lo que decimos, ni tenemos problemas para comprenderles. Pero, lo más positivo de todo es que ni ellos hacen alarde de que el español que hablan es mejor, ni nosotros creemos que el nuestro lo sea. Cada uno entiende a cada cual.

América Latina es rica por la diversidad de culturas que en ella se entremezclan. El dioma es parte de esa mezcla. No quiere ésto decir que estemos bendiciendo la interferencia lingüística que, por ejemplo, condena Germán de Granda en Puerto Rico. Una cosa es enriquecerse; otra, verse obligado a suplantar la lengua materna por la del invasor.

Esta Junta Editoria considera que tiene una inmensa responsabilidad educativa frentea la comunidad hispana. No podemos permitir que se le maltrate. Por lo tanto, tenemos que defenderla de los prejuicios que mentes cretinas nutren en sus cerebros y esparcen, como estiercol, en el campus.

En diversas ocasiones, hemos pensado hacer público anuncio de estas pequeñeces; pero, estábamos dándole tiempo al tiempo. No vemos una mejoría significativa, aunque, tal vez, estemos equivocados.

Estamos en la mejor de las disposiciones para ayudar a los estudiantes que no hablan español a aprenderlo. Igualmente, queremos mejorar el nuestro. Lo que no podemos permitir es que se continúe con la campañita difamatoria contra el español que cada uno de nosotros habla.

Vivimos el siglo XX (ya muriendo, claro); y no estamos dispuestos a vivir la lengua de Garcilaso (¿cual de ellos?). ¡¡ de ninguno de los dos!

Apuntes Para El Colonizado

Durante las últimas semanas, la Comunidad Latina ha dado muestras de su creciente madurez política. Ha luchado contra enemigos dentro y fuera de sus propias filas; y, ha triunfado sobre ambos con gallarda firmeza. Aunque, no deja de haber una tristeza y, a la misma vez, un horrible asco como producto de tener que luchar contra elementos disociativos dentro de nuestras propias fortalezas.

Se entiende, claro, como secuela del coloniaje. Esas mentalidades colonizadas pretenden parecerse a toda costa en su enajenación al enemigo. Prefieren imitarlo, seguirlo, introyectarlo. Encuentran que en la duplicación exacta de sus normas y principios radica el secreto de la aceptación. Piensan que, sin el opresor y sus métodos de vida, la misma vida carece de sentido. Y se arrastran recogiendo las sobras que les tira el opresor.

Lo terriblemente desgraciado de toda esa actitud es la ceguera que se desarrolla en los cerebros de estos individuos. De ellos nos dice Freire, "Dada la inmersión los oprimidos no alcanzan ver, claramente, el 'orden' que sirve a los opresores que, en cierto modo, 'viven' en ellos. 'Orden' que frustrándolos en su acción, los lleva, muchas veces a ejercer un tipo de violencia horizontal con que agreden a los propios companeros por los motivos más nimios."

Muy bien ha trabajado el colono para que el colonizado sedimente su agresividad en todo su cuerpo lanzándola primero contra los suyos. Sin embargo, sobre eso nos dice Fanón, "Los traidores, los vendidos, seran juzgados y castigados."

Es que tenemos que esperar ese tipo de conducta en algunos colonizados. Hay que prepararse para pararlos en seco antes de que la patología mental, producida directamente por la opresión, los lleve a creerse cínicamente que han vencido a sus propios compañeros. No hay guerra con compañeros. O se está con ellos, o se está contra ellos. En ese caso, ya no hablamos de compañeros; sino de enajenados.

Nos dice Fanón en la pagina 47 de Los condenados de la tierra que, mientras que el colono o el policiá pueden, diariamente, golpear al colonizado sacar su cuchillo a la menor mirada houtil o agresiva de otro colonizado. Y es así, nos recuerda, porque el último recurso del colonizado es defender su personalidad frente a su igual.

Trágica verdad la que nos plantea este autor. Encontramos y contimuaremos hallando a ese hombre embrutecido, envilecido, torturado hasta lo más retorcido del dolor. Ese ser perdido en el no-ser. Ese hombre a quien hay que ayudarle a salir de su pantano sin permitirle que nos mueva centrípetamente ni un centímetro de pulgada. Hay que darle la mano sin que logre arrancárnosla.

En ese proceso tiene que envoverse todo el mundo. No es una tarea de unos cuantos. Es toda la Comunidad unida contra la fuerza chacharera y vulgar (Pero, que no deja de ser destructiva.) de la enajenación. Como bien dice el mismo Fanón, "Todo espectador es un cobarde o un traidor."

La experiencia nos dice que tengamos mucho cuidado con las ofertas de los explotadores. A veces, creemos que un impuesto económico (tax), o un sello cualquiera (ser graduado o subgraduado) nos legitimiza para hacer lo que nos venga en gana. Nada más lejos de la verdad. Es más, que sepa la Comunidad que, ahora que va triunfando contra sus enemigos de adentro y de afuera, no debe caer en el error de bailar sobre los restos de nuestros detractores. Tampoco hay que reverenciarlos. Es que corremos el riesgo de dejar que nos desarme cualquier concesión. Con el enemigo, se pueden hacer tratos; pero, compromisos no.

Nuestra Comunidad se ha pasado de buena en muchas ocasiones. Tal vez, sea la recua de los complejos de culpabilidad e inferioridad que nos ha creado el opresor. Pero, eso tiene que terminarse. Es necesario que se le enseñe al pueblo a que denuncie al ladrón; que señale al criminal para que sepa que a los compañeros se respetan, que, independientemente de las leyes existentes, está la ley de los pueblos.

Estamos en medio de una lucha por la liberación de la mujer, la liberación de los hombres; o sea, la liberación de la Comunidad. Como bien puntualiza Fanón, el éxito de la lucha exije la claridad de los objetivos, la precisión de la metodologia y que las masas tengan un conocimiento de la dinámica temporal de sus esfuerzos. AHORA, uniendo todos los cerebros y brazos bien intencionados, tiene ante sí un tremendo reto. Nada ni nadie puede desviarla de su camino. Nadie ni nada podrá socavarle sus proezas. AHORA es la Comunidad consciente.

Por esa razón de lucha, los que ahora tienen la palabra en AHORA son los que buscan la unidad y la efectividad. Profeticamente habló Freire cuando dijo en Pedagogía del oprimido, p. 191, que los heroes son exactamente quienes ayer buscaron la union para la liberación y no aquellos que, con su poder, pretendían dividir para reinar.

Estos elementos que buscan la desunión, la separación de la Comunidad sirven únicamente de alicate al enemigo. Nadie sabe si lo hacen a propósito; pero, lo cierto es que, en la medida en que las minorías dominan a las mayorías y las oprimen, mantenerlas divididas es una condición necesaria para la continuidad de su poder y tiranía. Freire lo dijo mejor que nosotros.

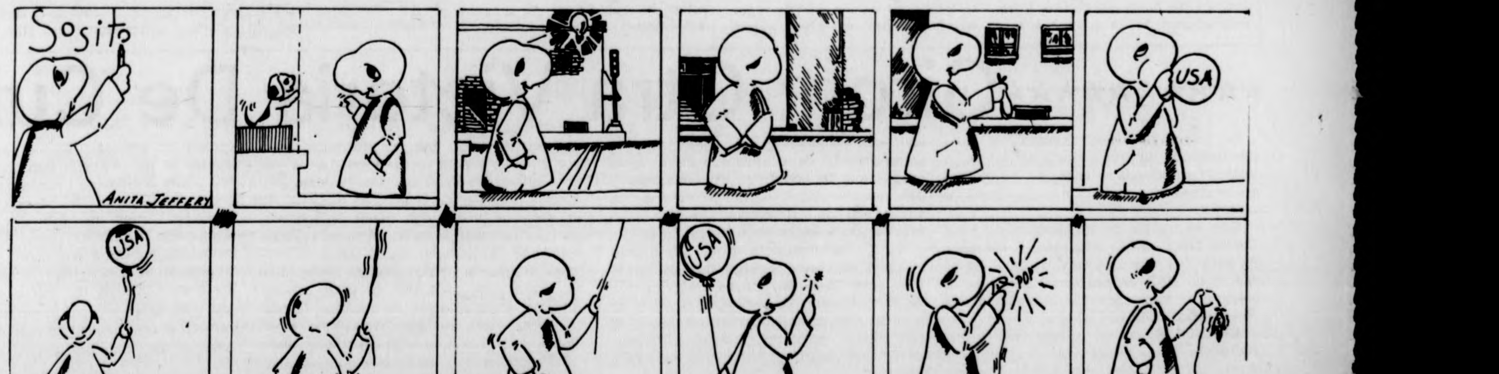
Hay individuos que pretenden imponer a los pueblos su visión del mundo, su manera de hacer las cosas. No respetan la visión consensual. Son intransigentes majaderos cuya única función es la de servir de retranca. Y se sienten bien haciéndose ellos mismos creer que son revolucionarios y hasta socialistas. Esos son un mundo aparte donde ellos mismos se predican y se creen sus mentiras. Ante sí mismos son todopoderosos; pero, ante el pueblo son un mero estruendo de mierda.

Y no pueden comunicarse con la Comunidad. No pueden establecer un diálogo porque alienan la ignorancia; o sea, como dice Freire, la ven siempre en el otro, nunca en si mismos. Dentro de su relativa miopía no pueden ver que la voluntad popular es insustituible.

Cuando Mao-Tse-Tung hablaba de los principios que debián guiarnos al bregar con la comunidad, nos decía las necesidades de las masas y no las necesidades nacidas de nuestra imaginación, igual que el deseo libremente expresado por las masas, las resoluciones tomadas por ellas mismas y no aquellas que nosotros tomamos en su lugar.

Decia Paulo Freire en la pagina 62 del libro citado que decirse comprometido con la liberación y no ser capaz de comulgar con el pueblo, a quien continúa considerando absolutamente ignorante, es un doloroso equívoco. Sin embargo, hemos oido en varias ocasiones como a nuestra Comunidad Latina se le ha llamado ignorante. No ha sido ya sólo a miembros de ella, sino a ella. Pero, esas mentes cretinas no parecen reconocer que el acto más inteligente que esa masa produce es el de rechazar espontáneamente a los individuos que la degradan.

Lo grande de la teoría marxista es que es correcta; y, si aplicamos su concepto de tesis vs. antítesis-síntesis, veremos con profundo regocijo que el choque de la Comunidad vs. alguno que otro ha producido lo que los más grandes esfuerzos no habián podido lograr: la más fuerte unidad en toda la Comunidad Latina; la más estrecha familia: AHORA.



SEMANA LATINOAMERICANA EN UMASS

Optimismo es la nueva consigna

Por — Federico G. Borges

Indudablemente, la semana latinoamericana tuvo muy buen comienzo con la charla del compañero Juan Carlos Coral. No sólo por la calidad del análisis del compañero, sino también porque en virtud de sus conocimientos históricos pudo trascender el marco de sus ejemplos argentinos para presentarnos una visión panorámica y coherente del movimiento obrero y be la lucha en América Latina. El compañero Coral no sólo tomó en cuenta en su análisis le realidad de los paises en sí, sino también el papel que juega en esta realidad el mecanismo de la emigración. Este enfoque se presenta doblemente importante para nosotros los puertorriqueños, pues a la vez que nos enmarca dentro de un proceso en el cual avanza la América Latina, se concentra en uno de los mas graves problemas de nuestra peculiar realidad colonial.

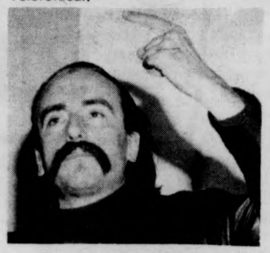
Se hace pertinente una breve descripción del itinerario de la exposición del compañero, porque muchos no pudieron asistir y escucharle. Esta descripción señalará los puntos téoricos más importantes, relegando, sin restarles importancia, los ejemplos específicos a menos que fueran esenciales para la comprensión.

Comenzó por señalar como América Latina se hace escenario de nuevas formas de violencia social, mostrando una "creatividad" del sistema represivo que se creía extinta desde el Fascismo. Dentro de la tradicionales formas de opresión y represión, como por ejemplo la distorción y editorialización del material noticioso, y el Golpe de Estado, señala este último como la alternativa desesperada de la burguesía nacional cuando se enfrenta a la realidad de que los sectores porgresistas cuentan con el apoyo popular. Señala como el Golpe de Estado es el primer paso de un proceso que culminaría con la ocupación directa por las fuerzas militares de los poderes imperialistas en caso de fallar el golpe. La distorción de la noticias contribuye a difundir el mito del Golpe de Estado como intrínseco al temperamento hispanoamericano desplazando así la atención lejos de la verdaderas causas de esta tensión social que son el juego de intereses entre las burguesías nacionales y los poderes imperialistas y ambos opuestos a suvez a los intereses del pueblo explotado.

Dentro de las formas mas innovadoras de violencia social señala tres como las más novedosas, a saber: la formación de grupos de ultraderecha, las empresas mixtas y las "formulas legaloides". Señala que este reajuste, en la política de la represión se opera dado el caso de que las realidades económicas han cambiado. La integración al Capitalismo multinacional del mercado de mano de obra desencadena un fuerte descontento social que los poderes no pueden subyugar por su extensión en las masas. De ahí que surjan estas nuevas formas de violencia.

La labor de los grupos de ultraderecha consiste en socavar las bases o pilares donde se apoyan las fuerzas progresistas con actos de violencia y terrorismo. Actos que quedan impunes por la "eficacia y diligencia" con que el poder establecido investiga y soluciona los casos. Estas grupas atacan a los agentes que podrian canalizar el descontento popular hacia la Revolucion.

Las industrias mixtas cumplen una doble función pues mientras exaltan falsos sentimientos nacionales, y atenúan provisionalmente el descontento, a su vez reafirman el poder da las empresas multinacionales y comprometen aun mas los intereses de la burguesía nacional. Bajo esta nueva mascara se sigue la explotacion. (Mentiríamos si no nos huele a Superpuerto, Navieras y Telefonica.)



Juan Carlos Coral expone elocuentemente la realidad latinoamericana de hoy.

Las "formulas legaloides" no necesitan explicarse pues van desde racionalizaciones como la Alianza para el Porgreso hasta el Estado Libre Asociado. Este ni es estado, ni libre, ni asociado, ni libremente asociado, ni "es" de cualquier forma que lo opngan sino una mascara para la explotación, una muy legalmente sofisticada forma de coloniaje, como ya lo declaran las Naciones Unidas. (Los compañeros de Eco Latino se ocupan en estos momentos de publicar los documentos y el análisis de esta desición de la ONU)

Toda esta situación arranca de un descontento general con los movimientos populistas de décadas anteriores. El pueblo se ha dado cuenta de cuan vacuas eran sus promesas y de como la situación no ha cambiado; antes bien ha empeorado. Cita como ejemplos el Peronismo y el Munosismo. Este descontento creciente no puede ser canalizado por la clase sindical que se ha asimilado a la burguesia nacional. Resta organizar el descontento en la masa misma del pueblo: entre los campesinos y los trabajadores. Señala como ejemplo el fruto de tal organizacion en la Argentina, donde los propietarios capitalistas negocian no con los funcionarios sindicales, sino con los obreros mismos.

Dentro de este acápite señala la distincion entre nivel de conciencia y nivel cultural. Confusión que mas de una vez hemos oído manejar. El nivel de conciencia arranca del desengaño sufrido por el pueblo al no ver las promesas de las campañas cumplidas, arranca de sus niveles de vida bajos, del efecto en sus vidas de los fenómenos de recesión e inflación que a nivel mundial se dan juntos. Este nivel de conciencia, este descontento colectivo nada tiene que ver con hablar siete idiomas o diferenciar un Renoir de un Roualt.

Señala dos intentos fallidos de canalizar este descontento en la medida en que no tomaron en cuenta el apoyo popular: la guerrilla y la lucha estudiantil. De hecho señala como pueden convertirse en factores detractores del proceso revolucionario cuando no cuentan con el apoyo de las masas mayoritarias.

Por último señala la importancia de los grupos chicanos y puertorriqueños en los E.E.U.I. como la vanguardia del frente de la lucha interna contra el imperialismo. Observa muy apropiadamente como la coalición de fuerzas se ve facilitada tanto por el factor del enemigo común y de un mismo descontento, como por el factor cultural de lengua y tradiciones comunes. Los comentarios polémicos de pasadas actividades sobre este punto, ?Qué nos une?, se revelan estrechos. Indudablemente ambas razones coinciden con gran importancia en el proceso de coalición. Si se duda de que este proceso esta en camino, se ignoran hechos como la concentracion del Madision Square Garden.

Esta descripción esquematica, ha sido un intento de resumir algunas de las ideas del companero Juan Carlos Coral por parecernos impertantes y alentadoras para nuestro propio análisis de la realidad puertorriqueña. Indudablemente, el espíritu, como él ha señalado al final de su charla, debe ser uno de optimismo, ya que la lucha es nuestra y así la victoria. !Neneceremos!

Guasabara llego

Este es el grito de ataque de un grupo de estudiantes de New Jersey y New York que se han dado a la tarea de hacer teatro comprometido. Surge el grupo del seno del curriculo. El creciente interés de sus miembros por los problemas de la comunidad lo aleja de su función académica y le adjudica una función social. Los componentes del grupo escriben, montan y actúan en sus obras El génesis de estas obras, segun comentarios de los componentes, responde al concepto de creación colectiva. El grupo no trabaja con un texto dado de antemano. Solamente existen unas líneas generales que deben seguirse y que constituyen el mensaje. Este mensaje toma su propia forma en el intercambio de los actores entre sí y de estos con el mensaje. Este método de rienda suelta a la imaginación de los actores que no se ven ceñidos a las indicaciones de un autor. La improvisación juega un papel importante.

La imaginación de los compañeros es fecunda y se las arregla para utilizar las posibilidades del cuerpo humano a capacidad. Cobran importancia los gestos, los movimientos colectivos, y los sonidos varios de que es capaz la voz humana. Estos sonidos a su vez dan cabida a la música que se integra a la pieza. Todos estos elementos van encaminados a reconstruir una realidad desmitificada. A continuación, me explico.

La realidad se nos presenta en toda su crudenza, sin atender los escrúpulos que dictaba a la vieja escuela el buen gusto. El lenguaje se presenta como arma de dos filor: creador de fantasías. Un ejemplo que me parece magnífico para ilustrar estas tendencias es la substitución del "princess telephone" por una chica coronada. Las ilusiones creadas, por medio, de la desvirtualizacion del lenguaje, por las clases dominantes quedan así expuestas en toda su carga de ridículo. En su afán por envolver al público en una reacción colectiva rompen con la cuarta pared y se lanzan fuera del escenario: "...bacalaitos...cervezas...alcapurrias..." El público reacciona favorablemente y efectivamente compra" algunos bacalaitos. Coherente con su realidad bilingüe, utilizan indistintamente el español y el inglés. Su esfuerzo primordial es el de la denuncia.Este esfuerzo presupone un público determinado. Presentan los problemas como verdaderamente aparecen en la realidad del público y esperan que la reacción última venga del público. Sería innonsistente con sus esfuerzos anteriores de envolver al público en el proceso dramático el proponer soluciones al problema. Las soluciones deben venir del público. La solución es un proceso que desencadena la obra y se cristaliza en el público. La consigna final es más genuina cuando nace del público concientizado que reacciona. En su denuncia atacan tipos que quizás para muchos pasen desapercividos: el capataz, el agente de emigración, el "farmer", el político. Se desnmascaran, por medio de la ironía, sus palabras de doble sentido. Recordemos aquí la doble aparición de la Sra. Gomez del Departamento de Emigración del Estado Libre Asociado, y el nuevo sentido que cobran sus palabras de introducción al ser repetidas delante del cadáver de Cheo de las futura madre que se desploma y de la escena de la agresión de Toño.

Los cuatro actos de ?Cómo estas Puerto Rico? se cierran en sí mismos. El primero nos presenta una ingeniosa refundición del Génesis bíblico en que el hombre, creado a imágen y semejanza de Dios, crea a su vez, a su imágen y semej anza, un instrumento de destrucción, el hombre-soldado. No dejan de estar presen tes interpretaciones bíblicas muy modernas: "Dios está muerto" o dormido,; la concepción del primer crimen como pruducto del hambre y la lucha por la supervi vencia. El segundo acto ubica al puertorriqueño en su nuevo medio: E.E.U.U. Trata sobre la emigración a las fincas. El tercero nos presenta ironbicamente los problemas con que se enfrenta al tratar de conseguir apartamento, una vez ha decidido establecerse. El último expone los problemas del discrímen una vez ya establecidos: los abusos policíacos y la posición de aquellos ciudadanos que se asimilan al sistema llegando a renegar de su gente. El instrumento de destrucción del Génesis reaparece en la forma del policía, [illegible] el mismo gesto, extermina los puertorriqueños. Por este juego entre el principio y el fin, queda incluida la infrahistoria del puertorriqueño en E.E.U.U. en un marco universal.

El grupo cuenta con actores muy versátiles. Indudablemente un factor que corre adverso al desarrollo de todas las posibilidades del grupo es el hecho de que no cuentan con suficiente tiempo para su labor como grupo de teatro. En el presente se reunen una vez la semana por tres horas. El refinamiento de técnica es producto del continuo ejercicio. Sería injusto pedirlo. El grupo tiene entre sus planes trabajar durante el verano para mejorar las obras ya escritas y montar nuevas. Hasta el momento han montado once. Esperan encontrar fondos para llevar a cabo este proyecto. Trabajando con un sueldo por sus esfuerzos artísticos podrian dedocarse por completo al teatro. Además se proponen crear teatro comprometido con marionetas para audiencias infantiles. !Valen mucho muchachos, adelante!

..En el simposio sobre la mujer llevado a cabo el vienes de la Semana latinoamericana, se integro la problematica del feminismo con la lucha de clases y la explotacion de la mujer vis a vis con la lucha de la humanidad en general.

Simposio: la mujer latinoamericana

En la gran mayoría de las ponencias que se celebran en torno a la liberación femenina, se brega con el problema desde un punto de vista exclusivamente sexual. En contraste, en el simposio sobre la majer llevado a cabo el viernes de la Semana latinoamericana, se integró la problemática del feminismo con la lucha de clases y la explotación de la mujer vis a vis con la lucha de la humanidad en general. Tras la presentación por la compañera Gloria Ortiz, nos ofreció la Dra. Carmen Puigdollers un cuadro histórico de la mujer puertorriqueña mostrándonos cómo a pesar de los prejuicios tradicionales hacia la mujer en nuestras sociedades y específicamente en la sociedad puertorriqueña, la mujer boricua tiene una historia de lucha activa desde siempre. La historia, sin embargo, ha insistido en minimizar la lucha de la mujer y someterla al papel tradicional de mujer-esposa aún en las gestas revolucionarias. Nos indicó la Dra. Puigdollers cómo en la revolución de Lares en el 1868 las mujeres aceptaron igual responsabilidad que los hombres: firmes en la necesidad de destruir un sistema injusto. Mariana Bracetti, conocida como Brazo de Oro, es una de las muchas figuras de mujeres que han estado en la lucha de la liberación de nuestro pueblo. Se suman a Mariana Bracetti, mujeres como Lola Rodríguez de Tió, conocida por sus tertulias subversivas; y ya en nuestro siglo surgen mujeres que defenderán el sufragio femenino como Luisa Capetillo, que escribe el primer manifesto sobre la liberación femenina. En el 1917 se forma la Liga Femenina. En el campo intelectual, nos dice, contamos con varias figuras, entre las que se destaca la de Nilita Vientós-Gastón, fundadora de la vevista Asomante y primera mujer en dirigir el Ateneo Puertorriqueño. Pasó a mencionar cómo en la década de los '30 y los '40 las mujeres como Blanca Canales, para concluir la heroicidad con el gesto de Lolita Lebrón en el 1954.

Concluyó la Dra. Puigdollers, elogiando a las jóvenes puertorriqueñas que en el 1970 se batieron en Río Piedras a bogando por la eliminacción del ROTC y nos leyó un poema suyo dedicado a la joven Antonia Martínez, asesinada por las fuerzas de represión policíacas.

La compañera Digna Sánchez planteó el problema de la mujer en la sociedad capitalista y en la sociedad socialista, trazando el desarrollo de la evolución de la familia a través de la historia. La mujer en la sociedad capitalista es víctima de la explotación y que se le exige el trabajo en el hogar sin paga, y es un servivio que esta mujer oprimida hace al estado, y que si no lo hace el sistema se paralizaría y habría que hacer esta función en forma socializada. Esta explotación de la mujer, sin embargo, nos dice la compañera Sánchez, no se puede ver como un caso aislado. "El problema no es de la mujer, sino de la sociedad." Insistió Digna en que "una mujer puertorriqueña que verdaderamente desee justicia e igualdad no es meramente una feminista, sino una revolucionaria." Se nos señalaron ejemplos de mujeres que han estado al frente de su pueblo en lucha como las mujeres vietnamitas y las mujeres cubanas.

Terminó la compañera Digna Sánchez insistiendo que no se puede hablar de emancipación de la mujer, sin hablar de la emancipación de la humanidad.

Luego de la charla de la compañera Digna Sánchez pasamos a la Dra. Helen Rodríguez-Trías, la cual relacionó el problema de salud de la mujer puertorriqueña con la estructura de poderes en la sociedad capitalista. Analizó este problema desde dos perspectivas: la primera siendo el de la mujer como fuerza trabajadora en el campo de la salud, industria en la cual la mujer ocupa la posición principal numéricamente hablando, pero en gran desventaja con la empleomanía masculina; la segunda perspectiva: la de ver a la mujer puertorriquena como instrumento para pruebas científicas de programas establecjdos por el gobierno de los Estados Unidos. Uno de estos programas y el que más ruido ha hecho en los últimos meses ha sido el Programa de control poblacional que en Puerto Rico fue establecido por el Partido Popular. Este programa ha "logrado" que en la década de los '30 esterilizaran el 5 per centavo de nuestra poblacion femenina, que en las dos décadas subsiguientes aumentara a un 25 per centavo y en la década del '60 siguiera en aumento hasta llegar al 35 per centavo. O sea que más de una tercera parte de la población de mujeres puertorriqueñas entre las edades de los 21 y los 45 años están hoy día esterilizadas. Estas esterilizaciones masivas van en ascenso según bajamos a la clase trabajadora. Nos dijo la Dra. Rodríguez-Trías que la política gubernamental actual es acrecentar este número de mujeres esterilizadas y llegar a las cinco mil para lograr que no haya crecimiento problacional en Puerto Rico.

Nuestra última conferenciante, la Dra. Diva Sanjur, empezó aludiendo a un hecho de gran interés y donde hay una gran contradición. Nos señaló cómo el uso de los contraceptivos van dirigidos hacia la mujer, a pesar de que la mujer es menos indicada para ello por razones fisiologicas.

Explicó la Dra. Sanjur cómo el hecho de que la mujer latinoamericana esté saliendo a trabajar fuera, le haya dado un sentido de independencia, así como que el marido le tenga más respeto, y en general, haya más felicidad en el hogar.

Otra área donde se ha cambiado par lo mejor ha sido en el área de la sobreprotección de la mujer latina hacia el marido y los ninos.

Al Concluir el simposio, nos quedó muy claro que la lucha de la liberación no es exclusiva de la mujer, sino que es de todos.

La Nueva Cancion: Amor y Lucha

Cantando a "la revolución por la creacion del hombre nuevo" dos trovadores de la Nueva Canción puertoriqueña, Ernesto Luis "Neftin" y Jose Nogueras, cantaron a una audencia que lleno el anfiteatro de Herter Hall, el martes 15 de Abril, en el segundo acto de la Semana Latinoamericana.

Los dos cantores se ven como trabajadores de la resistencia cultural de pueblo puertorriqueño contra la invasión sociocultural del imperialismo norteamericano. "Yo canto de un futuro negado, de una revolución sincera.", dice Nogueras. "No somos solamente cantores. No somos especiales. Nuestra canción esta integrada a la práctica socialista. Cantamos las emociones del pueblo con sinceridad y humildad."

Cantores de la canción política en sus principios, hoy, su mayor empeño vá a la integración de folklor puertorriqueño al movimiento de la Nueva Canción Utilizando los ritmos típices sus letras transmiten la vida diaria, los problemas, la emoción, el sentir y la esperanza de un pueblo en lucha por su liberación. Desde las canciones de Antonio Cabán, "EL TOPO", y Noel Hernández hasta los poemas de Antonio Corretjer, el mensaje de amor por el hombre y la solidaridad latinoamericana quedaron con nosotros.

De regreso a Puerto Rico, aparte de su participación en actos de agitación, como parte de "Canto Libre" y conjuntamente con otros intérpretes de la Nueva Canción, habrán de participar en un Concierto en el Colegion de Abogados. El propósito de este acto es financiár el primer programa de la Nueva Canción en la radion puertorriqueña, "Canto Libre". Ademas, en la distribución de para el sello Arte y Cultura Puertorriqueña. El disco es un homenaje a un compañero muerto durante un incidente con la policía el año pasado. Esta grabación es el producto colectivo de varios cantantes de la Nueva Trova; entre ellos, José y Neftín.

La unidad de Massachusetts vibro ante el mensaje musical de vanguardia.

★★★★★★★★★★★Giron: Otra Victoria De Cuba y Dei Cine Revolucionario★★★★★★★★★★★★★

El éxito del cine cubano es una demostración de lo que puede conseguir un pueblo cuando toda su energía y creatividad se vuelcan en un esfuerzo solidario y colectivo.

Con el triunfo de la Revolución, Fidel Castro pidió que se preparara la ley para fundar el Instituto de Cine Cubano. El 24 de Marzo de 1959, se proclamó dicha ley, la primera en el campo cultural hecha por la Revolución. Así nació ICAIC.

El ICAIC (Instituto Cubano del Arte e Industrias Cinemato-graficás) es algo asi como un "ministerio del cine." Controla todos los aspectos de producción y educacion cinematográfia como son: el entrenamiento de estudiantes de cine, la producción de noticieros, documentales y películas de largo y corto metraje, la supervisión de los teatros cubanos y la exportación e importación de películas.

ICAIC ha producio unas cincuenta películas de medio y largo metraje desde 1959, unos 300 documentales y cortos y más de 500 noticieros. Esta cantidad de films de gran calidad cinematogratica ha hecho al cine cubano merecedor de muchos premios en festivales de cine en Latinoámerica, Asia y Europa.

Sin embargo en Estados Unidos el cine cubano ha tenido grandes problemas para ser exhibido y para recibir el elogio de los críticos y profesionales del cine. Hace un año atrás la Sociedad de Críticos de Nueva York le otorgó el premio a la mejor película extranjera a Memorias del Subdesarrollo (1968) excelente film cubano, que a juicio de Andrew Sarris, el crítico neoyor-quino, fue premiada ante todo por su gran calidad artística. Pero al venir su director Tomás Gutiérrez Aleas a recibir dicho premio el gobierno de U.S.A. le negó la entrada a este 1972 el gobierno de los Estados Unidos había clausurado el primer Festival de Cine Cubano en U.S.A. Así al público americano se le ha negado el privilegio de ver el excelente trabajo de los cineastas cubanos.

Durante la Semana Latinoamericana aqui en la Universidad de Massachusetts se presentó unos de los documentales producidos por ICAIC. Girón (Bay of Pigs) producida en Cuba por ICAIC en 1973 y dirigida por Manuel Herrera, recrea el asalto a Bahía de Cochinos por tropas de exilados país. Esta no fue la primera ocasion en que se rechazó al cine cubano en este país. Ya en cubanos apoyados por la CIA, en Abril de 1961.

Manuel Herrera en este "semi-documental" de largo metraje utiliza a la vez técnicas escenicas y documentales propiamenta tales para recrear todo el episodio de Bahía de Cochinos. Nos muestra por medio de diferentes técnicas y elementos cinematograficos, desde los primeros bombardeos de las tropas mercenarjas hasta la toma de Bahía de Cochinos por las tropas revolucionarias. Herrera emplea entrevistos con los participantes del suceso en realidad; emplea también reposiciones del escenario y escenas de la lucha; hace uso de mapas para indicar el movimiento y tácticos de los ejércitos e intercala tomas documentales de la época y fortografías del asalto.

Girón es hasta cierto punto un film experimental ya que mezcla a propósito secuencias documentales y actuadas, experimento que no deja de ser osado, pero hecho con éxito, ya que en ciertos momentos parecen invisibles los juegos de imagenes reales con aquéllas recreadas. Con esta mezcla Manuel Herrera logra darle una narración mas dramática y continuada a su documental.

Girón es por lo tanto una "película de guerra" pero también es una película sobre los hombres y las mujeres que pelearon esa guerra. La gente y sus historias correspondientes son los protagonistas de esta película; son hombres y mujeres de carne y hueso que participaron en cada una de las anécdotas que se cuentan o recrean en el film. Vemos por ejemplo, a los pilotos contándonos sus intentos de bombardear a las barcas invasoras; vemos al soldado que trata de usar una granada recordando el modo como lo había visto hacer en el cine; vemos a los combatientes y al campesino que recuerda su sorpresa al ver descender a los paracaidistas en su campo y vemos a una alfabetizadora que nos cuenta como fue capturada ella y sus compañeros por la tropa mercenaria.

A pesar de que en ciertos momentos el film esta recargado de escenas de guerra recreadas, Herrera logra producir un ambiente realmente dramático con la juxtaposición de elementos cinematográficos.

Pero el valor de este documental no reside sólo en su técnica experimental sino que como la mayoría de los documentales cubanos logra informar entreteniendo, logra educar sin predicar. Girón es pues, no sólo una narración lograda del episodio de Bahía de Cochinos sino que es la historia de estos hombres y mujeres que dieron y dan la vida por defender y construir el socialismo en su país.

Elecciones - Ahora y La Comunidad latinoamericanas, intenta neutralizar todo intento de acción combativa hacia la consecución de una conciencia verdaderamente revolucionaria.

Hemos dicho que su composición se debe a un fenómeno causal de espontaneidad, y esto es cierto, porque lo que nos ha reunido aquí, a un grupo grupo heterogeneámente desigual, no ha sido la necesidad de agruparnos para enfrentarnos a lal imniente peligrosidad de destrución del capitalismo, sino, la búsqueda puramente personal de un crecimiento enagenado de todo conocimiento racional de la movilidad historica, vergibracia a la bendicion de la gran democracia Americana."

producto de esta habil maniobra de la clase dominante, nos hemos encontrados aqui, formando parte estructuralmente de una organización, que recoge solo a nivel de individuos, a la verdaderas necesidades de las comunidades hispano-hablantes. No estamos haciendo concepciones de principios, sino tratando de hacer una diferenciación a nivel ideológico, para poder entender objetivamente la posición de "Ahora" en su papel de organización, y de organizadora.

Los problemas a que esta organización se ha enfrentado, tales como las posiciones de algunos compañeros, miopes politicamente, el legaismo a rejatablas de algunos y la apatia de otros, demuestra, por si mismo, lo dicho, por nosotros en este articulo.

El proceso eleccionario a fines del Mes de Abril, ha sido el hecho mas reciente de la descordenada confusionista en que nos ha sumido la falta de una plataforma ideológica, que canalize correctamente todo el sentir de los miembros más alejados de la organización, y empuje hacia las tomas de posiciones más radicales, a sus miembros mas activos.

En rigor, hay una contradicción fenomenológica que se da en la composición pequeño burguesa de nuestros seudos-liberales. Una contradicción condicionada a la concesión abstracta de nuestra formación ideológica-educacional, al calor de la finalidad de la burguesía y el colonialismo, que es, la de evitar a todo trance, la toma de conciencia tant de los estudiantes como de la clase obrera, alrededor de una organización eficaz.

Este condicionamiento, esta miopía, este engeño en que han caído algunos compañeros, victimas asimilacionistas de las estructuras que buscan una mejor y mayor super-explotación conlleva irremediablemente a la polarización que hemos visto y vivido en el zeno de nuestra organización.

Estos compañeros, que caen inconscientemente en la contradicción que hemos mencionado, de que siendo víctimas directa de la explotación, de la discriminación racial y social, se convierten en defensores de quienes lo explotan y los miran como seres de segunda categoría. Bon estos compañeros que por muy bien intencionados que esten- se convierten en los oponentes de la organización que les trajo aquí, y que los defiende.

En su postura equivocada, advienen a la condición de enemigos de las comunidades donde viven sus familiares y amigos, y definitivamente en enemigos de ellos mismos.

Lenín al referirse a las personas que siendo víctimas de la mentira burguesa se convierten en sus defensores, nos decía; "Y no solo personas que dependen directamente de la burguesía, no solo quienes se hallan oprimidos por el yugo del capital o corrompidos por este, (hay un gran número de científicos, artistas, curas, etc., de todas clases al servicio, del capital), sino incluso quienes se hallan simplemente influidos por el prejuicio de la libertad burguesa".

Veamos, pues, lo que termina de suceder con algunos individuos que presentandose a servir a las ideas desnutridas de las clase en el poder, trataban de apuntalar el desorden en nuestra organización.

No es un secreto para nadie, que tras el proceso eleccionario, se escondia la cara del facismo, los enemigos de los pobres, de la clase trabajadora, y de toda ooganización que busca romper el hielo de la indiferencia y la explotación.

Sabemos sin embargo, los individuos que se prestaron a ese juego derrotista, y fue esta percepción lo que le hizo exclamar al compañero Eugenio Suarez Glavan; "Esto me suena a un golpe rorila", y fue precisamente ante esa perspectiva osxurantista, que la comunidad reaccionó, y abrió un parentess para que el sector consciente, explicara el significado de esa jugada divisoria, a la luz de las necesidades de las mayorias, en denfensa seimpre de los verdaderos intereses históricos de la misma.

No entender las maniobras de distorción de los elementos mas atrazados ideologicamente de nuestra organización, "para no avertirlo es preciso ser un servidor consciente de la burguesía o un hombre políticamente muerto, al que los polvorinetos libros burgueses le impiden ver la vida tal como es y que está impregnado hasta la medula de prejuicios democratico-burgueses, por lo que objectivamente se ha convertido en lacayos de la burguesía".

Es que, no se puede olvidar el caracter limitado de toda institución, organización e incluso de un Estado, que pretenda funcionar con las herramientas que provee el parlamentarismo burgués.

Las masas oprimidas siempre encontraran a sus pasos, mil obstábulos en la búsqueda de sus reivindicaciones las flagrantes subceptibilidades de las contradicciones entre el deseo de unificación de una mayoria alrededor de una vanguardia, y la franca hostilidad de una minoria que siendo privilegiados por un lado, constituyen junto a todos los demas, lo que la sociedad que tiene los medios de produccion y consumo-, excreta de si misma.

"En la democracia, burguesa, valiendose de mil ardides -tantos mas ingeniosos y eficaces cuanto mas desarrollados esta la democracia "pura"-, los capitalistas apartan a las masas de la participación en el gobierno, de la libertad de reunión y de prensa, etc."

Si es cierto que "Ahora" adolece de la falta de una filosofia revolucionaria, no es menos cierto, que sus componendos no han sido ajeno a esa situacion. Eso hoy por hoy, constituye la preocupacion fundamental de sus mas genuinos representantes, y que ya, irreductiblemente buscan romper.

Porque lo que cuenta es la intención, la experiencia de masas con que cuenta, y la extración de clase de sus miembros que han vistos en ella, el único camino viable hacia sus reivindicaciones. Lo que interesa por tanto es, el deseo de esa mayoría, quienes se han organizado para elevar su nivel de esclarecimiento, y para desarrollar una conciencia que contribuya efectivamente a su organización.

Cuando estas condiciones se dan "las bases para esarrollar una politicia independiente de y para la clase obrera estan dada". El temor narrado, ayudó a superar el estrecho ámbito de nuestra individualidad, ayudo a descubrir el valor de la unidad.

El sentimiento de no hacer nada, de "a mí no me importa la organización porque nunca hace nada, y se pasan la vida discutiendo disparates" quedo ahogado por el verdadero sentido de nuestra situación de minoría, por los lazos que unen nuestras necesidades, angustias, iluciones, temores y esperanzas.

Es la conciencia de vernos una vez mas amenazados, a traves del corte de un presupuesto económico, que terminaría por destruirnos fisica-intelectualmente, lo que ha elaborado una forma auténtica de entender que "solos" llegaríamos al suicidio, que "juntos" seríamos dueño del mañana, que juntos llegaríamos al fondo del otro, que nos hace fuerte, un complemento a lo que nunca conseguiríamos aisladamente.

opinion has been aware of the criminal conduct of the United States armed forces, which are using the territory of Culebra as a firing range for weapons testing, thus seriously jeopardizing the lives of the people of Culebra, who are engaged in a vigorous battle for the dismantling of the installations established on their island by the United States Navy.

20. Puerto Rico, as a colonial territory, has no armed forces of its own. Yet Puerto Ricans have been made liable for compulsory military service in the armed forces of the United States. Some 200,000 Puerto Ricans served in the United States Army in the First World War, 400,000 in the aggression against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in 1950. The imposition of compulsory military service on Puerto Ricans is a crude display of colonialism and racism.

21. The number of Puerto Ricans who have thus been sacrificed to the aggressive interest of United States imperialism is proportionately greater than the figure for citizens of the metropolitan territory of the United States itself. Thus, the newspaper el Mundo reported on 22 May 1967 that Puerto Rican casualties in the war of aggression against Viet-Nam are higher than those for 18 states of the United States and the District of Columbia.

III. The Case of Puerto Rico in the United States.

22. In 1953, the General Assembly adopted resolution 748 (VIII) relieving the United States of the obligation to submit the reports referred to in Article 73 of the Charter in the case of the Territory of Puerto Rico, because the latter had achieved commonwealth status. Inoperative paragraph 9 of the resolution, the General Assembly stated the following:

"The General Assembly

".....

"Expresses its assurance that, in accordance with the spirit of the present resolution, the ideals embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the traditions of the people of the United States of America and the political advancement attained by the people of Puerto Rico, due regard will be paid to the will of both the Puerto Rican and American peoples in the conduct of their relations under their present legal statute, and also in the eventuality that either of the parties to the mutually agreed association may desire any change in the terms of this association.

The resolution was adopted in the Fourth Committee by a narrow majority of 22 countries in favor, 18 against and 19 abstentions. In order to obtain such a majority, the United States Government had not only to exert all kinds of pressure and carry out endless diplomatic maneuvers but also to make a pronouncement in the General Assembly through its then representative, Henry Cabot Lodge, who stated as follows:

"I am authorized to say on behalf of the President (of the United States) that if, at any time, the Legislative Assembly of Puerto Rico adopts a resolution in favor of more complete or even absolute independence, he will immediately thereafter recommend to Congress that such independence be granted."

bien a traves del control financiero y de las ventajas comerciales. Los grupos agro-exportadones, por su parte mantuvieron su dominio interno a través de la apropiacion concentrada delas tierras y la sobre-explotacion de los campesines.

3 — Expansión de la Hegemonia Norteamericana en América Latina.

Desde fines del siglo XIX y conincidiendo con la concentración monopólica financiera e industrial en los países capitalistas industriales, Estados Unidos desplaza progresivamente a Inglaterra como metrópolis hegemónica en América Latina. A diferencia del control inglés del siglo XIX, la dominación norteamericana descansa cada vez más en el control director de los sectores estratégicos, de producción ninera y agrícola. De este modo, los tradicionales grupos mineros y agrícolas pierden el poco control que tenían sobre los sectores exportadores.

4 — Consolidación de las Hegemonía Mundial de Estados Unidos Y Control de las Corporaciones multinacionales de la Industrialización Latinoamericana.

El debilitamiento del capitalismo mundial en las dos guerras mundiales y la depresión de los 30, obliga a las clases dominantes latinoamericanas a orientar la producción hacia el mercado interno. Estas circunstancias permiten por un tiempo, en algunos países latinoamericanos, un grado de desarrollo industrial bajo el control de las burguesías locales.

Sin embargo, esta situación empieza a cambiar a partir del fin de la segunda guerra mundial, con el ascenso de Estados Unidos como centro hegemónico indiscutible el capitalismo mundial. Un rasgo distintivo de este período es la enorme concentración del capital en la forma de corporaciones multinacionales con base en Estados Unidos y con operaciones que penetrant en todas las sociedades capitalistas, incluyendo las más avanzadas.

En América Latina en particular, las operaciones de estas corporaciones reflejan una nueva forma de dominio económico.

Salvdos Victoriosos A Vietnam

Las tropas revolucionarias de Viet-Nam tomaron posesion de lo que ahora se llama Ciudad de Ho Chi Minh. El inevitable triunfo pone fin a una guerra de decenas de anos. Ademas, unifica el territorio vietnamita. Pone, tambien, de manifiesto cuan debil se encuentra el imperialismo capitalista.

Deseamos todo tipo de parabienes al gobierno revolucionario del pueblo vietnamita. A la misma vez, recordamos que esa victoria es tambien producto de la solidaridad de los pueblos explotados. La derrota de las fuerzas mercdnarias en Viet-Nam demuestra que la perseverancia revolucionaria es una necesidad.

Pero, el imperialismo no ha caido. Sigue activo y opresor en otras partes del mundo. Y no puede haber un hombre libre sobre la faz de la tierra mientras haya un esclavo.

En Torno A "La Carreta"

Por Prudencio Mojica

El tema o el asunto en la Carreta, se relaciona con la vida de una familia campesina. En su trayectoria del campo al arrabal y del arrabal a la metrópoli, se puede notar un círculo de incertidumbre al cual los personajes están sujetos. El autor René Marquéz, nos deja indecisos ante un panorama de caladmidades y sufrimientos por los cuales ésta familia pasa atravez de sus experiencias en busca de un mejor vivir económico.

René Marquéz, expone la obra clara y sencilla tratando de que el lector se entretenga y busque los problemas de la familia en términos de su propio destino y no como consecuencia de la influencia politica de su propia isla. Se puede uno dar cuental del desahucio de esta familia de su propia tierra, pero no de los motivos que los llevaron a ello. Es como admirar el paisaje de lo bello de nuestra isla y no admirar sus detalles mas íntimos. La carreta es como un síbolo del pasado traído al presente y al final la conformidad.

La Carreta, como título se ajusta al contenido ya que la obra presenta a una familia en peregrinación usando la carreta como medio de travesía; representa un símbolo historico en Puerto Rico, también representa el sudor y la angustia de todo un pueblo sometido a la explotación por intereses privados.

René Marquéz, en su exposición parece que le echa la culpa de los problemas de la isla a consecuencia de la superpoblación, lo cual nos pone en duda acerca de la realidad existente, ya que solo puede haber superbolación para las estructuras políticas en orden economico y no en términos de espacio en la isla.

Para verificar esto solo debemos notar que en Puerto Rico existen miles de cuerdas sin habitar. Más aún, veremos que la distribución de tierras en Puerto Rico está dividida en desigualdad proporcional. Un pequeño grupo de riquitos son dueños de extensas partes de la tierra, mientras tanto la mayoria de los puertoriqueños tienen que vivir en las areas urbanas pagando alquiler.

René Marquéz, como la mayor parte de l s nativos que viajan al extranjero, despuéz de haberse convertidos en los llamandos intelectuales, solo pueden ver la pobreza y el sufrimiento reflejado en el campesinado y exponiéndolo por escrito quieren darle un matiz más de comformidad atravez de los cuales ellos mismos se ven envueltos convirtiendose en parias del systema capitalista.

El tema de la obra surge con la visita del autor a un barrio de una parte de nuestro querido suelo. En los momentos del surgimiento del tema el autor se encontraba filmando peliculas para programas del departamento de educación en Puerto Rico, lo cual le da indicios de conformidad con el presente systema politico.

Sin dejar de admirar la belleza de lo estético, lo literario, y la exposición de la obra; podemos notar una inquietud de definición en términos de solución a los problemas por los que pasa ésta familia campesina.

Don Chago, como personaje nativo representa la hombría y la virilidad del campesino puertoriqueño digno y merecedor de su tierra que lo vio nacer, muere como un desgraciado solo y abatido por la ausencia de su adorada familia. Este final de Don Chago, suena a pelicula de misterio y no se relaciona en nada al morir decente de un puertoriqueno.

Juanita, en la obra es parte de una nueva generación que representa la experiencia nativa juvenil, despuéz de sifrir las consecuencias ignoradas por ella, se impone a la desgracia y surge madura con valor definido a enfrentar el futuro y en busca de la verdad.

Doña Gabriela, la base de la familia; siempre en pie de guerra en contra de las calamidades que la acechan, se mantiene indomable a los problemas que la achacan. Firme en sus creencias y con unos valores morales que la ayudan a sobrevivir ante la vida de sufriminetos.

En contraste a la fuerza de-voluntad de Dona Gabriela, Luiz aparece debil, desgraciado y abatido por un pasado que nunca llega a saber. Bastardo por nacimineto ya que nunca supo las razones por las cuales tenia que pasar tantos sufrimientos; muere en una fabrica de carderos donde trabajaba. "Por eso."

La comformidad solo se ajusta a los parias. Los grandes y los valerosos se questionan y buscan la verdad a su alrededor.

CC manager spent eight free months in Hotel

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

A Campus Center Food Services manager spent eight months in the CC Hotel free of charge, although it was not provided for in his contract, the Collegian learned yesterday.

Phillip Amico, director of CC Food Services, is currently undergoing dismissal procedures by the Board of Governors (BOG) for 'misfeasance'' in the late billing of the wedding of Deborah Stefano, daughter of ex-CC Purchasing and Produce Manager Oliva ''Steve'' Stafano.

Robert W. Gage, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, said although there were no provisions in Amico's contract, he might have legitimately made a verbal agreement with John W. Corker, director of the Campus Center, to stay in the hotel.

Corker said he had made a verbal agreement with Amico, and it was ''part of Amico's conditions of employment that he could stay in a guest room for no charge from the time he was hired through June 1, 1974.''

Because Amico lived in Connecticut, Corker said, and because of long working hours, he was not able to commute daily to the Campus Center.

''The understanding was,'' he added, ''that Mr. Amico would sell his house and move up here. Because he had children in school, and because major remodelling of his house had to be completed before he moved, there was no way physically possible for him to move before June 1.''

Corker said the agreement existed ''on an empty room basis.'' If the hotel filled up, Amico would have to move out or pay for his room.

''Mr. Amico still had not sold his house by June 1,'' he continued, ''so we extended this arrangement until September I. He still hasn't sold the house, but he's been living in an apartment in town since September.''

Corker said other Campus Center employees have stayed overnight at the Campus Center Hotel free of charge, including Stefano, Auxiliary Service manager Karl Clay, Assistant Food Services Director Edward Hadley, and Assistant Building Operations Manager Edward J. Kelly.

''The Campus Center has always had an unwritten policy,'' he continued. ''If a staff member is required to stay late, he gets a free room.

Wood says no to budget cuts

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

WORCESTER — UMass President Robert C. Wood yesterday refused again to submit to a ten percent meat cleaver slash in the state's higher education budget as proposed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Wood's comments were made to UMass trustees at their regular monthly meeting here at which they also approved tenure for 46 Amherst campus professors, recognized SGA President John W. O'Keefe as student trustee to succeed Rick Savini, and heard a committee chairman report on student unionization.

''I must say again that flat, percentage cuts across the board are clumsy, ineffective ways to reduce budgets,'' Wood told trustees meeting at the Medical School here, adding that such cuts would mean ''layoffs, admission curtailments and cutbacks in all service areas.''

Wood said all three campuses are already working on budget reductions by programs not by percentages. ''I must say there is no way to achieve cuts of this magnitude in addition to the austerity measures we have already undertaken,'' Wood said.

Gov. Dukakis told 3,000 UMass students in the Student Union Ballroom Monday night that he wants to see a ten percent cut in this year's $101.4 million UMass budget, but he said he was certain the cut wouldn't affect educational quality or student services.

He pleaded with students to bypass the administration and help Education Secretary Paul Parks and he to make the program cuts in way that will be most beneficial to students — not administrators.

Tuesday, O'Keefe, 25, a junior from Medford, told the Collegian he had put together a committee to look over budget documents and recommended slashes to Dukakis at a meeting set for next Thursday in Boston.

Demonstrating great willpower, students filled the library yesterday sacrificing sun tans and good times outside.

''We have everything from conservatives to anarchists on the committee,'' O'Keefe said at yesterday's trustees meeting, a-ding no one on it is ''pro-administration.''

Asked if he thought Dukakis was trying to devide students and administration, O'Keefe said: ''That's a possibility, but I'm not going to form any decisions until I sit down with him''

Trustee chairman Joseph P. Healey said he would gladly accept student input into revising next year's $118 million budget request downward.

''The trustees have to take an overview that may not coincide with students or administration'' he said of the cuts.

Both he and Wood acknowledged that the legislature and the Dukakis administration underlings may actually be preparing to hold the UMass budget at this year's level — not chop it another ten percent.

But they declined in interviews to say what effect a hold-the-line approach might have.

Minutes of a trustee budget committee meeting in April, released yesterday, show that

For the first time in its five-year history, the Top of the Campus (TOC) Club will reflect a majority of students on its Board of Directors. Eleven UMass students and one faculty member were elected to the board at the TOC Club's annual meeting last night.

Following a brief confrontation between meeting Chairperson Myers, outgoing TOC president, and the crowd of Club members over Myer's order to lock the door, nominations were accepted from the floor.

A slate of eleven candidates for director positions was offered by Tony Tartaglia, who served as clerk of the TOC Club last year. All the nominees on the slate offered by Tartaglia were elected by the crowd of 85 Club members present.

The students elected were Tony Tartaglia, president; Michael Gregory, vice-president; Paul Hamel, treasurer; David Booker, clerk; Dorrit Kinder, Frank Cotter, Richard Savini, John Hays, James O'Brien, and Jeffrey Taggart. Norman Cournoyer, faculty member in the department of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration was the only non-student elected to the board.

The start of the election was delayed pending an appeal from the floor concerning Myer's decision to have the room sealed.

Myer's said, ''This is a non-appealable act from the floor.'' After further discussion and a review of Roberts Rules of Order, Myers amended his decision to only have the doors locked during the actual vote counting.

Tartaglia said after his election as president, ''I would first like to assure everybody that I will not put the TOC liquor license in jeopardy. I will also insure the orderly transition of power.''

''I am really happy about the election. It is about time that the students were in charge again,'' he added.

Tartaglia said he would try to work with the Department of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration in the running of the TOC. he said, ''I intend to work with Norman Cournoyer about Hotel and Restaurant Management students doing the managing.''

WMUA summer in money danger

By MIKE FAY

Award winning UMass radio station WMUA, short of salary funding may suspend broadcasting this summer.

Funds for operating the radio station have already been allocated, WMUA Program Director Scott Bacherman said. Operating costs include electrical power and materials and supplies.

Bacherman said, "WMUA is asking for $6,250 for the summer. This is the minimum the station can run on." They money, he said, would be used to pay for nine full positions at the station.

Without people to run the station, he continued, WMUA will go off the air. "Forcing WMUA to leave the airways would be a gross injustice to the people who depend on our services," Bacherman added.

WMUA has been on the air 365 days a year for the past three years. The WMUA listening area covers Vermont, the Pioneer Valley and Western Mass throughout the Berkshires. It broadcasts 7 days a week, 24 hours a day. Sunday mornings the station has been off the air.

Summer funding for WMUA salaries must be approved by the Summer Activities Trust Fund (SATF). Bacherman said a budget proposal was submitted to SATF Staffer James Riley.

Riley said the SATF advisory committee will convene next week to consider the WMUA budget proposal. He said, "Money is very tight." Riley added, "I think the chances for approval are good."

Final authority for approval of the WMUA budget request rests with Dr. William Venman, director of Continuing Education. Venman will oversee the entire summer program at UMass.

Venman expressed concern for the availability of funds for all programs this summer. But he said, referring to WMUA, "We certainly owe them support. They do a good job."

UWC discusses Third World, Lesbians

By ANN EMERY
Staff Reporter

This is the fourth part of a five part series reporting the results of the 1975 University Women's Conference, which was held January 21-25 at UMass. Part Four continues the issues and recommendations of another area of workshops called "Alternatives And ... " It includes three sections: Third World Issues, Lesbianism, and Political Issues.

THIRD WORLD ISSUES:

Third World issues represent a particular group of women on campus whose needs and concerns are at times congruent with, and at times distinct from, those of non-third world women, as well as a focus on these issues by all University women. The selection in this area in terms of proposal solicitation and evaluation is, in part, sparse. But it is also a statement of a problem.

It is problematic: the attempt to reach out, to find and stand on common ground, the attempt to learn from and share with each other, while being sensitive about non-third world women's own "homework," our own lack of awareness, our own racism.

There is a history within the Women's Movement on campus of third world and white women's attempts to come together, as well as misunderstanding and instances of conflict. In planning the conference, a sincerely energetic attempt was made to include workshops for and by third world women specifically, as well as for white women concerning racism awareness. Nonetheless, the percentage of workshops with that focus was low, 7 per cent, including 3 racism awareness workshops, 4 offerings by members of the Poor Women's Task Force, and one focusing on Puerto Rican women, drawing a total of 115 women.

Overall attendance by third world women was not greater than an estimated 7 per cent. Although it is not possible to evaluate why this is the fact, these figures highlight a key, and often painful, question: How much separateness, and how much unity?

LESBIANISM:

Attendance at the three workshops concerning Lesbianism was two to three times that of the

SCER offers four fall social research courses

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY
Staff Reporter

For those interested in studying and-or participating in educational and social research, the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) will be offering four courses for their fall program, according to Lawrence Magid, director of SCER.

The first course entitled "Student Interest Research Practicum" will introduce students to various methods of social and educational research and will apply research skills towards studying the University. The emphasis is on action-reform oriented research. Students will collect and analyze data about the institution's policies, programs, departments and agencies. Some research will be published by SCER or summarized in the Collegian.

Data will be used by decision makers within student government, the administration, the faculty and the state. This, according to SCER, is a chance to learn research skills while putting them into actual practice. This is a three credit course, says SCER.

The second course that SCER is offering is an independent study, from 1-6 credits, to study University policies. Students will work with SCER members Larry Magid, Doug Moreton, and others.

SCER's third course of study is called "Inreach," which is a full time internship within the University. Students are encouraged to create a job within SCER to study the University. Students can arrange this program for full time credit by working with Magid and a faculty sponsor. Students in this program are to be involved in research coordination, that is, to take an area of study and be responsible for that area.

The fourth program available is Term Paper Research. Students who are taking any course may come to SCER for information on topics that are relevant to issues on this campus, says SCER. SCER can provide students with information, contacts, and topics. According to SCER, student's work will be carefully considered, edited, and possibly published by the center. SCER can arrange credit through their own staff or by negotiating with a professor in your department.

For more information to these programs you can stop by SCER, 432 Student Union, or call them at (54)5-2892.

46 UMass profs granted tenure

By DEBBIE SCHAFER and BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporters

WORCESTER — "Radical" economist Michael H. Best was among 46 UMass-Amherst professors who were granted tenure by trustees at their meeting yesterday here.

UMass President Robert C. Wood said in written memos that 49 professors had been recommended for tenure by the campus administration. One was deferred for a year, and two others were not granted tenure pending a review of their situation.

Wood said after the meeting that about 56 percent of the Amherst campus faculty is now tenured. He has said in the past that the figure, higher than national norms, must be held down in order to maintain "flexibility" and provide for "institutional need."

Administrators fear that too many tenured faculty will make it difficult to adapt to changing enrollment patterns among different departments, adding professors here, taking them away there.

Tenure is the award of job security to professors who have taught at least seven years. Considered a guarantee against arbitrary dismissal for political or academic views, the award is considered fundamental to academic freedom.

Best, in a telephone interview last night, said: "I believe my receiving tenure was due to student support, more than any other factor." He cited his consistently good teacher evaluations, adding that he "had a good solid case for tenure."

Although he was "quite happy and pleasantly surprised with the favorable tenure decision" Best expressed concern with other faculty members who face the same situation as himself. "I'm happy to have job security, but when 10 percent of people are unemployed it doesn't make me too happy," said Best.

"I believe that my receiving tenure was due to student support, more than any other factor." said Michael Best, "radical" economist who was granted tenure yesterday.

In addition to the 46 tenure approvals, five professors from other institutions were offered tenured positions at UMass-Amherst.

Among them was Dr. Vincent Dethier, 61, a Princeton University zoologist and member of the National Academy of Sciences. Dethier is understood to be willing to accept the offer as Gilbert L. Woodside professor of zoology.

Paul R. Halmos, 60, described as an internationally known teacher of mathematics, was offered the George Birkhoff Professor of Mathematics chair, to succeed retiring Dr. Marshall Stone. Halmos is now at Indiana University. He has not yet decided whether to accept the offer, according to one UMass zoology professor.

The other tenured positions offered were:

— A mathematics professorship to John R. Van Ryzin, 41, now on the staff of the Army Math Research Center at the Univ. of Wisconsin-Madison campus.

— An economics post to Donald W. Katzner, 36, a UCal-San Diego lecturer who would be brought to Amherst to rebuild the area of microeconomic theory in that department.

— Also, Perdue sociologist Andy B. Anderson, 35, to a similar post here.

The Boston campus gained 16 tenured professors, out of 23 recommended by the campus, and an additional one position offered to an outsider. Two positions were offered at the Medical School, and five professors there were granted tenure.

The following is a list of tenure appointments on the Amherst campus. The professor's name is followed by his department:

Zoning to be voted on tonight

PCP proposals defeated at Amherst Town Meeting

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

The Progressive Candidates Pool (PCP) amendment, proposing to allow six unrelated people to live in a single dwelling unit, was defeated at last night's Amherst Town Meeting.

The town meeting failed to reach a vote on the proposed zoning by-law, article one on the warrant, after two nights deliberation. The final decision on the adoption of the by-law will be made tonight at Amherst Regional Junior High.

At the four-hour meeting, the Amherst Planning Board described proposals of the zoning by-law. Intermittedly, town meeting members introduced amendments that were either approved or defeated.

Member George Scheurer angrily stated "I'm not proud of this group tonight." He said rather than talking about the minimum standards of sanitary conditions, town meeting members were discussing the regulation of other people's morality. He then proposed, an amendment later defeated, which opted for deleting the entire Planning Board Amendment dropping all restrictions for the number of household members related or unrelated.

Mark Benoit, PCP town meeting member, said "the amendment can be presented and voted on again when the entire warrant one article is voted on tomorrow night." We will probably work on a parking proposal to go along with this amendment he said, since that was the main opposition to the amendment.

John Noulent, town meeting member from precinct 2, proposed another amendment which stated the area in the fraternity park district be changed from an educational zone to its present town residence status. Noulent said, "We like the present area the way it is and don't want to change it."

The educational districts permits the height of buildings in the area to be 80 feet while the town residence zone allows buildings to be only 40 feet high.

The motion was defeated with 115 to 81 votes. The main objection against the amendment was that fraternities and sororities would be permitted in the future to be built in any zone.

The motion petitioned by Floyd Bailey, UMass student, moved that the town meeting vote to amend the proposed zoning by-law, prohibiting more than four unrelated people from residing cooperatively in one dwelling unit, by striking the word four in the first sentence and inserting the word six.

Lisa Alberghini, town meeting member from precinct seven who read the proposal, said that many structures could house six people and this would help alleviate the housing shortage in Amherst.

Several older town meeting members objected to the proposal saying that six unrelated people living in one house would cause sanitary and parking problems.

After the zoning by-law is voted on tonight, discussion on the other 76 warrant articles to be voted on will commence. The meeting is expected to continue next Monday and Wednesday nights.

Student Senate votes SAC $500 for future expenses

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night in its final meeting of the semester voted to allocate $500 to the Student Action Committee (SAC) to cover future expenses. It was stipulated that playment of the money would take place "only after all bills and monies collected have been placed in proper written form and handed in to the treasurer's office."

In other business, John O'Keefe was sworn in as SGA president and the senate defeated two motions including an amendment to the Affirmative Action Policy.

The meeting was held in Hampden commons in Southwest, as part of Senate Speaker John Hite's plans to hold senate meetings in different residential areas on campus.

The SAC motion was the subject of much debate, due to questions concerning the past handling of funds by the SAC. Student Senator Martin Miller urged support for the SAC, saying that the SAC and the senate "have got to work together to know what we're doing."

O'Keefe was sworn in as president by outgoing President Rick Savini. "I see my job as a catalyst for ideas, not as a person who makes policy," O'Keefe said in his opening remarks before the senate.

He viewed a major problem at the University as being "the lack of a holistic approach to anything, there is not enough cooperation towards common educational and community goals," he said.

As SGA president, O'Keefe said he hopes to work towards a student union with collective bargaining power. "Students should work together collectively," he said.

The senators defeated 33-9 the motion to adjust the Affirmative Action Policy to include veterans, gay women, gay men, and the handicapped. It was generally agreed that the amendment was unnecessary because the policy was originally written to include all minority groups.

The senate also defeated a motion which would give the University Judiciary "the power to authorize a search and seizure or other designated act, within the scope of the SGA constitution."

Speaking against the motion, Senator Henry Ragin said that "Police state tactics should be left to the police, and not to students."

A motion was passed that the senate support the proposed building of the John F. Kennedy Library in Amherst.

Motions were made and passed to appoint Student Senate Committee chairpersons. Results were as follows:

—Rents and Fees Committee, Ken Somers chairperson

—Governmental Affairs Committee, Tracy King chairperson

—Communications Committee, Tony Armelin chairperson

—Organizing Committee, Sue Rivest chairperson

The meeting adjourned at 10:35 p.m., due to lack of a quorum.

Saigon life reportedly returns to normal

Dispatch is first since fall of Saigon

By United Press International

The first UPI dispatch filed from Saigon since its fall to the Communists a week ago said yesterday life had returned to normal in the capital but there was still no formal government or police force. It said security was "more or less on the honor system."

The dispatch, written by UPI Saigon bureau chief Alan Dawson, said there was speculation of a political struggle between hardline Communists, particularly Hanoi government officials, and the softer Viet Cong. But he said there was no confirmation of this.

He said that according to this speculation, the Viet Cong apparently wanted to give non-Communists some representation in the government, but the North Vietnamese were against this.

"There were no reported Viet Cong reprisals, and life in Saigon returned to normal within 48 hours of the Communist takeover," reported Dawson, one of five UPI newsmen who remained behind after Communist forces took over the South Vietnamese capital April 30.

"Security in the city has been more or less on the honor system since then with only the threat of rumored swift curbside justice by Communist forces holding back looting and hooliganism," his dispatch said.

Dawson's dispatch was in the form of a commercial cable from Saigon by way of Hanoi to the UPI Hong Kong bureau, from where it was relayed to UPI headquarters in New York through regular facilities. The cable was timed 12:45 May 7. The Vietnamese capital is 12 hours ahead of Eastern Daylight Time.

The regular UPI circuit between Saigon and Hong Kong was cut Wednesday morning, April 30.

Dawson reported the Saigon black market was still open — with Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops shopping for goods looted from the American px. He said Communist soldiers could be seen chatting amiably with civilians.

"Saigon continued in many ways to be the wide-open city it was during the past 30 years of warfare," he said.

Dawson's dispatch said that a week after the Communist takeover there was still no police force in Saigon and many thousands of Communist troops who at first had wandered or patrolled the streets in the first days after the liberation, had withdrawn outside the capital.

He said banks were still closed a week after the Communist takeover, and black market currency dealings were flourishing.

Viet Cong directives put civil servants back on their previous jobs, although Communists now hold the major positions, the dispatch said. But it added that no important members of the previous pro-American governments had emerged as pro-Communists in the new administration.

A new newspaper, Saigon Giai Phong (Saigon Liberation) appeared for the first time last Sunday. It had a picture of Ho Chi Minh on the front page plus an analysis of how the Vietnamese people had defeated American imperialism.

Beginning 30 hours after liberation, seven huge fireballs from exploding ammunition dump nine miles east of Saigon lit the sky and rocked Saigon. There was no explanation as to which side blew up the ammunition.

Indochina developments

Ford opens campaign

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford opened a personal campaign to convince Britain, Australia, New Zealand and America's other allies that despite Vietnam, the United States will stand by them around the world.

The President scheduled successive White House conferences throughout the day with New Zealand Prime Minister Wallace E. Rowling, Australian Prime Minister E. Gough Whitlam, and British Prime Minister Harold Wilson.

Foreigners evacuate

ARANYAPRATHET, Thailand [UPI] — The second and probably last convoy of foreign refugees coming out of the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh has reached a point close to the Thailand frontier, Khmer Rouge officials said yesterday.

The full story of what happened during the Communist takeover of Cambodia is expected to be told once the last group of refugees reaches safety.

The convoy-expected to include at least 250 persons — had not reached this border crossing point before it closed at sundown today, and the Khmer Rouge gave no reason why it had not appeared.

Lon Nol criticized

CAMP PENDLETON, Calif. [UPI] — Saukham Khoy, acting President of Cambodia, until shortly before its fall, charged yesterday that President Lon Nol accepted bribes of $1 million to abandon his regime and flee Phnom Penh.

Khoy, one of 667 Cambodians in this refugee camp along with 14,155 Vietnamese, did not elaborate on the charge or say who gave the alleged bribe. Lon Nol left Cambodia two weeks before its fall to the Khmer Rouge.

House panel considers refugee resettlement

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Urged to keep "the American dream" alive for homeless immigrants, a House subcommittee yesterday drew up a grubstake bill to finance resettlement for Vietnamese refugees.

A House judiciary subcommittee began working out the general terms of legislation to give the refugees a new start by paying their transportation and initial resettlement costs.

The subcommittee left open the question of how much money would be authorized for this purpose, but Congress seemed unlikely to grant the $507 million sought by President Ford.

So far, 113,000 refugees have been evacuated.

Staff members of Sen. Edward Kennedy's refugee subcommittee said yesterday they want to find out whether President Ford has exceeded the power given him by Congress to admit Vietnamese to the United States.

"We are deeply concerned with the immigration side of this evacuation," said Dale DeHaan, a member of the committee staff. "There has been very little planning and organization."

De Hann said Kennedy's aim is to see that the United States carries out "this special obligation in a humane and decent way."

Government spokesmen attempted to take some of the controversy out of the resettlement issues yesterday by assuring Congress that refugees with criminal records would be weeded out and perhaps even put into "detention."

They also said the United States was pressing the United Nations and other international agencies to help resettle some refugees elsewhere.

Rep. Peter J. Rodino urged the judiciary subcommittee to ignore public sentiment against the refugee influx and write up resettlement legislation quickly.

"We must extend the national hand of welcome as we did to European refugees after the Second World War," Rodino said.

"Our national response to the plight of these unfortunate people is not a matter of partisan difference. When this country forgets its immigrant heritage...we will indeed have written 'finis' to the American dream."

In all, about 120,000 refugees will be admitted into the United States. And a few thousand more caught up in the last-hour chaos could still turn up seeking a haven, officials said.

Only about 12,000 of the refugees-wives, children and in-laws of Americans or those with American friends — have been processed through the camps and started new lives around America.

A special toll-free line to the State Department was jammed with calls from persons offering refugees housing, jobs or money.

A resettlement official said if all goes well, refugee camps at Camp Pendleton, Calif., Ft. Chaffee, Ark., and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., could be emptied and the refugees resettled in three months.

Sargent criticizes Dukakis charges

BOSTON [AP] — Former Gov. Francis W. Sargent said yesterday it is the job of the Dukakis administration to immediately detail charges of corruption made this week.

"It was a cheap shot," Sargent said in an interview. "The scapegoat is the old familiar game in politics.

"It's up to him to outline what the hell he is talking about."

"I thought it was a low blow," Sargent said.

The Republican Sargent responded to a statement by Democratic Gov. Michael S. Dukakis that the new administration inherited a "legacy of corruption" from the previous administration.

Dukakis said yesterday that he made a public statement about corruption in state government because he is concerned that developments may taint his administration.

"The longer we go in this administration, the more likely it is that people will attribute it (corruption) to the present administration," Dukakis said in an interview.

One day after saying publicly that his administration inherited "what may be a legacy of corruption," Dukakis said that he plans to "develop an internal capacity to deal with this problem."

"I think pretty soon the honeymoon will be over," Sargent said "and what is he Dukakis going to do about things?"

Meanwhile, Republican State Committee Chairman John Sears defended Sargent's record and accused Dukakis of floating a "corruption balloon."

"We've had a budget trial balloon," Sears said, "and now we've got a corruption balloon."

Sears said the Republican party will come to the former governor's defense soon with a public statement.

Graduated income tax will be on 1976 ballot

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Legislature yesterday gave final approval to a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the state to impose a graduated income tax and initial approval to an amendment which would bar forced school busing.

The tax amendment now automatically goes on the state ballot in November of 1976 for voter ratification.

But the busing amendment must be approved by the legislature again after the 1976 election before it can go on the ballot.

That means the busing amendment — which would prohibit school assignments on the basis of sex, race, color or national origin, cannot go on the ballot until 1978.

The busing bill was approved on a vote of 186 to 82. The vote on the tax amendment was 229 to 41.

The House and Senate voted as they met jointly as a constitutional convention.

So far, graduated tax amendments have made it onto the ballot three times, but have been defeated by the public each time.

A graduated tax has been opposed by businesses, but Gov. Michael S. Dukakis plans to actively campaign for its approval next year.

Dukakis believes a graduated tax is a necessary tax reform in the state.

A graduated income tax would impose a higher rate of taxation on higher incomes. The federal income tax is graduated.

After acting on the graduated tax and busing amendments, the legislature recessed its constitutional convention until next Wednesday.

NE unemployment up

BOSTON [AP] — Unemployment rose in New England from 11.2 per cent in February to 11.7 per cent in March, the U.S. Labor Department said yesterday.

Wendell D. Macdonald of the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics regional office, said there were 660,800 unemployed workers in the six states in March, an increase of 32,900 over February.

There were 370,900 unemployed in March 1974, for a rate of 7.1 per cent.

The rates do not take into account normal seasonal variations.

Welfare rolls gain

WASHINGTON [AP] — The government announced yesterday that rising unemployment pushed the nation's welfare rolls up 1.3 per cent in January, the largest monthly increase in more than three years.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare said the 11,147,071 persons receiving Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) during the first month of the year was just 8,888 short of the all-time high in March 1973.

Rolls had been dropping steadily from March 1973 until August 1974 when they began rising again. The pace accelerated as the economy worsened, with the addition of 123,100 recipients last December and 141,447 in January.

Nuclear review hit

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — The President of Central Maine Power Co. said yesterday two bills calling for greater state review of proposed nuclear plants "constitute an insurmountable obstacle to the future development of nuclear energy in the state of Maine."

Elwin W. Thurlow, head of Maine's largest electrical utility, said nuclear energy is the most acceptable alternative to oil-generated power, both from the standpoint of environmental and economic impact.

Thurlow's call for increased nuclear development came at an Energy Committee hearing on two bills, one to require legislative approval of any proposed nuclear plant and another to create a nuclear power plant review committee to rule on proposals.

Senate debates CPA

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Legislation to create the Consumer Protection Agency (CPA) began what may be a swift course through the Senate yesterday when backers stepped in to head off a repeat of the filibuster that killed the plan last year.

As foes of the idea warmed up another attack, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield announced that a petition to cut off debate on the bill would be filed tomorrow.

This year, with President Ford already expressing opposition to what he considers an unnecessary addition to the federal bureaucracy, senators opposed to the bill had not planned a filibuster as such.

Doctors remain out

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Striking doctors yesterday rejected a legislator's recommendation that they go back to work and predicted five hospitals would be bankrupt if their boycott of operating rooms lasts another week.

"We're still not working except for emergency cases," said Dr. Donald Walker, who is a member of a special "crisis committee" spearheading the stop work protest by anesthesiologists that began a week ago.

CCEBS Career Day

The second annual Minority Career Day, sponsored by CCEBS, is being held Friday, May 9th, at the New Africa House Lounge, on the University of Mass campus. The free career day is for all western Massachusetts third world students to come and explore opportunities available to them.

The career will run from 10:00 to 5:00. During that time business, industry, military, federal government and graduate school representatives will be available to answer questions and to discuss opportunities in their respective fields for minorities. Various handouts on job searching techniques will also be available to those who attend.

The lovely and wonderful Queen Mother Moore, distinguished guest speaker at the Black Women's Conference.

Queen Mother Moore

The wonderful, beautiful, and dynamic speaker and freedom fighter, Queen Mother Moore will be delivering a message tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Malcolm X Room (Southwest).

Workshops will be held also that day in New Africa House, with Sisters Sheafio and Nsinga. The Black Women's Conference is sponsored by the Union of Third World Women and Central Area Third World Women Center. The Conference is free and open to the general public. Durfee Conservatory

The tropics visit UMass

By SUSAN BLETHEN
Staff Reporter

Durfee Conservatory is a place you may have passed many times in your travels around campus without even noticing it. But this greenhouse is one place you shouldn't miss.

Passing through the doors of the main entrance, you enter into a world of lush greenery, so overwhelming that it takes a moment to adjust your eyes to the scene. Huge tropical plants mingle around a central pool and reach up to the ceiling. Here are plants from every area of the world: Spanish Moss from Chile, Large Lady Palms from South China, and Mexican Breadfruit from South Mexico and Guatemala. Two smaller rooms, containing plants as various as those in the central room, are attached to each end of it.

How did these plants get here? Over the years, many have been donated by friends, and others were bought.

Durfee has been in existence since 1868, though the present structure was built only 20 years ago. The original, which was attached to the president's office was torn down in 1955, when the office burned down.

Though the plants themselves offer enough inducement to visit, there is an extra something to be found at Durfee — friendliness. This is provided in large amounts by a man named Alex Montgomery.

Alex, who has run the Conservatory for the past 13 years, says he enjoys his work for two reasons: he likes plants, and he likes people. He's usually found surrounded by students who've come not only to tour the greenhouse, but also for advice on caring for their own plants.

Looking around at the immense variety of plants, you wonder how anyone could remember so much about all of them. Alex shrugs and smiles and tells how he has been learning about plants since his childhood. In fact, the occupation seems to run in the family. His greatgrandfather, worked as a gardener in Scotland, and Alex's own father ran a greenhouse in Natick, Massachusetts.

Though Alex does most of the work himself, he has help from students who volunteer their time for the upkeep of the greenhouse. The work includes keeping the roof white-washed from April to November to prevent the plants from being burned by the strong sunlight. Many of these naturally grow in the shade of other plants, so they need this protection.

In recent years there has been a lot of interest in the subject of communication with plants. Many people believe that talking to houseplants helps them to grow. Alex says,

"Who knows? I think there's something to it."

He feels that success in growing plants probably depends on the attitude of the grower toward plants and people.

When asked whether he himself talks to the greenhouse plants, he replies, with a laugh, "Yes, but first I look to see if anyone is around."

Recently, Alex has become something of a celebrity. Jenny French, a local artist, has painted him among his plants and her work is now on exhibit through May 4 at the George Walter Vincent Art Museum in Springfield.

Durfee is generally open from 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. weekdays, and every third weekend.

★Wood refuses to submit to Dukakis demands

Amherst budget director Warren W. Gulko said a hold-the-line budget of around $60 million for the campus would mean the loss of 1,000 student jobs and 200-300 layoffs of other personnel.

Healey and Wood refused to confirm such figures. But Gulko acknowledged yesterday in talking with a Collegian reporter that departments on campus are making contingency plans as a result of Dukakis' threats and because of general budget uncertainty.

Wood used the trustees' meeting to dispel one claim that was mentioned in the Dukakis town meeting Monday — that he owns a personal helicopter to ferry around the state.

Wood said he does not have a helicopter or any aircraft. He said he has, on four occasions over the last year, used a helicopter owned by the state's Aeronautics Commission when he is scheduled to be two places in a short period of time.

Healey said he hoped "we will get off . . . the general impression that the President works in quarters that are second only to the Taj Mahal."

On student unionization, trustee Student Affairs Committee chairman Alan D. Shaler of Easthampton reported for about five minutes about a meeting he held at Amherst last month with members of the Student Action Committee's negotiating team.

The meeting was in a Campus Center room between Shaler, Vice-Chancellor Robert W. Gage, the team, and about ten other interest people on April 22.

At the meeting, Student Organizing Project coordinator Douglas Phelps told the committee about unionzation plans and negotiating team members asked Shaler and the rest of the committee for support or non-support of the nine "demands" to trustees that were part of last week's boycott of classes.

Trustees also:

—OK'd the establishment of an Environmental Science major on the Amherst campus. The major program was approved by the Faculty Senate in March and can now start in the fall. It is being directed by Dr. Robert Coler.

— Reduced budgets in most other accounts in order to allot an additional $450,000 for salaries on the Amherst campus. The amount will make up in part for the state's refusal to grant cost-of-living increases to faculty or staff.

— Agreed to pay an initial $18,000 to the independent Boston auditing firm of Coopers and Lybrand for their review of grant administration procedures and School of Education funds begun as a result of the School's fiscal troubles. The C & L study is expected to cost about $47,000 at completion.

— Accepted President Wood's voluntary decision to take a five percent cut in his $50,000-plus salary over the personal objection of one trustee who abstained from the approval, saying he thinks Wood is doing a good job and shouldn't get a pay cut. The trustee was Gavin D. Robertson of Worcester.

★University women's conference conference average. The major issue identified by the participants, whether student, faculty, or staff, was the lack of a wide range of vital support services. Students, in particular, objected to the heterosexual bias of University services, and lack of sensitivity to Lesbianism as a legitimate and viable lifestyle.

This insensitivity is manifested not only by the parents and peers of lesbians, but also by University personnel who are supposed to be in helping positions. In addition, students objected to the prejudicial ignorance displayed in the classroom by some faculty.

All participants expressed a concern about feelings of social isolation and alienation within the community. Societal stigmatization of Lesbianism has enforced the low visibility of lesbians. The resulting lack of contact, communication, and role models among lesbians greatly hinders the change of personal growth. A great need was expressed for more events such as the conference, the formation of all-lesbian support and personal growth groups, and counseling for couples.

All participants expressed an immediate need for information on the legal status of lesbians. Another need is a reliable referral system for survival needs, such as housing, jobs, child care, etc.

Some of the needs identified can begin to be dealt with by lesbians themselves. As a result of the conference, plans are being made for a more extensive conference on Lesbianism, and Everywoman's Center has started to coordinate the formation of lesbian support groups and short-term counseling. A task group within the Women's Law Center has started to research laws affecting lesbians.

One recommendation made for the University community was training sessions to sensitize professional staff and faculty, as well as regular course offerings that deal with this lifestyle. Other recommendations made were encouraging graduate students and faculty to do research and teach in this area, and legitimizing and financially supporting peer counseling and the speaker's bureau of the Student Homophile League and Gay Women's Caucus, establishing them as part of the University's responsibility towards its population.

POLITICAL ISSUES:

The remaining workshops, grouped here arbitrarily under political were either primarily concerned with informational or conceptual politics, or with action politics. In the former category, "Women in Local Politics" shared their perspective and experience in local Valley politics. Experiential workshops using games and exercises raised issues of power, and of traditional vs. non-traditional structures. Another addressed designing alternative structures, another Socialist Feminism.

The action workshops focused specifically on the UMass campus. Women in key positions within the University shared, as a panel, their experiences and perceptions regarding their role. Two sessions were devoted to organizing clerical workers. The closing session of the conference was entitled "Building a UMass Women's Community," and while not designed with any particular focus, became a politically action-oriented session, with the formation of the University Women's Caucus.

Thanksgiving from Oxfam

Thank you so much UMass students for your generous donation of $1,550.09 to OxFam-America. It is through your support that we are able to underwrite long-range projects in countries such as Bolivia where extreme poverty, malnutrition and disease of the Aymara people is not due to dramatic events like drought and floods, but rather to centuries of neglect and lack of opportunities for education and access to agricultural know-how and credit.

After the 1953 Land Reform Law allowed anyone to claim up to 123 and one-half acres of land, many young Aymara Indians left their high-altitude, arid mountain homes to try their farming skills in the humid valleys. Separated from their ancestral traditions or work, religion and family, and without status, failure has been common.

OxFam-America is helping to finance an agricultural colonization effort for 350 families in the Montero area north of Santa Cruz. Aided by the Bolivian organization called DESEC and others, arriving families are introduced to new farming ideas through visits to experimental farms and learn about savings-and-loan cooperatives, and methods of well drilling and land clearing. Sanitation and disease prevention are taught, and women learn to cook and preserve new and nutritious foods. The success of this project and the adoption of similar programs in neighboring areas, can help the Aymara realize their dream of food, shelter and education for their children.

All of us here at Oxfam-America thank you for your donation. You can be sure that it is already at work helping people to help themselves.

Executive Director

Bob still wants your $$

"Bob still wants your ailing or decrepit car. Fast $$ for the hulk. 253-7967."

After refering to the above classified ad last December, my brother and I unfortunately did business with Bob Coven.

Without going into details we sold a car to Bob in December 1974 for $10. which he never picked up and it was subsequently towed from D & M Sunoco Rte. 9 where it was parked. Bob then disclaimed ownership and demanded his $10.00 back. We refused, claiming that we would use it to defray the $26.00 towing and storage charge which never would have been necessary had he diligently picked up the car as agreed. He then threatened to sue us. While at the time we thought that it was an empty threat on March 18, 1975 we received our court notice.

What bothered us most of all was the amount and reason of the suit;" "...$250.00 and $3.55 court costs...balance due for car purchased." [quoted from our court notice]. To top the whole affair off, after going through the aggravation and added expenses preparing for the hearing, he had the gall not to show up. During this time we found out that suing falsely is possibly an act of attempted larceny, but we have not pursued this course of action.

As an alternative course of action we chose to inform the University community of the hazard of doing business with Bob. We are not stating that Bob does this with all his customers, but we would like to impress upon you to take every precaution when doing business with him.

Richard and Stephen Bartlett

Forgive us our presspasses

Recently the Collegian's Photo Editor, Dennis Conlon, made a statement in this space relative to the Emmett Kelly Jr. Circus which contained some inaccuracies. I would like to set the record straight. The decision not to give complimentary tickets to the Collegian was made by O.S.E. the working sponsor of the Circus. Perhaps in retrospect this decision was arbitrary. However, I believe that it was no less arbitrary then the coverage given to the Circus by the Collegian before Circus day. If you check your records, you will find that the Collegian was provided with a full press release, accompanying stories, and glossy photos in order that it would be able to do a story on the Circus to make the community aware of this once a year event. This material was apparently disregarded, as the only pre-Circus coverage in the Collegian was in the nature of an interview between a member of the Sylvan Collegian staff and chairman of O.S.E. and a small back page blurb on the Clown Workshop, made available through the efforts of the Circus sponsor. This lack of interest on the part of the Collegian is no less disturbing when one finds that the Hampshire Gazette took the time and the effort to publish a full story with photos a week before the circus was to arrive on campus.

Mr. Conlon also referred to "free advertising" which the Circus had received in past years when it was a "two day event". I respectfully submit that I have been working with the sponsors in the three consecutive years that the Circus has been performed on campus, and never has the Circus been performed on more than one day. Thus, there was never any question in my mind or the sponsors mind that there was such a thing as free advertising. As a matter of fact, O.S.E. submitted seven good size ads to be inserted in the Collegian beginning two weeks previous to the Circus performance. So anxious were they to do the proper amount of advertising that they even submitted an ad to be run on Monday, April 21, a day which the Collegian did not publish.

Mr. Conlon seemed to imply that the Circus sponsor and myself made a tidy profit for our efforts. Unfortunately, nothing could be further from the truth. In spite of many weeks of hard work, not enough Circus tickets were sold to cover our expenses. The gross expenses, less gross ticket sales, amounted to an approximate loss of $100.00. [O.S.E. has the exact figures]. The only organization that made money on the Circus day was the service organization, Gamma Sigma Sigma, which was able to turn a profit running the concession. So, Mr. Conlon, it does appear that a return performance of the Circus is in doubt, as it is hard to find an organization these days that is willing to work non-stop for four full weeks in order to lose money. In this case, thanks to the Commuter Assembly, the financial backer of the Circus, O.S.E. will not have to bear that $100.00 loss. Lastly, I would like to thank the Commuter Assembly and O.S.E. especially, for making it possible for the University to provide family entertainment to its community once again. I would also like to mention that although the residents of the Belchertown State School did not use all of the 100 tickets donated to them by O.S.E. and the Circus, we have received word that those who were able to come had a very enjoyable time.

Coup de TOC

Last night the students of this University made a statement that perhaps supercedes all of the drama and ribaldary that surrounded the rally in Boston last week and the charade of the Dukakis town meeting two nights ago.

In what can only be called a 'coup' students finally laid claim to the vast majority of positions on the Top of the Campus Club Board of Directors at last night's annual meeting.

Tony Tartaglia introduced a slate of eleven candidates for nomination and without exception these nominees rode to victory. The significance here lies in the abrupt distinction between these flushed victors and the stuffed-shirt, coat and tie types who have preceded them in years past as directors of the TOC Club.

As the 85 people who were present made their discontent with the past heard, many of them sat there ignorant of the tyrannical behavior of the now defunct president of the TOC Club, Attorney Sidney Myers. At six o'clock he called for the room to be sealed off by locking the door to anyone else. A cry of dismay from those present elicited a five minute delay while the question of why the room was being sealed was played out.

When attorney Myers called at five past the hour to again seal the room, the cry of dismay turned to disbelief and anger. Someone from the crowd said "What kind of democracy has closed meetings and wants to eject the press?" For indeed someone was heard calling for Collegian people to be removed, "for reasons of practicality".

Nonetheless, the students prevailed, the doors were thrown open to all, and elections were held despite the twisted interpretations of Roberts' rules of order by Chairperson Myers, and despite the apparent unwillingness of the outgoing regime to recognize that indeed students can and will do more than sit on the Common and "sing" for the Duke as some might believe.

With the ascention of power by students in the TOC Club there is no reason to expect that the will to persevere by students remains as strong as in the sixties, if only less violent and ever more sincere.

SOC it to SAC

By BRIAN HARVEY

As usual, things are not as they seem here at the citadel of higher learning. Underneath the slogans, symbols and caravans to Boston the foundations of Student Unity are showing signs of stress. It appeared, a few weeks ago, that students were spontaneously rising in opposition to the Dukakis meat-cleaver, an opposition spurred by the rally sponsored by the Coalition for a People's Budget. Rising, yes. But spontaneously . . .

There have been, for many months now, hired professional organizers on campus for the sole and express purpose of establishing a Student Union. They are the staff people of the Student Organizing Project, funded by the Student Senate Organizing Committee. They did not come here because of budget cuts, or tuition hikes, or fee increases. They came because the Student Government Association realized, a long time ago, that students were going to get the shaft forever unless they could obtain collective bargaining rights. This is as true now as it was then.

This is what the SOC has been working for all this time. This is what they would be working for today if there were no anticipated budget cuts or fee increases. But then came Mighty Mike, and the whole picture changed. No longer was the unionization timetable running independent of events. Suddenly, students were demonstrating their growing displeasure. This was welcomed by the Project with open arms, for this was just the kind of situation which called for their unique talents.

At the same time, however, the Student Action Committee was formed in response to growing dissatisfaction. With amazing rapidity it mobilized students for a series of events, culminating in the descent on the State House of last week. It did its job extremely well. But while the SAC is in favor of unionization, its priorities are not, and indeed could not, be the same as those of the SOP. The Project has but one function — not to respond to the inevitable instances of student exploitation, but rather to prepare the way for the organization of students into a union which can respond with much greater effect.

It is necessary to understand the backgroup of the Student Organizing Committee-Project and the Student Action Committee in order to understand the nature of the current problem. As might have been expected, the SOC and the SAC have come to blows, in a sense. The SAC wants membership on the SOC (which is presently carefully divided among the Senate, the SGA President, the area governments, and the campus media) to be opened up, with the intent of including, as one suggestion had it, any student who was interested enough to come to three meetings. This would, from the point of view of the SAC, be quite beneficial. It would give it greater influence, or even control, of the SOP staff and budget. This is not necessarily bad, but it must be remembered that the two committtees do two different things.

The membership of the SOC was not formulated to exclude people; it was just set up to do a job that no one else wanted to do.It has been preparing the groudwork for unionization for over a year, doing the research, drafting the proposal, lobbying legislators, and lending its expertise to grass-roots organizing. This single-mindedness of purpose must be maintained if we are ever to get a union; the cause will not be aided by turning the Organizing Committee into an Action Committee. Of course the SAC has a legitimate and urgently needed function to perform, but not an an inchoate amalgam of alphabet soup. If we're ever going to get anywhere we need action; but for the moment we still need to organize.

Another moral right

"507 million dollars?" Startled Americans screeched the figure when they read their morning newspaper.

507 million dollars; that's what the bill will be for Uncle Sam to open his home, hands, and heart to 150,000 Vietnamese refugees.

The reaction of American taxpayers has been similar to that of a parent, when he picks up the tab for his off-spring's college. He didn't ask for it, but there is little he can do about, now.

Americans don't remember having their opinions considered when our present administration removed 150,000 refugees from Vietnam and invited them to make their homes somewhere between our economically sinking shores.

Our present government leader has a history of convincing the public that their voices make a difference to his administration. However, he continues to do exactly what he pleases (the pardon, oil taxes and other such deeds).

"A moral right" was the defense used when Mr. Nessen was asked by exactly what right the administration removed the refugees from Vietnam.

Well, the big arms of Uncle Sam can take in all, according to Mr. Ford. Though Americans are aware it is dangerous to send the Vietnamese back, they would like to be considered when they have to pick up the bill for 507 million dollars.

One can't say that Gerald Ford didn't have his own interest at heart, when he opened up his homeland to the Vietnamese. After all, that's another 150,000 supporters next election, for these newcomers are bound to vote conservative.

No one is quite sure what the government plans to do with these Vietnamese once they get here, but plans are under way for tent cities in Florida and California.

Mr. Ford also seems to have ignored some important questions: What is best for these people, and what is best for Vietnam?

Many of them have hardly a notion of the difficulties of making a new life for themselves in a country with a sinking economy and customs that are not familiar to them. Any delusions that the United States is a great country will disappear once they have been here for a while.

We're told that we don't have to worry about the characters of these people, for many of them are professionals, such as doctors and lawyers.

But exactly, what does Mr. Ford think that Vietnam will do, now, that they have lost so many doctors?

Most likely these refugees will become "Americanized."

They will have their eyes fixed so that any physical hint of oriental ancestry is gone. They will drive around in chevrolets, instead of bicycles.

They'll discover the 28 flavors of Howard Johnsons, and the delights of a McDonald's hamburger.

Eventually, their rice diet will be substituted for french fries.

And in a few years they will forget there ever was a Vietnam.

commentary

The heart of the matter is...

The United States signed the first Native American treaty in 1778 with the Delaware tribe at Fort Pitt and this was broken just a few months later. Over the next ten decades the U.S. ratified and proceeded to disregard 370 treaties with various Native American Nations.

> "They told us that they wanted only to use a little land, as much as a wagon would take between the wheels; but our people knew better. And when you look about you now, you can see what it was they wanted."
> John G. Neihardt
> Black Elk Speaks

Our country has a background of dishonesty and cruelty. European settlers landing on these shores were welcomed by "savage" natives without hostility and violence. These "uncivilized" peoples were willing to share their shelter and teach the visitors how to best utilize their lands resources for food and clothing. This greeting was repaid by the founder of our country sending five hundred Native Americans to Spain to be sold as slaves while the rest were brutally steered onto today's existing dusty and poverty-stricken reservations. The New World for the Native American has been a series of wars, disease, starvation, and re-education; resulting in the heartless dismantlement of a non-oppressive culture.

Native Americans have emphasized that they do not want to be taught how to be white, yet our government still continues to constrain them, trying to manipulate their life style and uproot them from their traditional homeland. Native Americans have voiced their need and strong desire for independence as a Sovereign Nation and are determined to keep their land and customs in defending their self-respect.

It is time now for America to join them, for it is our struggle as well. How can we in good conscience initiate improvements for society without first establishing a solid and credible foundation for our country? In supporting the Native American we are laying the first brick in an attempt to build a non-corrupt and humane world.

May 8, 9, and 10 is the Native American Symposium. In attending you'll be given the opportunity to understand more fully the goals of the American Indian Movement. Committees will be set up to deal with the various political issues confronting the Native American. All input is highly regarded and necessary. For more information please contact the Veterans Coalition Office, Rm. 411, Student Union.

Modern mythology

We as a culture have become a collective ego and in our unconscious efforts we have emerged as a nation of existentialists. And why? Because as the critics have always stated: "I know nothing of existentialism" and may I add that I don't care to persue the study. It is in this well-founded ignorance that we have sought our only outlet; our only break from the day-to-day dredgery of meaningless labor and hopeless pipe dreams.

To label it apathy would be only to confirm our mental paralysis; nor is it deep rooted in mortal inertia. It is the product of our great democratic system. We have voted to guise reality behind such employs as the "American dream" which is no more American than the myths from which it is resurrected.

We, the people, were supposedly abhord by Vietnam but refused to hand over the crown to a man who would have ended that war on his inauguration day. Instead we elected to prolong our escalation in Asia. In doing so we deified Richard Nixon; we consciously created a power-god and then succeeded in blaspheming him.

It is the people who make gods. It is in the people's image that mortals attain their hour of divinity. Consider the myth of Theseus, the Greek prince who slew the terrorizing Minotaur, ascended to the throne of Thebes, and finally was striken down by blind vengence he set against his son. The poets had built layer by layer a character "bigger than life" and then saddled him with human atrributes thus calling for his downfall.

Mythology makes for nice stories but perhaps there is much to be learned from them. In our blue blood bureaucracy we laud the magistrate who rises at six; dresses in denim; makes his own breakfast; and rides the MBTA to work. We praise him for what we are and then in turn knife him on the Capitol steps.

What do we want of our leaders? Or do we really care? Do we want golden idols or a man of the streets. It's time that we decide and aim our sites, and remember; Louis XIV was king, and king whether on the throne or on the commode.

Bawdy and soul exposed in 'hearts and Minds'

By CHRIST SMALLIS

"Hearts and Minds" is a movie that has come under caustic attack by movie critics who more often than not echoed each others' reviews, saying the movie smacks of sensationalism, or is merely an expose designed only to turn your stomach, or is just plain lacking in cinematic value.

How surprising it was then, when this same movie won the Academy Award for the Best Documentary of the Year. Hopefully this award will attract more people to see it.

Keep in mind that this film is a documentary, not some visual fiction story or a "dramatization" of past events. Everything in this film actually took place. It's all real, it all happened, and despite its "ugly" message, it's the most powerful alternative presentation of the history of U.S. involvement in Viet Nam since the printing of the secret Pentagon Papers.

The film's first main point is to dispel the myth that Viet Nam was just another testing ground for the spread of Moscow-brand Communism. During the late 40's and early 50's, and with the Korean War, there developed a hardening of narrowness of vision by U.S. policy makers and legislators. Communism was seen as the threat that was destined to engulf the world unless the U.S. met the threat and faced Communism head on.

What the U.S. tended to neglect were (1) the world was still a very large place composed of many nations, and (2) more of these nations chose to remain non-aligned with the major powers. Viet Nam was one of these nations, involved with its own problems. But as the U.S. saw it, if they weren't for "us," then they must be for "them." Ho Chi Minh's being a self-proclaimed Communist was really all this country needed to assume that Moscow and Peking were heavily involved there, so in we went.

CALMOS
Vietnam War R.I.P.

The second main point was the American people, even though they supported and paid for the war, either did not completely understand what it was all about, or did not want to hear anything other than the rhetoric. The same may be true today. This film played for one week at the Mountain Farms Mall, but attendance was said to be sparse.

Another main point was the U.S., through the use of carpet-bombing, defoliant spraying, village-burning and the like, was making hardened enemies out of the people in the South, and it is indeed self-defeating when the people you are supposed to protect are the very people who, by your own actions, have lost all faith in you and fight against you as well.

Unfortunately, "Hearts and Minds" was not released to the public sooner. That's the trouble with films like this. They never are exposed to the public until after the damage is done, though I don't think it's any fault of the filmmakers. But now that it is out, it should be seen by everyone. It is a pictorial account of how we would not have looked at ourselves while we were conducting America's longest and first losing war. Sure it's biased, and it's coming from a "certain" direction. However, we've for so long been exposed to the "righteous" viewpoint, which now cannot explain why we lost, if we were supposed to be the good guys. "Hearts and Minds" at least tries to explain that much.

Two engineering grads to be honored here

Two outstanding alumni of the University of Massachusetts School of Engineering will be honored at a Campus Center luncheon Saturday.

The occasion is the Engineering Honors Day program sponsored by the Engineering Alumni Association and Massachusetts Zeta Chapter of the engineering honorary society, Tau Beta Pi.

Engineering Alumni Association awards will be presented to Ardashus A. Aykanian, Class of 1950, and John R. Picard, Class of 1958. The former is a native of Whitinsville and was a long-time Mosanto Company research staffer before founding his own company, the Flexible Plastic Straw Corp. of Ludlow, in 1967. Picard is a Worcester native, and is now with the Albert C. Martin Co. of Los Angeles.

The luncheon speaker is Deputy Regional Administrator Kenneth Johnson of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

CCEBS Career Day Friday

The university community is invited to CCEBS Minority Career Day to be held tomorrow from 10 until 5 at New Africa House. Representatives from business, industry, government agencies, and placement agencies will be present and available to discuss opportunities within their fields and answer any questions which you might have. There will also be information available on job search techniques and financial assistance opportunities for graduate schooling. CCEBS wants to increase minority students' awareness of opportunities available to them and actively encourages all to attend this important event.

5-College native celebration

Today through Saturday, the Five College Native American Support Committee will be sponsoring a three-day Celebration of Native American Life and Culture. The three days will offer insights into contemporary Native America — insights seldom available in the Pioneer Valley. Participants will range from a traditional Oglala holy man to AIM leaders to people from Ganienkeh, and local peoples from the Wampanoag and Narragansett nations. The event promises to provide a deeper understanding of the beauty of the Native American struggle. Everyone is welcome and urged to attend.

Active health consumerism — recent phenomenon

By ANNE MELANSON
Staff Reporter

Active consumerism in the field of health is a phenomenon of the last five years, a result of the consumer movement, women's liberation, and recent legislation concerning patients' rights and malpractice.

"If you picked up a 'Consumer Report' five years ago, all it was concerned with was toasters and cars. In the past two years there have been five articles on consumer rights concerning health," said Jane Zapka, director of the Division of Health Education, UHS, speaking on "Women as Activated Consumers" yesterday at the fifth meeting of the Women's Health Series on campus.

Active participation in one's health care is, however, still in the first stages, especially concerning women.

Counselor Ann McCord of Everywoman's Center said that the "fear mechanism", a lack of knowledge of bodily functions, is still hindering many women from becoming active in the role of patient.

"Medicine must be demystified so we can be more atttentive to ourselves," she said.

Barbara Estabrook of UHS spoke on women's health care in a social action framework, citing it lack of priority on the government level. She said consumers should be taught to make the system work for them, specifically under the auspices of government Health Planning Boards.

"Physicians are human like us and they are not always right; we must take the initiative to question their directions through legal channels," she said.

The discussion was the last in a series by the Division of Health Education, UHS, in cooperation with Everywoman's Center.

Berger here to speak on wolf question

Dr. Charles Berger, Director of the North American Predatory Animal Center, along with Farley, an Alaskan Tundra wolf, will be here tonight. They will be in Maher Aud. at 7:30 p.m. Berger will present his own slides on his research with wolves and will also show an excellent film on wolves in the wild entitled "Death of a Legend".

Any questions can be directed to either Don Hanson at 546-6842 or Maryanne Boynton at 546-1144. Berger is being sponsored by UMass Student Chapter of the Wildlife Society. Admission is 50 cents for Society Members and $1 for everyone else. Come and see a live wolf!

Nature & Literature course

NATURE AND LITERATURE

Eng. 161 (sec. 2)
Bot. 190

Arthur Kinney — English
Carl Swanson — Botany

Reading list: Literature and Science: "The Humanist and Scientist — Modes of Perspective"

What makes a scientist — in today's world or at any time? About ten years ago, C.P. Snow defined "two cultures" — the humanities and the sciences — but are they really so distinguishable and so inseparable? This course, taught by a professor of English and a professor of Botany and offered jointly by the two departments, will use readings in the humanities — essays, poems, plays and fiction as well as selections of philosophy, music and art — and in the sciences — physics, botany, natural history and the philosophy of science — to see if humanists and scientists can tackle the same problems, think the same way, uphold the same values, and focus on the same concerns.

Selections in the humanities are from: Sontag, Shakespeare, Thoreau, Frost, Vonnegut, Beethoven, Picasso, and Klee and in the sciences from Heisenberg, Ziman, Leopold, Bronowski and Rachel Carson.

Required reading: 8 books, 2 essays. Writing: 2 five-page papers. No quizzes, no exams. The class is primarily a discussion class.

JFK Library group formed in Amherst

"Citizens for the John F. Kennedy Library at Amherst" has been formed by a group of local people to promote location of the library on the UMass campus, it was announced today.

Co-chairmen are Robert L. Klein, Michael J. de Sherbinin and Gerald J. Grady. The three signed a letter sent to each member of Amherst town meeting asking support for the library. Art. 8 asks a vote against locating it here.

Members of the committee, listed alphabetically, are: Randolph W. Bromery, Gerald P. Brophy, John F. Burns, Charles E. Chase, Betsy Chickering, Kenneth D. Cuddeback, Thomas Derderian, Richard M. Evans, Patricia Fischer, Joseph Frank, Duncan H. Fraser.

Also, Bradlee Gage, D.H. Jones, John Kosloski, Robert W. La Pointe, Polly Longsworth, James E. A. Lumley, Dan Melley, Bernard R. Moreau, Godwin Oyewole, Ted Peene, Kenneth Rosenthal, Andrew M. Stewart, Allen L. Torrey, William D. Tunis, Robert von der Lippe, Frank Zalot Jr., Joseph Zgrodnik.

Other proponents of the library are invited to add their names by contacting Citizens for the JFK Library at Amherst, Box 5, Amherst, Ma. 01002.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by stella wilder

Thursday, May 8 — Born today, you possess those gifts of character which suit you well for success in such fields of endeavor as politics, advertising, education. Highly persuasive, insistent, persistent, logical, you have little difficulty talking others into becoming disciples of your views. Where you may have difficulty, however, is in deciding precisely what your views are. For you are an extremely broad-minded individual and may be able to understand so many sides of a question or issue that you cannot choose among them.

An exceptionally loyal person, especially where matters of the heart are concerned, you can be counted upon to stand up for anyone to whom you have made a personal commitment. It is quite possible that you are one of those for whom there is only love of a romantic nature. You will have friends from among members of the opposite sex by the dozens -- but it may well be that you will give your heart but once.

A sensitive, intuitive person, you have a knack for predicting with considerable accuracy what the future has in store both for you and for those to whom you feel close. Although you are right to trust your intuitive knowledge, you will have to be on your guard against trusting it so much that you become fatalistic. Quite the opposite should be possible: if you can "see" into the future, you should be able to change what you don't like by changing the present.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Friday, May 9

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Although you may be tempted to slacken your effort as the work week ends, you would do well to keep up the pace. New gains at evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — New incentive for achievement should develop out of this day's activities. Don't disregard warnings: they are given with your interests at heart.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — As the present project draws to a conclusion, don't allow yourself or your enthusiasm to lag. New efforts are needed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Innovate in order to keep your interest in an old endeavor from fading at the last moment. Now is the time to begin expecting results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Lay your plans well and you will have no cause for regrets later in the month. Make sure your ideas are well-grounded in facts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Small efforts yield small results. Take care not to take offense at unintentional slights. Others may be as anxious not to err as you are.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Concentrate on those issues and affairs that can gain you new respect in the eyes of your peers. Co-workers arrive with problems in the morning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — If you are wise, you will allow no more time to pass before attempting to establish better relationships with family members living at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Single-mindedness can bring you in line with your goal before the day is out. Don't pretend not to know what another is talking about.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If you think the grass is greener on the other side of the fence, why not try it? To discover you were wrong might be best for you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — The success you gain by evening, if you are wise and quick enough to take it, may surprise you. New hobbies take on a profitable look.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Stretch your imagination and you may be able to come up with the answers to children's questions. All goes well on the home front.

Trackwomen falter; lack field strength

By SCOTT HAYES

The Sugarloaf women's track club, which is composed of runners who will form the nucleus of next year's track and cross country programs for women at UMass, suffered a pair of setbacks, Tuesday afternoon in Springfield.

The Cherokee Track Club (Springfield College athletes) won the tri-meet with 72 points while Fitch High School of Groton, Connecticut, finished second with 50½ points. The Sugarloaf trackwomen managed only 17½ points.

Coach Tom Derderian had only eight runners to work with and since there were no women to compete in the weight events (discus, javelin, shot), the milers were forced to enter the shot put. There were no Sugarloaf competitors in the long or high jumps as the runners had to concede points to their opponents.

New school record was established in the four-by-110 relay. Sue Kibling ran a strong anchor leg for Sugarloaf, which tied for third in 55.4, but a judge's decision awarded second place to Fitch. Kibling took the baton and caught her Fitch opponent at the finish line.

Former UMass standout Charlotte Lettis won the mile in 4:58. Julie LaFreniere and Marion Kulick both had last-lap charges to place fourth and fifth, respectively.

Kibling returned to easily win her heat of the 440-yard run in 65.1, but her performance was only fourth overall. Judy Lovely was timed in 72.7, a personal best.

Laurian Greguoli ran shoeless in the 100-yard dash and sped to a 12.3 timing and fourth place. Kibling was close behind in 12.4 seconds.

Carla White ran the half-mile in 2:40.9 while teammate Johara Chapman finished in 2:49.5, a big improvement over her previous efforts.

Greguoili ran the 220-yard dash in 29.6 and Kulick was clocked in 30.5, but neither placed.

The last even of the meet was the medley relay, in which Sugarloaf placed second. LaFreniere ran the initial 220-leg in 30 seconds and Lovely and Greguoli ran 110-legs before Lettis completed the quarter-mile anchor lap in 59.8.

"I was amazed at the results," Derderian commented. "Everyone improved their times, with no exceptions, and that's rare."

GUN LAPS . . . The trackwomen face Fitchburg State College today in Springfield. On next Wednesday, May 14, there will be an open meet fcr women at the UMass track. Derderian stated that he would like to invite any women interested in track to participate in the meet, which will include experienced and novice divisions.

LaFreniere's 23-foot effort in the shot put was the best by any of the Sugarloaf atheltes, but far from scoring any points. LaFreniere (5:43.2) and Kulick (5:45) recorded their best times ever in the four-lap race.

Stokes, Donohue cager co-captains

By RON ARENA

Returning members of this years' varsity basketball team elected Mike Stokes and Mark Donoghue as co-captains for the 1975-76 season, earlier this week.

Stokes, a 5'9" guard, will be a senior next year. He was used sparingly the past season, after coming off a fine JV outing the previous year. With the graduation of guards Jim Burke and Bill Endicott, more playing time should be available to Stokes.

Donogue has yet to play a game in a Minuteman uniform, after transferring from Dartmouth this past year. Because of the switch, the 6'8" center-forward was forced to spend his initial year at UMass as a spectator. However, Donoghue still has two years of eligibility left, being only a junior in 1975-76. With the absence of John Murphy and Greg Duarte, Donoghue could be an important "big man".

According to the varsity coach, Jack Leaman, the co-captains "are expected to be the leaders of the team." He noted their prime role as "being directly responsible for the conditioning of the team and for the closeness and unity of the group."

Leaman quickly dismissed the idea of captains being chosen merely to satisfy a tradition. "It's much more than that," explained the coach. "The captains are the major link in communication between the team and the coaches." He revealed that the captains and coaches frequently discuss strategies of "what will work and what won't", and that the captains often suggest what five players may combine well.

"You know as well as I, that the best five players don't always make the best team", said Leaman.

The coach had no gripes with the results of the voting. "Stokes is a real hard worker and a skillful player. He deserves the role."

The election of Donoghue caused Leaman to be "surprised, but not unhappy." Asked whether a newcomer could accomplish being a leader, Leaman stated, "Apparently the team feels he can. Just through practicing with the team, they sense he has the qualities of being a leader."

UMass second baseman Joe Marzilli flips ball to first base after forcing runner at second in action earlier this year.

Mittmen rally falls short, 7-5

By BILL DOYLE

Amherst relievers Gary Prichard and Paul Vater pitched out of a bases loaded, no out jam in the seventh inning, and Brian Christ smashed a grandslam to power the Lord Jeffs to a victory over the UMass varsity batsmen yesterday at Amherst.

With the score 6-4, UMass' Paul Abramowicz led off the seventh with a double to left. A walk to Joe Marzilli and a bunt single by Steve Wright loaded the bases for the Minutemen but Prichard got John Seed to hit a 3-2 pitch down the line to the third baseman who tagged the bag and threw out Abramowicz at the plate.

Prichard then walked Jerry Mondalto to reload the bases, but Vater allowed Amherst to escape unscathed by striking out John Healy.

"Seed never pulls the ball that much," said Coach Dick Bergquist, referring to John's hard grounder hit over the third base bag. "Amherst was actually overshifted on him but it worked."

The Lord Jeffs scored five of their runs in the second inning on only two hits, as they took advantage of Jeff Reardon's wildness.

After Jerry Seppa opened the inning by singling, Reardon retired the next two batters, but a walk and a hit batsmen loaded the bases for Amherst. Reardon then walked the Lord Jeff's number nine hitter to force in a run and set the stage for Christ's grandslam, a shot over the leftfield fence. It was Christ's first homer of the year.

Another Amherst run in the fourth on a walk and a single, which was bobbled by UMass rightfielder Abramowicz, caused an early exit for Reardon.

"He didn't have anything," Bergquist said of Reardon. "I'm disappointed because he was really humming the ball in his last start."

Reardon was replaced by Rich Kelly, who set down the Jeffs on four hits and one run the rest of the game.

Trailing 6-1, UMass pecked away for two runs in the fifth, one in the sixth, and one more in the eighth but the Minutemen comeback fell short.

Jim Cullen and Abramowicz opened the fifth with singles and both were knocked in on Marzilli's grounder and Seed's bloop single to center. Jim Black produced UMass' run in the sixth by punching a single just over the second baseman's glove to score Healy from second.

The Minutemen's final tally scored when Cullen's sacrifice fly plated Pete Backstrom, who was credited with a triple when Amherst's leftfielder misjudged his fly ball.

"The three double plays that we hit into, really hurt," Bergquist said. "That, Christ's grandslam, and the fact that Reardon didn't pitch well, accounted for why we lost."

Vater, Amherst's ace pitcher in Bergquist's opinion, wrapped up the game for the Jeffs by striking out the side in the ninth.

CHANGE-UPS: UMass scored its first run in the second when Mondalto singled, stole second, went to third on a grounder and sprinted home on a short passed ball.

Golfers begin quest for Nationals

By RON ARENA

At the outset of this year, the UMass golf team set one goal for themselves — to reach the Nationals in Ohio State. Success or failure in achieving that target will be determined in the next two days of golf.

The Minutemen left yesterday for Hanover, New Hampshire to play their most important 36 holes of golf this year. Sixteen challenging teams, a total of 85 individual performers, will be attempting to qualify for the NCAA golf tournament in Columbus, Ohio, the last week in June. Of the Eastern teams, only two will earn the rights to participate in the Nationals, while two individuals will also qualify.

The UMass chances of being one of the two top teams appear good. Perhaps their coach, Fan Gaudette, best summed up the odds, saying, "If we play to our capabilities, we'll make it." And he's probably right; if the Minutemen can score as they did in back-to-back rounds at Stow (301 and 308 best four totals), few teams should rival them.

For the opposition, Harvard proves to be one of the toughest foes. The Crimson overtook Yale this year as the top team in the Ivy League. Harvard easily captured the Ivy League championship by 14 strokes, while making a shambles of the Greater Boston Championship, winning the 36-hole contest by 42 strokes. They will be led by Alexander Vik, one of the best golfers in the East, and Tom Yellin.

Yale, after tying UMass last fall in the Easterns, has been playing poorly the past few weeks. After battling the local linksters to a tie in the opening week of competition, the Eli lagged 27 strokes behind rival Harvard in the Ivy League Championship. Last week, they continued struggling, dropping a match to Amherst.

UMass will play Joe Artman, Glen Sullivan, Howie Terban, Rick Olson, and John Lasek in the competition. All appear confident that UMass will prevail.

"We should be one of the top two. I just hope that the weather will be good," Lasek said, thinking about Monday's third place finish in the adverse weather conditions at Salem.

Olson, reflecting on the same "if" as Gaudette, said, "Sure we can qualify, we've got enough. We're the best team if we play."

Even if the team fails to qualify, an individual total may earn someone the chance to visit Columbus. But for UMass, an individual qualification would do little to relieve the disappointment of the team failing.

Sullivan remarked on this, saying, "It's great if you (individual) qualify. But it kinda takes away a lot if your team's not there with you."

The next forty-eight hours will tell just who will be shooting their summer rounds of golf in Ohio, and who will be playing in New England.

Gorillas flat; Brown, 15-8

By BEN CASWELL and TOM CROWLEY

With precision-like midfield play which controlled the game both offensively and defensively, and sharp goaltending, Brown University defeated the UMass lacrosse team yesterday, 15-8, at Brown.

The win for Brown assures the Bruins of recapturing the New England championship which UMass won last year.

"We didn't play as well as we're capable of," said UMass lacrosse coach Dick Garber, "we did some good things, but we didn't put the ball in the net.

"I'd say some gift goals and some poor coverage hurt. What I told the guys is that we have three more games that we should win, so let's do it."

Attackman Ken Swerdloff opened the game's scoring for Brown with an unassisted effort early in the first period.

The Bruins then jumped out to a two goal lead before UMass midfielder Vinnie LoBello got the Minutemen on the scoreboard with a field length rush and also unassisted score.

The rest of the period found the Brown passing game very effective as their midfielders, especially Bob Mueller, Bob MacLeod, and Steve Meister at attack, controlled the game.

UMass was having trouble getting their shots on net in the first period and what they did get on net Brown goalie Tad Aburn was usually equal to.

With the score 3-2, Brown exploded for six straight goals and it seemed as if they might just blow Garber's Gorillas off the field.

But UMass staged a small comeback at the close of the half with goals from Frank Garahan, Jeff Spooner and Billy Arnold to move within four goals of Brown.

Arnold's goal came with only two seconds left in the half. The Gorillas went into the break with a good measure of the game's momentum, not to mention a man advantage resulting from a slashing call to Brown defenseman Bill Carey.

But Brown came out flying and was able to score twice before UMass could retaliate. Midfielder Tom Albertson and attackman Swerdloff again, hit for the Bruins to up the Brown lead to six goals.

From this point on UMass would never get closer than four goals. Most of the time, Brown's passing game kept control of the ball for the Bruins. The remainder of the time their close-checking defense kept the Gorillas from getting any good shots on net and thus mounting a sustained attack.

Brown goalie Tad Aburn, playing with a cast on his right arm, had a fine game between the pipes. Numerous times he thwarted UMass attackers stopping shots both high and low.

Perhaps his most spectacular-looking save came on a Kevin Patterson underhand wrist shot that Aburn deflected with his stick as it was headed for the lower-right corner of the cage.

UMass' failure to get their shots on net in the first half was a deciding factor. Some shots missed the net that may have made things a lot tighter than they were.

The Gorillas were standing still sometimes which is in direct contrast to the "run and gun" ethic that has been their success many times this season.

Also a little too much teamwork (if there is such a thing) hurt the UMass attack. Either one too many passes or an unneeded move, rather than a shot to the cage plauged the Gorillas all day.

SCOOP SHOTS — Jeff Spooner and Billy O'Brien led the Gorillas with three goals and three assists respectively...that may say something about the UMass attack for the day...The chimps (jv team) will host Amherst College behind Boyden tomorrow at 3:30...The chimps are 6-1 and coming off two recent wins against Mount Hermon, 8-4, and Massachusetts Lacrosse Club, 6-5...The next UMass varsity game is this Saturday at M.I.T....The next home game is one week from yesterday against Springfield.

This scene was the story of the day for Garber's Gorillas, as Brown goaltender Tad Aburn takes a Frank Garahan shot in the chest. The Gorillas spent most of the day either missing the net or shooting right into Aburn. The remainder of the day was taken up by Aburn making some fine saves as he anchored Brown in a 15-8 victory and the New England championship.

UNIV-MASS

The tormented face of Jeff Browne shows exactly how sick he is of having to jump all those golddarned hurdles while repeating aloud the words "Univ-Mass" affixed to each obstacle as he passes over it. Rhode Island will be rehashing the same words, as the UMass trackmen did them in, 103-51.

Cindermen crush URI

By SCOTT HAYES

From the opening event, it was evident that yesterday afternoon was going to be a successful one for the UMass track team. Bob Adamson, Mike Geraghty and Ron Harris combined for a sweep of the long jump and their teammates took the hint as the trackmen trampled Rhode Island, 103-51.

There were several exceptional performances, including Bill Jerrow's record-breaking pole vault of 16-6 and Kerry McKay's 9.5 in the 100-yard dash. URI's Jerrow broke the previous Llewelyn Derby Track standard of 16-1, which was set by a former Rhode Island athlete, Wayne Van Findesien in 1972. McKay, a winner in both the 100 and 220-yard dashes, tied a track record with his showing.

Adamson was a double winner for the Minutemen, capturing first in the long and triple jumps. The UMass standout took the long jump with a leap measuring 23-1 and three quarters and placed first in the triple jump with a 47-11 and thre quarter inch effort. Teammate Geraghty finished second in both jumping events.

The tracksters outscored the Rams in the jumping events, 25-11. Harris chipped in whith his personal best in the long jump, 22-3, which gave UMass third place and a sweep. Mark Hughes and Rusty Kendall placed one-two in the high jump.

Rich Szrom and Ian Pyka gave URI first place finishers in th hammer throw and the shot put, but George Ennis and Todd Holt prevented Rhode Island domination of the weight events by taking first in the discus and javelin. In fact, the Minutemen outscored Rhody 22-14 in the throwing events. Ennis recored a personal best of 147-4, in the discus as did John Willis (141-1).

Holt led a sweep of the javelin with a throw of 200-2. Minutemen Bob O'Neil and Kevin Hall were second and third.

The points were evenly distributed in the sprints and hurdles. The Rams won three events, including the 120-yard high hurdles, an event which Paul Hecker took in 14.4. McKay accounted for URI first places in the two dashes.

UMass won the 440-yard relay and swept the 440-yard intermediate hurdles as Curt Stegerwald placed first. Chris Nelson, Mark Healy and John Richards captured the next three spots. Joe Martens and Tommy Beland tied for second in the 220, crossing the finish line in 22.3. Pete Famulari made a successful return from a hamstring injury, placing second in the 120 hurdles with a time of 14.5.

With gusty winds aiding the jumping events, sprints and hurdles, while hampering the longer runs and throwing events, Martens raced to a first place finish in the 440-yard run. Steve Crimmin placed third in 51.8, nearly two seconds off the first-place time. In the half-mile, Chris Farmer won individual honors in 1:58.6 and Francis O'Keefe was second.

The distancemen were without the services of injured Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, but still managed to add points to the team total. Bobby Neil and sophomore Andy levy tied for first in the two-mile with a time of 9:30.6 Chet Mysliwicz ran his fastest mile ever (4:16.1) to win the meet's four lap race.

The afternoon ended as its beginning had promised — with a UMass victory. The tracksters won the two-mile relay (which officially dismissed any thoughts of a URI comeback), upping their record to 3-1.

Celtics whipped, backs against wall

LANDOVER, Md. [UPI] — Phil Chenier led the way with 27 points and young Nick Weatherspoon came off the bench to produce 18 more Wednesday night as the Washington Bullets coasted to a 119-108 victory over the Boston Celtics and a 3-1 lead in their best-of-seven NBA semifinal playoff series.

Chenier and Weatherspoon were helped by Elvin Hayes, who pumped in 22 points, and Kevin Porter, who added 21 to the delight of a sellout crowd 19,035.

The Bullets took command of the game in the second period when Weatherspoon came through with 10 of his points and helped his club build a 65-54 halftime lead.

Boston's Jo Jo White led all scorers with 32 points, while John Havilcek came through with 23 and Don Nelson 21 for the defending NBA champion Celtics. All but one of Nelson's points came in the first half.

Celtic center Dave Cowens was limited to 15 points in his scoring duel against Hayes.

The two teams, which wound up with identical 60-22 records in regular season play, were nip and tuck through most of the first period. The Bullets edged ahead, 29-26, at the period's end as Chenier and Weatherspoon popped in field goals in the closing seconds.

Weatherspoon hit four more baskets in the second quarter and Chenier had 15 points at half time as Washington fashioned an 11-point lead.

The Celtics were afflicted with shooting problems in the first half, as Cowens produced only six points. The Bullets hit 57.8 per cent from the field in the opening half.

Washington built a 21-point lead, 81-60, early in the third period, but the Celtics rebounded to cut the deficit to eight points. However, Weatherspoon and Chenier pumped in last second baskets to keep Washington ahead, 99-88, after three periods.

The union gap

Who trusts the Trustees ?

President Robert Wood and Chairman Joseph Healy

by Larry Kornfeld

The official university position on where the power lies in UMass is spelled out simply in a governance statement called the "Wellman Document". It begins: "The Board of Trustees has all authority, responsibility, rights, privileges, powers and duties of organization and government of the University of Massachusetts..."

Technically this is true, but in reality it's very misleading. If one thing stands out in the backgrounds of all the trustees it's that they are very busy people. Many of them are lucky if they can get to all the Trustee meetings they are assigned to let alone look into what's going on at the university. As one irate trustee put it after an unusually long meeting: "They (some people making presentations to the Trustees) don't realize how much it's costing us to be here."

As a result the administration determines most of the agenda items, gives most of the presentations the Trustees will rely on, and the Trustees vote the way the administration wants them to with little or no discussion.

The Board does have two student members, but their input doesn't amount to much. At one meeting Trustee Rick Savini objected to a proposed governance procedure saying it wouldn't allow for enough student input. The Trustees thought this point so trivial that they immediately voted the procedure in without further discussion. Savini cast the only dissenting vote.

After watching the Board rush through one proposal after another it becomes obvious who is really in charge. That man is UMass President Robert Wood.

Wood is recognized by many as one of the most powerful politicians in the state. House Speaker David Bartley said of him: "He is the only guy with enough prestige and clout to take on a governor or governor-elect." The Globe has described Wood as an elder statesman among many liberal democrats, and when Wood and Dukakis began arguing over the university budget they billed it as a battle between two political giants.

According to the Boston Globe magazine Wood knew poverty as a child. The Globe attributed one of his "Colleagues" as saying; "Because academic life rescued him from that early existence, he has a high respect for education and believes it is the way for the people."

After getting his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1950, Wood held various government jobs including housing expert for the U.S. Bureau of the Budget and at the same time served on the faculty of Harvard University. In 1957 he left Harvard for M.I.T. where he became chairman of the political science department and Director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies at Harvard and M.I.T.

In 1966, Wood left academic life to become a major figure in President Johnson's "great society" program. Wood chaired the task force that set up the Department of Housing and Urban Development and then became Under Secretary of HUD until 1969 when he became Secretary of HUD for the last two weeks of the Johnson Administration. The New York Times called him the "driving force" behind the Model Cities Program, the 1968 Housing Act, and other great society innovations.

When Wood returned to Boston, instead of taking a break after all that, he served as Chairman of the MBTA, Director of the Harvard-MIT Joint Center for Urban Studies and head of the political science department at M.I.T. — all at the same time! "Much of the criticism of Wood as a power-hungry, ambitious person stems from this period and it was only stoked higher when, in August 1970, he resigned from all three to take the presidency of UMass," said Richard Weintraub in a Globe magazine story two years ago.

Wood was elected to the Presidency by the Board of Trustees, and all of his powers as president depend on their support.

A pamphlet about the Board of Trustees that was published by the university justifies the powers of the Board as follows: "Lay trustees...as ordinary citizens representing various interests on a non-partisan basis, are best able to reflect back to the University the immediate concerns of the people of the Commonwealth whom the University is dedicated to serve."

The UMass Trustees are a long way from being "ordinary citizens". They include two doctors, two lawyers, a professor from Harvard, a Bishop, two bank presidents, an electric company president, and the owner of a radio station, yet the Board has not one member of the blue-collar class.

Incredibly enough the pamphlet also says: "Governance must rest in the hands of the people. It must be free of arbitrary political interference and control either from inside or outside of the institution."

16 of the 18 voting board members are appointed by the Governor without the review or consent of anybody. What could possibly be more "arbitrary political interference."

As President of UMass Wood has been politically aggressive and uncompromising. He has made a lot of friends in high places as well as enemies. He is often seen in the Tavern Club eating with Senate President Kevin Harrington and House Speaker David Bartley.

Wood drew a lot of criticism from the state legislature and Governor Sargent for using state funds to pay over $140,000 a year in rent on his plush offices in One Washington Mall. However, according to budget director Phil Gartenborg, the $140,000 per year on Wood's office ($80 sq. ft.) is paid out of a state fund account for rentals (016) and the rate is "competitive" with other downtown Boston properties.

Ideologically, Wood's administration is dominated by liberal democrats who saw the peak of their power and influence during the Johnson Administration.

Peter Edelman, the Vice-President for Policy Planning, is a former legislative aid to Robert Kennedy and a graduate of Harvard Law School.

Franklin Patterson University Professor was the first president of the liberal, experimental Hampshire College and is now an advisor to Wood on educational planning and innovation within the university.

Adam Yarmolinsky, the Ralph Waldo Emerson Professor of the University, is a graduate of Harvard Law School and a former professor there. He served as Assistant Secretary of Defense under Robert McNamara and received the "Distinguished Public Service Medal" from the Department of Defense. Both Yarmolinsky and Edelman worked for Robert Kennedy speechwriting before his assassination.

Besides his advisors in the administration, Wood has appointed 30 "distinguished citizens" from Massachusetts to advise him on planning for the future of the university. Inspite of the fact that these advisors are supposed to be helping plan for the future of a university, only two of them could be in any way considered distinguished educators. Of the other 28, 18 are businessmen. The rest of the council includes two labor union leaders, two corporate lawyers, and a social action project director.

Businessmen on the Council include President of Western Mass. Electric, the President of Eastern Gas & Fuel Associates, the President of Star Markets, the President of the Provident Institution for Savings, and many other leaders of Massachusetts industry. All together the 30 Council members hold positions on 62 different corporations and two corporate law firms.

Officially Wood's duties as president of UMass include coordinating the work of the three campuses, planning for the future and dealing with budgetary matters. He promised upon assuming office that he would have little intervention into the affairs of the three major campuses. But, now Wood is using the School of Education scandal to justify giving himself more direct control of the separate campuses.

Wood's powers are now being threatened from above by Dukakis and Secretary of Education Paul Parks. They want Wood to cut ten per cent of the universities budget and take it all out of administration inspite of the fact that only 18 per cent of the state funds going to the university go to administration. Wood claims such a cut would be "catastrophic" and refused to take it all out of administration. If Dukakis and Parks have their way the administration's power to determine its own budget allocations will be reduced.

Wood also faces a battle from segments of the student population who are trying to set up a union of students. He has indicated that he is opposed to a student union because it is "incompatable" with an academic institution. Already he got the trustees to put the student union enabling act through the "governance process" before voting on it. This means the trustees will not vote on the act until October. How will Wood deal with these issues, Richard Weintraub now a Washington Post reporter, wrote in the Globe magazine, "If he moves in his usual fashion he will study the problems and possible solutions exhaustively and then move quickly behind the scenes in an attempt to implement his own decisions before 'going public' with whatever he decides."

Regardless of what happens, Wood has been fighting major power struggles for a long time, and he has obviously gotten very good at it.

No budget cuts!

College Students' Letters to God

by Scott Haas

Dear God,
I am studying Nietzsche (Philosophy 305) and he says that You are dead. It's not really true, is it?
Worried, Mark

Dear God,
Things used to be much simpler. Remember when I sat in my backyard and wished for an easy bake oven for Christmas? Well, forget the oven for now. I woke up this morning and found myself in a rowboat. And the rowing is getting just awful! Isn't there a small island I can dock at, if only for a moment or two? Talk to me, you brute!
Your girlfriend, Cynthia

Dear God,
Thank-You for dying for my sins. My anxieties have disappeared and tensions, stomach problems and insomnia are things of the past.
Love Ya, Mary

Dear God,
Are yoy really the opiate of the masses like Marx says? Even if nobody else likes You, I always will.
Your friend, Bob

Dear God,
I am a student at Princeton currently majoring in international diplomacy. Although I'm only 19, I would like to suggest some changes You might consider in Your foreign policy. First, move Israel to Connecticut. Then, open disengagement talks between the US and USSR over the European question. Finally, I think clouds should be a variety of colors. Anyway, God, keep in touch and contact me about these ideas. Perhaps we can work out some concrete plans.
Your pal, Jim

Dear God,
I am at a lavish all girls' school enjoying, enjoying, ENJOYING! I am actively involved in the question of aesthetics and would like to know if You are beautiful. Are You?
Curious, Margaret

Dear God,
Someone just placed me in front of a typewriter and told me to write You a letter. I'm not sure how I got here or even why. I have nothing to say or ask. Is this OK with You? I mean did You have problems growing up, too? What did You do for existential anguish? I'm waiting for You.
Love, Larry

This is a warning. Next week is the last BELOW THE SALT of the semester. If you have any announcements or any relevant material that must be known by the people before the end of school, let us have it soon. Our usual deadline is Tuesday at noon, however this week it will have to be Monday at noon so we can see how big we get to make the paper. If you have any questions about anything we would know about (that's leaving things wide open) call us at 545-3500 and ask for anybody in BELOW THE SALT.

If you are already on the staff and would like to know about next semester's plans, it might be a good idea to come up to the office and see Tyla. There will be Editorial positions available and all kinds of new and funny things coming up.

If you are not already below the salt and would like to be, or at least have a hand in planning next semester's pages, you are also encouraged to come to the second floor of the student union, find our little cubicle and get assaulted. If no one is there, which I doubt, leave us a note. We like getting mail, any kind of mail. Input is what it's all about.

P.S. Staff peoples would please leave summer addresses with Tyla for further communication.

ALICE COOPER — THE IMAGE

Having lost interest in rock music sometime around 1968, I didn't even know who Alice Cooper was until he slithered across my TV screen in a Snoop Sisters episode; and he was so incredibly sensual that I became instantly fascinated with the man. I wanted to know more about him, but everyone I talked to reacted with repulsion at the mention of his name. More fascinated than ever, I began studying his music and found that I liked it as much as I liked him, to the chagrin of the people around me. They were hearing him scream about burying dead babies and making love to dead bodies, but I was listening to him sing softly and with compassion about the loneliness of Christ in "Second Coming"...they were turning him out because of the horror he generated within them, while I was turning onto him because he dared to explore and describe levels of the human mind which most of us are fortunate enough to be able to avoid. Alice Cooper's various forms of insanity are grippingly real, and I was determined to find out how a man could go so far into insanity for so long without becoming insane.

Meeting Alice Cooper is no easy task. A month and a half of letters and long-distance phone calls to Alice's various managers got me a back-stage press pass that Don Law, a tyrannical bastard who controls all large local concerts with the power of a total dictator, refused to honor. He posted armed guards which prevented me from meeting and photographing Alice before the concert as had been previously arranged, and he demanded that all the videotaping, filming, and audio taping equipment be seized from my crew and myself. He allowed us to keep one still camera (which we were most often prevented from using by his goliath-sized guards who pushed me around during most of the concert until harassed into submission, until I resigned myself to just sit and watch the concert from my hiding place within the audience.

In sharp contrast, Alice Cooper's people — his agents, managers, dancers, musicians, and technicians -- were the nicest, most tolerant people I encountered, and Alice was the nicest of all.

ALICE COOPER — THE CONCERT

The concert, "Welcome to My Nightmare," is Alice Cooper's latest rock-theater extravaganza. As a rock concert it was really fine — Alice has a strong, clear, well-controlled voice with amazing range, and the songs he sang (from his latest album, also called Welcome To My Nightmare) were always powerful, and often beautiful. As theater it was great fun — giant living spiders-people hanging from a 20-ft. high web for Alice to do battle with, a monstrous cyclops for Alice to behead, luminescent skeleton-people to dance with, glowing green towers, and a bed like you wouldn't believe.

The auditorium was filled with teenagers — the roughest looking bunch I'd ever seen, but they all had a great amount of respect for Alice Cooper. As excited as they got whenever he belted out one of his fast hits like 'I'm Eighteen'', "School's Out", and the new "Department of Youth", they immediately sat down and listened in silence when Alice sang one of his new and beautiful love songs like "Only Women Bleed", or the hauntingly mysterious "Years Ago" and "Steven'. It surprised me that an audience so young would appreciate the subtle and almost mystical directions that Alice is beginning to explore.

But Alice is still Alice Cooper, and he puts on a wild show. Who else would beat the hell out of a life-sized naked blonde rag doll while singing a love song, then drag it to bed with him to slap around, sleep with, and eventually transform into a real woman? That's his style of humor, and it was appropriately entertaining.

By far the most impressive and innovative part of the show was the total integration of live action and film through the use of a shredded screen into which Alice would disappear as his image simultaneously appeared on the film, and later reappear from another part of the screen to bring the action back onto the stage. That bit of film magic was the best I've ever seen, and his perfection of the technique indicates a very bright mind behind those painted eyes.

ALICE COOPER — THE MAN

After the concert was over and the building empty of all those thousands of young fans, a small group of back-stage pass-holders (with enough patience to wait around until Law's gorilla guards had gone home) sat or stood in a semi-circle around the dressing room door, waiting for Alice Cooper to emerge. They had been pushed around and pushed back so often that night that, when Alice finally did appear, no one approached him; and when he entered the adjoining lounge which had been prepared as an informal reception room, no outsider dared follow him. They just stared at the open door, or at each other, waiting for someone to break through their fear and enter that room. I couldn't believe this was happening, said "Fuck it" and walked in.

Alice is a very relaxed, friendly and outgoing person, with an intimately playful manner that puts the most nervous and stammering interviewer — like me — at ease. During the time we were together, we began to talk about his In Concert TV special which had been aired for the first time the night before...we both felt that it had been fantastic — he had never seen it in its entirety until then and he was delighted with it. He talked of new directions — no more snakes and hangings, he's done all that already. I expressed my hope that his new directions would take him deeper into filmmaking (my field); in reply he described the all-encompassing, pleasure in a live performance which he compared to an orgasm; and although it exhausted him so thoroughly that when it was over he was sure he couldn't do it again, he needed that pleasure so much that here he is on the road again.

He described his role as an actor, and the process by which, on stage, he assumes, the macabre character of that man who makes the audience cringe in horror, and how he casts that personality off; for "Alice Cooper" exists only on stage. This process is necessary for him to retain his own personality, which he recognizes as vital for him to stay alive. He described Jim Morrison, whom he had liked and admired deeply and who died because he had not separated himself from his stage personality but had assumed it as his own. I asked him if this is a form of spirit possession, and he assured me that it isn't. It is acting, and Alice is an actor.

American Boys
by Steven Phillip Smith

Putnam
Reviewed by Ed Smith

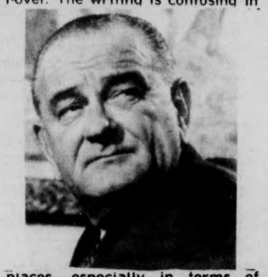
Vietnam is something which will be remembered as more than a country, more than a war, even more than a national disaster. It was a sort of national trauma which had an unprecedented divisive effect on the people of America. To try to explain this phenomenon completely would be a huge task and probably an impossible one. Accounts of parts of the Vietnam experience, though, are possible. Already we have had books about the Green Berets foisted upon us which concentrated mainly on the John Wayne macho image of the soldier. What has been needed though, is an intelligent novel about the soldier's experience, psychologically and physically, in Vietnam. It seems this is what we have in Steve Smith's American Boys.

Smith, who served in the 1st Cavalry in 1966, follows the experience of four young men in Vietnam. Bored in Germany, they volunteered for Vietnam for a change of scenery and a chance at some excitement. When they get to Vietnam there is something other than just change and excitement waiting for them. There is another element, the war, which escapes, even in the end, any complete understanding.

In the course of the novel the responses of all four men to war are manifest. The contradictory emotions of such a situation are skillfully brought out. He does not use the book as a political forum, but rather tries to get at the plight of the individual in the midst of war.

The perspective in the novel switches among the four characters. This has the effect of showing the reader many different sides of the war and of the characters. This can be a difficult device to use, as a neutral authorial tone is usually necessary. Smith has been able to use it to full advantage in this novel, and has given the book a varied texture.

As a first novel, American Boys is exceptional. Smith, who received his MFA at UMass, has taken the material from his own experience and transformed it into a compelling novel of the war. What is most attractive about this novel is the clarity of the writing. Smith puts down scenes which produce in the reader all the sensations the characters are experiencing. He has an exceptional eye for detail which enables him to bring out a theme of technical domination of the war and its clash with the almost prehistoric surroundings.



American Boys is not a perfect novel. The writing is confusing in places, especially in terms of differentiating the four characters. In some instances their personalities and interests overlap to an uncomfortable degree. Smith also has an, at times, disorienting way of switching scenes from the jungle to the base to Germany and back to the jungle. Overall, though, he shows control of his writing which is refreshing and interesting.

It is probable that Vietnam novels will be plentiful in the next few years as distance from the war grows. It is fortunate that Smith's book is one of the first as it should set a high standard for those to follow.

Words We Own

OUR OWN WORDS
by Mary Helen Dohan
Penguin Books Inc.
358 p.
Reviewed by Philip D. Zitowitz

Words have become a modern preoccupation. The possibilities of the spoken and the written word in communication and miscommunication, the manipulation of words in the doubletalk of politics and the insincerity of advertisement, have created a new interest and sense of urgency in the examination of our language. James Joyce and Marcel Proust tampered with words and time to give us a new sense of syntax. At the same time, linguists and semanticists have gone past the aesthetic inquiries of the writer, and have explored and elucidated the structure and function of language. Words have been depreciated.

Ms. Mary Helen Donan's study does not formulate an aesthetic creed nor develop a manifesto on words. In a quiet, witty and for the most part, sensible manner, she traces the origins and the developments of the American language. Her investigation begins with a common Indo-European tongue with its base in Sanscript. She follows the poorly-illuminated beginnings of the English language to the better documented and researched Saxon settlements, the Roman Invasion and the Norman Conquests. After mapping out the growth of standard English in Great Britain, she describes the renaissance of the language on this side of the Atlantic. The settlers moulded our language into a hybrid form, an American English responsive to the linguistic needs of a people and a country which increasingly had less and less to do with the manufacturers of our tongue — the English.

Dohan, with more than ample examples, documents the contributions of the many peoples who added to our speech ways. According to the author, the indigenous Indian tribes had a surprisingly limited linguistic effect on the American language. The euphonius quality of Indian speech is retained in such works as Massachusetts, ("place of the great hills,") Shenandoa, ("daughter of the great skies") and Ohio, ("beautiful water"). German, Spanish, Dutch and Yiddish have made infusions into the language. A Dutch usage, long in the American vocabulary is bush, (from the Dutch word bosch, meaning woods or uncleaned forest). The Yiddish language has inserted its rhythms, intonations, vocabulary and humor. The Scotch-Irish brought more expressions with them than most ethnic groups. Crackers, as in Georgia crackers, is Scotch in its original meaning as boaster. Contemporary events have given us new coinages. We have a counterculture made up of a melange of the "drug" and "rock scene", of "hippiedom and psychedelia," and "flower power and flower children."

While Dohan gives clear examples and her style is entertaining and pointed, she has none of the verve, irascibility and invention of Mencken's classical work, the American language. She has none of the warmth and anecdotal charm that Leo Rostein displays in his study of American Yiddish — The Joys of Yiddish. She performs competently for those interested simply in the origins and development of the American language. Her study, however, purports to be a documented historical account of the American language — objective in its basis and argumentation. The political implication of words are not noted, nor does she reveal her historical prejudices to the reader: the power of the mass media, technology, and the perpetration of lies are overlooked.

Our four letter words are our glory. Eloquent obscenity captures the mind and heart of the American imagination. Writers as diverse as Henry Miller, Norman Mailer and Philip Roth have incorporated our national pastime into some of their best writing. These words, either created or rejuvenated, to a large extent, by our returning G.I.'s, provide a good portion of our everyday idiom.

The standard language of our dictionaries comes from the powerful — the winners in American society. Dohan has difficulty in accounting for the relatively small number of Indian words in our vocabulary and explains this scarcity in linguistic and phonetic terms. The following explanation may be easier. The Indians lost — the Anglo-Saxons won.

The fundamental meaning and function of many words has changed because they have been subjected to the polymorphus perversions of the mass media of communications and the czars of technology doubletalk. Gertrud Stein's formulation, "A word is a word is a word" is no longer applicable. The word has become a lie, an admixture of fakery and hypocrisy, creating thought pollution and mind-rot. Executalk, Gutspeak and Pseudo-Infallibility by Fad thinkers and Know nothing authorities have made language suspect. Dohan quails in the face of confrontation with contemporary factors. In this important area of study, we need a book that penetrates to the core and hits the juggler of American language.

JACKSON COMIC BOOK REVIEW
by Kris Jackson

(Author's Note: When SEX AND VIOLENCE COMIX was in galley form, a copy was given to BELOW THE SALT editor, Tyla L. Michelove, for review. She soon told me, however, that BTS could not review the work; since much of the content had appeared in the SALT, a review would involve a conflict of interest. I accordingly agreed to review it myself. There's no conflict of interest here.)

Kris Jackson's first comic book, Sex and Violence Comix No. 1, ranges from the subtle to the obnoxiously blatant, from the clumsy to the over-controlled, and from the brilliant and the promising to the smug and over-satisfied. It includes work from the past year, a period of time when he was approaching what could be charitably called his first synthesis of a style (or, uncharitably, his first grasp of the ability to imitate) to the present.

The first thing that strikes the reviewer is the diversity of style and subject matter; the second thing is the ease with which almost any piece can be pinned down to an imitation of one cartoonist or another. His earliest influence, and the one which is still most apparent, is R. Crumb, the archetypical "underground" cartoonist. The second is Vaughn Bode, the flamboyant superstar "pop-mystic-transvestite" whose visits to UMass last year made a strong impression on Jackson's fevered brow.

Jackson admits freely the imitative aspects of his work, especially the earliest. "When I first saw Crumb's work, four years ago," he recalls, "I thought, 'Hey, this is just lines on paper!' and decided to try it myself. The apparent simplicity and crudeness of Crumb's style made him an easy model for me. Later, my art courses taught me to go off in a more independent direction, in terms of anatomy, line quality, etc."

Jackson's quasi-Crumb style can be seen at its most developed in the only two long stories in the book, "Traktor Tale" and "The Truth." Both, however, represent changes from his past. "Traktor Tale" was actually a dream I had one morning, the first time I actually dreamed a comic strip. I remember reading it in the dream, and being impressed with its spontaneity and directness, qualities which I thought I lacked. It took me several minutes after waking to realize that the work was indeed my own. Since then, dreams have become an important source of material for me. I think the best thing I ever got from a dream was 'Waiting for the Toast to Pop-Up', which is nowhere near as beautiful and lavishly detailed as the 'original.' It still makes me feel like a plagiarist. 'The Truth', on the other hand, was my exploration of just letting a story ramble, with no limits on time or length. I explored the whole medium, and had a lot of fun with it."

Meeting Bode was a jolt, in two ways. The first, a stylistic one, was the use of felt markers to color and shade work. The work that Jackson produced after this, here reproduced in black and white, brought about a richness in tonality and light effects never before — or since — seen in his work. The other change was one of attitude. "Watching Bode's show, I felt, not that I wanted to produce work like his, but that I wanted to break free of my normal sensibilities and tune in on some creative source to the same degree that Bode has."

He didn't. Instead, he started producing work like Bode's, or as much like it as he could. The work from this period, just the same, is about his best.

The most recent works in the book, sadly, lack that certain "zing" that really should be developing in his work right now, though there are still surprises and laughs. Jackson is equivocal about his recent output. "A lot of this is probably due to smugness and self-satisfaction. I am still carried away with my 'star' status in this community. But a lot of it is due, too, to school pressures and the many conflicting directions I'm being pulled in. I think that I'm still in a very early, formative stage of my artistic career, and if I can ever survive this fucking semester and graduate, I might go on to become a great genius instead of the half-assed genius I have to settle for being at the moment."

An interesting feature of the book is two stories which were left out. "The lawyer for the Ware River News, the people printing the book, saw them just as they were about to be printed and warned us that, under new Massachusetts law, they could get both the paper and myself busted. I almost wanted to go ahead with it, but I had seen Lenny the night before, and knew that I could not financially handle being busted. Lenny did not, after all, die for my sins, I guess."

The two offending pages have since been reprinted in Below the Salt with instructions to the reader to cut them out and paste them in the appropriate places.

Lenny Bruce: the artist as comic

What's so funny? Things are so bad, they're hilarious. We are offered a high contrast here by the passing of ten humorous years between these two laff-Makers. And what we got? Some something, some nothing.

What has been said in the past is that our standard of living can be roughly gauged by the quality of the satire of that time period. The more outrageous the living conditions (the more raw material), the more virulent and demented the satire. A sort of sub-postulate sets out a ratio between the circulation satire gets (working out of a tight set of rules about general prosperity, media outputs and General Morality — that old bastard) and its time period. So willy-nilly are the reach of the darts shot into the hearts of our heroes that Lenny Bruce, one of the most insightful and gifted comedians of our time, never got much beyond the dank world of the nightclub, while the bunch of crafty-eyed spoofers called The National Lampoon got national syndication for their radio hour, and have a million-circulation monthly magazine. And yes, the story goes, the Lampooners are making oodles of dough-ray-me on the stuff Bruce was busted, prosecuted, and persecuted for. Bruce's sphere of influence is growing these days, almost ten years after his death, as much of his material is now Safe (much easier to be civilly obedient than civilly disobedient). And through it all, the man's desperate, clawing genius shows in the depth and earnest aptness of his characterizations and observations.

The Real Lenny Bruce is two records of his best bits from Fantasy Records, circa 1958-63, and is a true touchstone in comedy-social development. Lenny Bruce's act grew out of the "thinking man" nervous humor of the late fifties and early sixties, the same kind of innately-sensed dissonance between Social truth and Natural truth that spawned the Non-conformist movements a short time after this. The orginal popular thinking humorists of this time were Bob Newhart, Art Buchwald, Mort Sahl, etc..They examined the emerging roles for Modern Americans, the new frontier of computers, job aptitudes, Lear jets, supermarkets and other items that were becoming staples for our prime existance. These odd and unexpected changes (the beginning of our massive "Culture Shock") caused a great deal of anxiety, but when we saw they weren't going away, we relaxed, cautiously, helplessly, to a sort of ultimate punchline, "How I Learned To Stop Worrying And Love The Bomb". So Tom Lehrer made us laugh about pollution, and Woody Allen took us down Big City Neurosis lane. Ha. Ha? The conventional mother-in-law, sex-tease, ethnic, slapstick, etc. humor based in the basic humanistic values from our day-to-day relationships and our insecurities therein as eternally perpetrated by the Hopes, Bennys, Cosbys, etc. isn't enough anymore. Things have changed. Most of today's comedians now throw the mother-in-law joke into a Modern Development such as the Psychiatrist's Office. Or Driving Instructor ("What's that, Mrs. Smith? You say you already made a left turn?").

Out came Lenny, beginning as a schlock "entertainer-comedian", the kind of which he relives so painfully in his "Comic At The Palladium" that after a short time, he refused to do the routine. These are the guys who have all the funny-things-happen-to-them-on-the-way-to-the-club, go up to "Show Biz Heaven" for impressions of the Greats — Jolson, etc., and have the overall impact of a wet martini. Lenny ripped through this stuff in a few years and looked for something more. Something to set the folks a-thinking. Bob Hope's jokes about President Eisenhower's golf game perhaps, in the long run, make you take Ike a bit less seriously, but didn't they really reinforce his image as a Great Man, able to take the good-natured ribbing, and make him all the more powerful, impermeable?

No, Lenny wanted to bust out. It doesn't take much once you're attuned to society's phony straight jacket, to reject its ideals and rip into all the lies, official inhumanity and pure hate behind the mask.

This is a courageous route for a human to follow in the early sixties, especially in the show biz world that makes its living by making people happy enough to pay money. A courageous route, and a hard one, as Bruce, after five years of busts, prosecution and pure persecution, died a drug-related death in 1966. He just missed the Hippies of 1967, who seem to have been his natural audience outside of the jazz bandstand.

The Real Lenny Bruce is probably the finest collection of his "bits" to be found. Bits meaning seven minutes spent mainly on one subject. Bruce was best, though, and most exciting, in a free-wheeling context over the space of an entire evening. Carnegie Hall is a three-record set of an entire concert, recorded in 1961, probably the time of his peak, before the Bust-Court hassles began to drain him. Carnegie Hall shows how the man wandered, gambled, rambled, and clicked in toto, with anything and everything that came into his head like one of the jazz soloists he so admired in their freedom.

Bust 'em down bust 'em all down — "obscenity," homosexuality, sex roles, racism, religions, in general incorporated, greenheads — find who runs the power and why. And how. Get us to check ourselves, and see what our true nature can possibly be. After a while, Lenny became a sort of human kamikaze, strung out on his Truth.

The same only different goes for the National Lampoon. A lot of their targets — TV, commercials, sports, documentaries, liberals, rednecks — are obvious enough as being fatuous and phoney, and ultimately dangerous in their powers of persuasion and ability to appear as vestiges of reality perverted into insidious shells (if people take televised hockey or PBS seriously...). The Lampoon operates on two levels: 1. A sort of Lenny Bruce (Hey, the Army's Big Picture is full of shit, kids! Hey, the Army is full of shit!) for the younger to cut their teeth on, and 2. Enough sprinkling of true wit, cutting insight and a special dose of dada absurdity to make the skits grow and flourish for Adults. (Do a skit of the Judge sentencing Al Capone to a dose of syphylis. Funny? Well, not too, really... Good? Well, the idea of doing it, actually presenting these voices saying such unreal things makes for different views of reality that are quite...refreshing. Just about what you'd expect from a sort of American Monty Python.)

Lenny Bruce was an artist in terms of perceiving, endorsing and advocating a reality that is coming into being today. The fact that he got the basis of his values from the black jazz musicians he encountered around the nightclub circuit says a great deal for the musicians and their culture as well as Bruce's powers to be funny in the deepest sense — laughter inspired by what you know is the truth.

Dizzie Gillespie's Big 4
DIZZY GILLESPIE, JOE PASS, RAY BROWN AND MICKEY ROKER
(Pablo 2310719)

Usually a music reviewer finds that more expressive words come to mind when an album arouses many spontaneous feelings. On the other hand, some experiences are just so overpowering that they can be verbalized, if at all, only by extreme effort. And that seems to be the case with this album.

Dizzy Gillespie's Big 4 is the latest mind-boggling release from Pablo Records and producer Norman Granz. The last seven releases from these people have enriched the recorded jazz scene immeasureably — each album has been a thing of beauty and will be a joy forever (to paraphrase an appropriate proverb).

Dizzy's album is especially rewarding, for a number of reasons. For one thing, it exemplifies the best of Dizzy's trumpet styles. Diz can be caressingly, soothingly lyrical as well as fiercely full-blowing in amazingly quick passages that defy comprehension. For another thing, his expressive technique is complemented by the impeccable guitarring of Joe Pass, Ray Brown's outstanding bass and Mickey Roker's no-nonsense, flawless drumming.

Irving Berlin's waltz, "Russian Lullaby", receives an up-tempo, four-in-a-bar treatment that seems to suit everybody just fine. A Gillespie original, "Be Bop" is taken at an even more frantic pace, with the guitar solo particularly striking. Each and every solo on this album, however, be it trumpet, guitar or bass, is a marvel unto itself. The wit, the elegance, the technique, the feeling, and whatever else constitutes exquisite soloing, are all there.

The musicians exhibit their artistry on varied terrain — within the Latin-American charms of Gillespie's "Tanga" as well as the swing feel of Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz".

You won't believe it 'til you hear it.

Portraits of Duke Ellington
JOE PASS
(Pablo 2310 716)

Joe Pass is an incredible guitarist. Ever hear of him? If not, then your education is definitely lacking.

He displays a command of his instrument that is clearly without parallel today. He has a sophisticated technique that is always strong, smooth and tasteful. His agility is awesome at any and every tempo. His unaccompanied solos (there are three on this album) are mind-blowing materpieces of creativity. He is a virtuoso. I've acquired fourteen of his albums over the past year and a half. But I'll bet you're still not convinced.

On this album, Joe Pass's genius is put to task on nine tunes penned by that master songwriter. The late great Duke Ellington. Fellow musicians are Bobby Durham (from the old Oscar Petegson Trio) on drums and Ray Brown (whom the liner notes describe as "the most gifted musician on his instrument that jazz has so far produced".) on bass.

Obviously, with such material and such musicians, you can't go wrong.

From the opening number, "Satin Doll", a polished gem of beauty with delicate interplay between musicians and amazing solos by Pass, all the way to the last track, "Caravan" which is the fastest arrangement of it I've heard, this album never misses the mark of excellence.

Get this album. Get an education.

Crime Of The Century
SUPERTRAMP
(A&M SP-3647)
Total Playing Time: 43:14

Supertramp have been scrounging around for years with little or no success, but this release is certainly pointing them in the right direction. Never have they come up with anything that approaches this in terms of sheer artistic merit and creativity. Crime Of The Century is one of those concept albums (popularized in the early 70's by such folks as The Kinks, Bowie, Tull), magnificently produced by ex-Elton producer Ken Scott. Sometimes difficult to follow and understand, it apparently deals with life and its inhumane aspects of neglect and apathy towards our own fellow human being. The music itself is very much similar to Pink Floyd; numerous time and tempo changes, a "spacey" sound, obviously English-sounding vocals, and, in general, slower melodies than one usually associates with rock music. Therefore, Supertramp is a step ahead of those many other rock bands who refuse to take a chance and try something different. This quintet's gamble has succeeded in bringing forth a beautifully fulfilling work of art.

The album commences with a rambunctiously effective number called "School." Alternating between slow-fast patterns, it moves into a contagious piano solo about midway through. The lyrics are intellectually intricate, as they are on every cut. Up next is the album's single, "Bloody Well Right". Starting off with an electric piano solo, it moves into some fine sax before beginning the pessimistic vocals with, "So you think your schooling's phony. I guess it's hard not to agree. You say it all depends on money, and who is in your family tree. Right, you're bloody well right..." The chorus is the song's best facet, due to its catchy beat. The next cut is "Hide In Your Shell." It's a slower piece, with beautiful group harmonies throughout. The final cut on side one is "Asylum," another slower effort with changing tempo and wonderfully creative lyrics.

Side two starts off with "Dreamer," perhaps the best all-around work on the album. It features more pleasant electric piano and fine, well-developed melody. Following it up is the album's weakest work, "Rudy." Its chief fault is that it is too long (7:07) and doesn't sustain the suspenseful interest which the other songs do. "If Everyone Was Listening" is a slow, prodding piece complete with some satisfying string-work. Culminating this commendable album is the title cut. It asks the musical question, "Who are these men of lust, greed, and glory? Rip off the masks and let's see. But that's not right, oh no, what's the story? There's you and there's me." The post-vocal pianoforte sounds as though it were something right out of a 1920's mystery movie thriller. A great end to a great album.

You're bloody well right...

So, Supertramp has delivered an incredible masterpiece. It is incredible in the fact that they were never suspected of possessing this kind of musical talent. Do yourself a favor, if you can. Search out Crime Of The Century at your local record establishment. I think you'll really enjoy it, for it would be the crime of the century if this work were to pass unnoticed. It's truly deserving of a 'SUPER-tramp' A.

Sunday afternoon, solo piano

by Jack Cahill

Take It In Stride — Don Ewell (Chiaroscuro)
Sangoma — Dollar Brand (Sackville)
Musa (Ancestral Streams) — Stanley Cowell (Strata-East)

One p.m. on Sunday it is; improperly sated on donuts and high on coffee, my ears demand something more basic than soprano sax-led quartets wailing the new, new super heavy funk. I find it in three albums, each quite different, linked mainly by one thing. Each is a one-man keyboard outing, that most natural, most difficult of jazz styles, as old as Cripple Clarence Lofton and as new as Cecil Taylor. The only thing that ever holds back a solo player is him (or her) self, which brings the performer to a very concrete realization of his capabilities, his originality and the degree of freedom he can reach. Plus the freshness of the solo sound is invigorating.

Don Ewell, sixty and swinging, is one of a very eclectically talented stable of pianists based in Noo Yawk who recorded for Chiaroscuro. Although associated with New Orleans rooted musicians like Bunk Johnson, Sidney Bechet, Albert Nicholas and Jack Teagarden, Don's mastery and love of the complex, aggressive stride piano style (via James P. Johnson and Fats Waller) is rousingly evident.

Older "standards" are a big part of Ewell's game and things like "Indian Summer" or "Nice Work If You Can Get It" would make my father burst into song. Don's technique is fine, but the pre-1930 feel of these is slightly too much ragtimey ricky-tick. On stronger cuts like "Get Happy" and the superb "Dr. Heckle and Mr. Jibe," Don is all over the keyboard with both hands, swinging hard and pushy. "Thou Swell", a lock handed hair-raiser and the ballad "100 Years From Today" probably epitomize the two sides of Don Ewell and this album.

Dollar Brand (Xahuri) is the sum of new African music and jazz piano history. Somewhat puzzling to listen to, his technique is partially hidden in heavily-accented African rhythm. Without a doubt, Brand intends for his musical ends to take precedence over the means. Side two, the three part "Ancient Africa," really moves powerfully from the outset — his iron left hand beating out the hypnotic bass chords while he subtly shifts the compelling right hand figures. Brand hums fervently, a few slightly different themes appear, an effective dissonance or two and back to the welcome original theme. It's repetitious, why do I enjoy it? "The Aloe and the Wild Rose" is similar with increased intensity, but the "Fats, Duke and the Monk" medley really tells where Brand is from. The pianistic gamut runs from immaculate on "Single Petal of a Rose" to bizarrely humorous to laid back stride (Ode to Duke). Ah, yes, there's the technique!

Musa by Stanley Cowell was my voted favorite of last year's albums and I didn't even own a copy. Now I do and my feelings are even stronger. Certain pieces here were originally recorded with a big band on Music Inc.'s first release, and if they were excellent orchestra vehicles, Cowell has adapted them perfectly for piano. It's astounding, the total lack of limitations one senses in Cowell's keyboard forays! There is barely a moment of searching on his LP, everything is there.

"It's astounding, the total lack of limitations one senses in Cowell's keyboard forays! There is barely a moment of searching on his LP, everything is there."

"Abscretions" swings gutsy, funky and dramatic, and can make even half-listeners turn around. Simple beauty is the strength of "Equipoise", with some striking octave changes. "Emil Danenberg" and "Maimoun" are both from Cowell's previous Illusion Suite and the improvement here is well noted, especially on the latter, a masterpiece of thematic soloing (Cowell has been playing with Sonny Rollins as of late). "Departures 1 and 2" are both way uptempo and Stanley sounds so confident, nary a hesitation in his tangential steeplechases across the keys. Left and right hand digits challenge each other with the complexity of their lines until they reach the common theme and hammer it out together. Musa is on a level with any of the Corea or Jarrett solo stuff while retaining its particular stylistic identity.

Meanwhile, back in Funk City....

THE METERS
(Island ILPS-9250) time 35:00

Thirty-five minutes of some of the finest New Orleans 'fonk' ever sat down in one place and one time. The Meters are the band who do the current backing for Dr. John, Allen Toussaint and others.

in the late sixties, they supplied a stream of singles that sounded like Booker T & The MG's gone rhythmatic. Production and recording of this collection of their choice oldies is often rough, but you can take it. It certainly is only the lack of a Major Label (Josie Records aren't exactly hitmakers) that separates the Mete's from fame and acclaim.

These Scottish heavy metalers seem to be pushing things into a stretch, opting for 'standard' albums (A high standard of standardness) rather than taking time to come up with the real grinders they seem to flash every third album or so. I'm talking about the tunes where guitarist Manny Charleton, the main interest here, gears his overblown licks with some speed and taste instead of spewing them all over three albums' space. And no, Nazareth didn't write "Love Hurts". Boudleaux Bryant did.

Hijack
AMON DUUL II
(Atco SD 36-108)
Total Playing Time: 44:38

Rock 'n' roll is basically an Anglo musical form, born and bred in England and the U.S. of A. But since all music belongs to the world at large, a number of people in other cultures have applied themselves to rock, with greatly varied and always interesting results. Unfortunately, all too often these efforts, although interesting, are mere reworkings of last year's conventions — standard chord progressions, stock rhythms and the like. (Of course, too many Anglo musicians fall into the same traps — but that's another story.) Amon Duul II, a German—Scandinavian (I think) group working in English, suffers from this syndrome on Hijack — in spite of some inventive lyrics and a couple of solid musical moments, the songs lack any luster or punch. They've absorbed the surfaces quite well, but the rest is somehow missing.

Amon Duul II's lyrics (actually there are several songwriters, but they merge after a certain point) are definitely out of the New Age — the main concern is the casting off of obsolete modes of thought and living, useless paranoia, and moving out into something better. Sometimes this concern becomes stiff and stilted, as in "I can't see a tired man sleeping— in a subway train— laying down the holy game of poker ("I Can't Wait")", or "All I wanna say, sweet, sweet woman— you'll see the green grass growing again— see — what's it all about — it was just a dream ("Lonely Woman")". But the better part of the lyric writing manages to be quite facile, even when the music is not — good examples are "Mr. Hitler was possessed by demons— Mr. Nero by a perverted game— "panem et circenses" for the crowd— today isn't it just the same? ("Explode Like A Star")", and "I've borrowed your time and I'm sorry I called— Forget what I've said— but remember— you're not alone ("You're Not Alone"). Of all of the several writers in the group, Chris Karrer is probably the ablest — her songs are the most interesting musically, and she has the solidest lyric sense.

Amon Duul II: good suffaces, missing the rest

The surprises of this album are "Da Guadaloop", "Liquid Whisper", and "Archy the Robot". "Da Guadaloop" is the album's instrumental, which starts from disco music and continues from seven fairly bizarre minutes, overlaying snatches of Shaft-like strings, telephone operators, a quote from "Deutschland Uber Alles", and other random musical comments. "Liquid Whisper" is a lovely song by any standards — the band really starts to move, reminding me of It's A Beautiful Day more than anything else. Delicate synthesizer and Karrer's floating vocals. "Archy the Robot" is very funny, all about Cybernetic Tricks for the New Age. Archy is a robot "Emotionally engaged against Demon's-Lib"; he captures the Devil and spanks him, and is planning to capture God next. To put him on TV. So really, Amon Duul II does have, as they say, a lot of potential. A bit more care about lyric material and a large attempt to produce music which goes beyond the surface would do them very well.

I Don't Know What The World Is Coming To BOBBY WOMACK
(United Artists UA-LA353-6)
time 40:43

I don't know either, if a spotty and limited talent like Womack can make such a good record in his farewell to UA (Warners next). Everything's solid here, from the hit singles, "Check It Out" and "I Don't Know" which get the soul trained moving, to his (at last) version of his own "It's All Over Now" (great vocal play between Bob and withering Bill Withers, whose limits seem to parallel Womack's). And some great grit Gospel to close it up, yes, "Yes, Jesus Loves Me".

Yesterdays
YES
(Atlantic Records)
Time 45:05

Yesterdays comes at a time in Yes' career when their artistic quality is questionable. Tales Of Topographic Oceans and most recently, Relayer, show some disturbing trends in yessongs. These are trends like unfathomable lyrics, excessive guitar (literally) piled on by Steve Howe and a general over-elaboration of ideas. ("The Gates Of Delirium" is a classic example of this, not to mention Oceans.) Close To The Edge still cries out to be bettered. I wonder if it will ever be?

Yesterdays isn't an answer, for all the material is pre- The Yes Album stuff except for "America". However, just because it doesn't qualify in that sense, Yesterdays is still a constructive example of the days when Yes were fun. Remember, they had to create back then to make it, as opposed to their "guaranteed product" of today. The lp was conceived and compiled by bassist Chris Squire. Eight compositions are offered: a majority are from the first two Yes discs, one is B-Side to an obscure English single and also included is a full length version of "America".

"America", until this album, was only available as a single in the States, and the complete version was found only on the Import Atlantic Records sampler The New Age Of Atlantic. It's the closest track on here to the modern day Yes, recorded in July of '72, with drummer Bill Bruford and keyboard boy wonder Rick Wakeman still in the band. "America's" bloated length (10 minutes) shows a glimpse of what is to mar future Yes works — that is, none other than "faster than the speed of taste" Steve Howe on geetar. It's a shame. Howe is a good soloist provided he keeps 'em short, but as far as longer forays, Howe gets excessive and irritating. You could say he loses all restraint and taste. Ordinarily, like present Yes, this would ruin the song, but some sections of "America" are inspired, and Wakeman, Squire and Bruford perform wonderous support work of their own.

Other than "America", the remaining material highlights the original Yes: Jon Anderson (Vocals), Peter Banks (Guitar), Tony Kaye (Keyboards), Chris Squire (Bass) and Bill Bruford (Drums). I mentioned before that Yes had to create back then. Most of the time they really did (with a sense of humor at that), and when they weren't, they reworked some Beatles and CSNTY songs into interesting versions. Yesterdays showcases what is probably the best off the first two lps. The material from Yes fairs better, only because the stuff from Time & A Word has orchestration. At times, the orchestration makes the cuts sound too busy.

It must be pointed out that the current Yes lineup are a lot better in terms of musicianship. Anderson's voice has matured extensively. Banks at times was erratic, and not technically as good as Steve Howe. And Tony Kaye got lazy. Of course Wakeman and his replacement, Patrick Moraz, are more skilled and talented. But while I realize this, I cannot help but enjoy the days of Close To The Edge and the early days when Yes were a band to marvelled upon. Yesterdays is no doubt final prove of that. A "Thanx to Bloomdido for the Quote". B+

Viable human rights

THE FINDINGS OF THE EFA
Part two in a three part series
As reported by Steve Masse

> "...that the results of the EFA experimentation shall draw the answer to the question of Humanity, and to the controversy over Abortion and Women's Rights. This shall be done without persuasion of previous moral or scientific beliefs. The results shall with fairness serve as evidence in the influence of future legislation..."
>
> -Policy of Fair Play
> EFA Constitution 1973

Last week in Below the Salt, the Euthanasia Foundation of America ran the first part in a three part series on the subject of Abortion, Humanity, and Women's Rights. The first part was primarily concerned with views against abortion in certain stages. This second part is concerned with the results of experimentation conducted by the EFA, and the effects which the results will have on people in the near future.

It may come as a pleasing surprise, or it may dismay some people, to read about the results which the EFA has arrived upon. The EFA has acted in the interest of all recognized Humanity, by its very existence and purpose. (See Policy of Fair Play, above.)

The Euthanasia Foundation of American has advanced through science to the position where it can pinpoint the exact time when an organism maintains a Human Level. (In America, a Human level is achieved when an organism is insured by Law the Human Rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.) The question is: has the Law drawn the true and ultimate line as to who is entitled to protection of those Human rights?

Experimentation has shown that there remains no need for any person to believe that Abortion in any stage constitutes an unethical practice.

Doctor Betty Freewoman, research spokesperson for the EFA, concludes: "It has been discovered that Abortion at any stage is of no greater importance than the clipping of fingernails. Overgrowth of a fingernail is unwanted — a birth is unwanted. A fingernail is not Human, a Fetus is not Human. Here is proof that Abortion is not comparable to murder.

It has been established that the two basic functions of anti-abortion are incorrect in their essence. No further steps need to be taken to prove that the Abortion-Murder faction (DNA and chromosomes) is wrong. The Supreme Court in its recent decision has ruled out the possibility for this Abortion-murder philosophy to ever be valid. For if the Supreme Court has ruled against it, then the Abortion-murder philosophy must be essentially wrong.

With regard to the more popular Abortion-20 week philosophy, the EFA has taken steps to show more clearly why the twenty week gestation theory is wrong. As was previously mentioned, this theory concludes that when a Fetus appears Human, or begins to move, or is independently viable, then it can be referred to as Human.

Many people who believe in the Abortion-20 week philosophy argue that a Fetus does not deserve Human rights until it becomes "viable". The argument is this: that if the Fetus can live independently then it may be granted a right to live.

As reasonable as the argument may sound at first, there are two very important flaws. First, and it can not be stressed enough, the right to life can not be arbitrarily based on the degree of one's independence. Secondly, and more importantly, Independent Life (as ideal as it may sound) is not the prime determining factor of Human Life. For example, notice that there are many Oak Trees which live independently, yet none of these Oak Trees are Human, nor are they entitled to any Human rights, at least not under the Law. Furthermore, a sick Oak Tree may be cut down, but such radical surgery on a sick Human right might be seen by many to be unethical.

So, in order to illustrate the faults of the Abortion-20 week philosophy, the EFA scientists experimented under careful supervision. They completely shaved and clothed six chimpanzees. Releasing these into the streets of New York, the researchers investigated the reactions of people, and recorded the results.

The investigation showed that all the people the chimpanzees came into contact with treated them "just as other Human beings, by ignoring their presence, by passing them by without acknowledgment, and by bumping into them." The investigation results proved beyond a doubt that "Just because chimpanzees were independently viable, and just because they moved, and just because they appeared Human, there is no evidence that the chimpanzees in fact were Human. Not only that, but the fact that the birth of the chimpanzees did not make them Human show that "birth" is just as arbitrary a measure of Humanity as are words like "motion", "appearance," or "viability."

THE FINAL ANSWER: The Euthanasia Foundation of America has discovered the single major factor in the determining of Humanity. This ultimate factor is the bone structure.

The studies have concluded that the bone structure of any Humanly procreated organism (often mistakenly referred to as "child"), happens to be incomplete and inadequate before the offspring reaches the extrauterine maturity of seven years. Since the bone structure of the sub-seven-year-old is not Human because of underdevelopment, then the organism possessing that bone structure must be re-defined as Non-Human, with all fair respect to True Humanity.

The Euthanasia Foundation of America has found it necessary to illustrate that Humanly procreated offspring under the age of seven years maintain the same level as shaved chimpanzees. Though both may appear to be Human, and both may be independently viable, and both may move like Humans, and both may be treated like Humans, neither one by any means possesses True Human Quality.

Since it is known that the term "murder" applies to Human organisms, and that anything of Human origin under the age of seven years does not meet the true standard of Humanity, then any termination of life before this age has hereby been approved as legal and just.

As a result of these findings, any parents who wish to rid themselves of a problem, rid a future Human being of the world's problems, rid the planet of Overpopulation, or just try out reproduction for the sake of experience in meaningful relationships; all these people may do away with their offspring, provided their offspring are under the age of seven years. (Doing away with another person's sub-seven-year-old without that person's consent shall never be seen as any more ethical than running down a sick dog, for such action imposes on another person's Right to Choose whether his or her offspring shall live or perish.)

Buckled in its Own Swash

The Four Musketeers
Directed by Richard Lester
Reviewed by Mark Nardini

When Godfather II walked away with everything but Sammy Davis' pinky ring at this year's Academy Awards ceremony it told us that the sequel is big office and it's here to stay. Already they've given us sequels to The Godfather, Billy Jack and Funny Girl. During the next year we can expect to see offspring of That's Entertainment, The Poseidon Adventure and The French Connection.

In Richard Lester's The Four Musketeers, we are presented with the first "pseudo-sequel". To explain what this term means, it's necessary to take a look at the events which produced The Four Musketeers.

When Lester and his studio had finished shooting The Three Musketeers in 1973 they discovered, to their delight, that they had too much footage for one motion picture. Studio execs' put their heads together and The Four Musketeers was born. The studio figured they had made two films for the price of one. Stars Michael York, Raquel Welch, Oliver Reed and friends disagreed. If they appeared in two films, they were going to be paid for two films. Fifteen months and several court battles later, The Four Musketeers opened, and so had the strings of the studio's purse.

The history of The Four Musketeers is more than a unique and interesting story. It is also the explanation for the film's most blatant weakness, that is lack of an adequate storyline. Lester was handed the nightmarish task of trying to make a feature length film from a vault of outtakes. Most other directors would have scribbled obscene phrases on the cutting room walls, but Lester swallowed his pride and nearly made a good film.

The film, because of its nature, had a number of self-imposed structural limitations. These limitations forced Lester to revert to a style of film-making which he hadn't really used since he directed A Hard Days Night. it is this reversion in style which nearly saves The Four Musketeers.

Lester's "T.V. commercial" direction is relentlessly present as he bombards us with one-liner after one-liner. He sets and maintains a verbal comic pace which is, once again, reminiscent of his earlier work with the Beatles. Although Lester controls this comic pace, many of his jokes miss their marks due to the lack of identity given the individual characters. Proper characterization is essential if quick-moving verbal comedy is to work effectively. The fact that Lester was forced to use scenes which were not written to appear in a specific order explains why the film fails to construct these much needed characterizations.

The film reaches its strongest moments when Lester turns his eye to visual comedy. Time after time the Musketeers parody the old swashbuckling epics with slapstick humor which is unquestionably first rate.

The Four Musketeers has a number of scenes which in themselves are superb. Unfortunately there are just not enough of these scenes and no plot-line to hold them together. A good comedy needs a cohesiveness which The Four Musketeers lacks. A bunch of funny scenes just do not make a funny film. Unless, of course, the participants are named Groucho, Chico and Harpo.

An Institute of Higher Screening

by Judith Wolinsky-Soloway

An innovative and humanistic exploration of film, photography, and television has been happening each summer for the past three years at Hampshire College. About 200 students will gather for three weeks this summer to immerse themselves in the techniques and methods of critical inquiry of these arts. The program is called the "Summer Institute on Film, Video, and Photography."

The fourth annual Institute is sponsored by the University Film Study Center and runs from June 15-July 4. The non-profit film Center which, is based at MIT consists of 13 college members, including UMass and Hampshire. It was founded in 1969 by a group of New England Colleges to "coordinate and support the study of film and television as a humanistic discipline." The Summer Institute is a physical and philosophical extension of that belief.

This year, the 7 seminars are Contemporary Video, the American Avant Garde Film, Screenwriting, Directing Film Actors, Anthropological Film, Renoir-Critical Approaches, and Cinematic Analysis.

The 7 workshops are Photography, Animation, Photo Silk Screen, Experimental Studio Video, Filmmaking, Optical Printing, and Creative Half-Inch Video.

One of the Institute's unique aspects is that it brings together students with or without previous training in photography, television, and film with leading artists and theoreticians who are seldom found in the classroom. This is accomplished through a series of 14 seminars and workshops. Because these outstanding, artists are brought into the Pioneer Valley, area residents earn a chance to learn more about, and gain experience in, the media and related arts.

Those who participated last summer turned film, video, and photography theory and technique inside out and upside down. Institute students came from a variety of backgrounds; teachers, farmers, artists, students, technicians and secretaries.

"Intensive" is an appropriate description of the Institute. The seminars and workshops meet five days a week with a program of evening film screenings of the day's accomplishments and faculty and guest lectures.

Students register for a single workshop or seminar throughout the entire three weeks, except in a few courses of consisting of three one-week sections where cross registration is permitted.

Gisela Hoelcl, Summer Institute Director, says the Institute is the best in the country and "provides a top quality education in the arts for its students."

Some of the 25 faculty members will be: Richard Leacock, a leader in documentary filmmaking and a developer of the lightweight camera equipment used in the cinema verite technique will co-teach filmmaking.

Ed Emshwiller, who will lead the Experimental Studio Video Workshop, is a member of the Experimental Television Workshop at WNET in New York.

Carol Sonya Sones, who has had extensive experience teaching animation, will teach that subject.

Frank Daniels will use a screenwriting system he developed for the Film and TV Academy in Prague in dealing with basic problems in screen writing.

Jonas Mekas has been a dynamic force in independent filmmaking for 20 years. He has established his reputation as the leading voice in independent American cinema.

Emilie de Brigard, a leading historian of anthropological film, will lead the History of Anthropological Film seminar.

An additional vitality and closeness in participation is promoted by the option of living and dining in the campus dorms.

Hampshire College is the Summer Institute's annual site because of its excellent facilities, including a complete photography darkroom, one-inch television studio, enclosed projection in all classrooms and ample space for the workshops.

For students interested in obtaining academic credits from their experience, six Hampshire College transfer credits can be earned upon completion of the entire three week program.

Full and partial scholarships are available and awarded on the basis of need and qualifications. Tuition for the full course is $300.00 plus lab fees and optional room and board.

Applications and course catalogs can be obtained by writing to Gisela Hoelcl, Summer Institute Director, University Film Study Center, Box 275, Cambridge, Mass. 02138. The application deadline is May 16.

How the fine arts center got its trunk

by David Miller

Sometimes things work and sometimes they don't work. And sometimes even when they don't work they still work pretty well. There was (and is) this Art Student Susan Doskocil, see, and she thought that it would be a good idea if everybody got together and tied up the Fine Arts Center. That's right, take a lot of sections of rope-like substances, join them together and encircle the mammoth complex (also known as the Factory and Moebius Dick), making a prisoner of this behemoth, this triumph of form over function. And after this building-like object was encircled, some one would roll the rope into a ball, row across the pond with it and join the other end to a long string thrown from the tenth floor of the Campus Center (daily featuring a Caste of Thousands). And so Ms. D put up a lot of posters and contacted a lot of friends and waited for last Saturday the third at 10:00 a.m. to arrive.

Well, what happened was that at the appointed time a motley bunch of 20 people gathered round. We succeeded in encircling the building by about 11:00. I had to split for a couple minutes to make a tape for someone; when I got back the ball was being unwound along the bank of the pond, as no boat had been produced. We got it to the Campus Center end of the pond, and the man handling it began to slowly trace it to the center. As it reached the middle the line broke. A wailing and a gnashing of teeth ensued; we tied it to a stump, ran it over Metawampe's mulberry bushes and as someone went back to trace the other end the person on the tenth floor dropped the string. A few trials and Viola! (a musical term) there was a clear long line running from the end of the pond to the top of the waffle. The crowd cheered. The other end was still being traced but by now it was 1:00 p.m. and we sort of had to leave, work to do and do more time for art that day.

And wo what happened? As the bystander who didn't trip over the line said, "Well, this is art, see, you can't ask why, you just have to accept it." He was being good-natured about it, but there was that same old who-do-they-think-they-are undertone in his voice. And I can't agree with him, you can ask why and you have a right to get an answer. To begin with, it was a Thing to Do, and there really aren't too many of those — a somewhat arbitrary activity drawing a group of strangers together on a wonderful May day, fun and no hard feelings. But go back to the prisoner image — we tie up the Fine Arts Center because the Fine Arts Center ties us up, a lovely piece of concrete sculpture (I mean that) that they tried to put a building into. And now us artist types have to work there, and were we ever consulted? And were any students ever consulted about the Campus Center, the most outstanding economic black hole around? Concrete architecture is not the issue, the issue is the environment, our Man-made spaces and our lack of control. Let us now make these spaces our prisoners, if there must be prisoners at all.

But it didn't work, you say, after all the line did break and was not repaired. Well yes, but you know the other part of this project was a spiritual exercise. Choose a task to do, let it not hurt anyone and do make it improbable. Now follow it to the end and see where it takes you. We didn't manage to run a line high in the air between those two large rocks (and if we had — what a bisection of creation would have been made!), but we did accomplish a good many things, have a number of unique experiences, meet friendly people and perhaps learn just a little bit about how to proceed in life and art. With open senses, open to perceive the value of things as they happen.

works in progress

"Works in Progress"
Commonwealth Room, Student Union
May 8 & 9: reception Fri. May 9, 8 p.m.

by Kit Browne

Works in Progress will be a different kind of show, especially for this time of year, for in the spring comes a parade of BFA and MFA shows, the concentrated work of seniors and graduate art students. Occasionally a daring underclassperson who either knows the right people or simply has a lot of up-n-at-em will put up an exhibit, but it may well pass those few days relatively unnoticed...

This is a group of BFA majors, primarily sophomores. Joni Michaelson, who is the guiding enthusiasm of the show, says that the group hopes to encourage more interaction among art students at this middle level. By the end of sophomore year, these students know pretty much where they are headed, what they want to pursue. They are working towards that BFA thesis, and beyond it. Each person's work may or may not be unified, for a great variety of experiments and problems are being worked out, unfinished, "in progress."

This show then, is unified by the somewhat artificial common denominator of year in school — but also by the enthusiasm of growing ability and self-confidence as gains are made. The works themselves range from small prints to large paintings, and include many media such as photography, sculpture, ceramics, and ink drawings as well.

It is to be hoped that with the increased gallery space available next year at Herter, more such groups will be encouraged to let their fellow students know that quality exists at all levels of education.

FILM RATINGS
++++Dy-no-mite!
+++Never had better popcorn
++I'm glad I sneaked in
+Still cleanin' the puke out of my shoes

AT LONG LAST LOVE +1. A "musical" by Peter Bogdanovich which is so bad that the projectors almost turn themselves off. Burt Reynolds and Cybill Shepherd sing and dance even though neither of them can sing or dance. God almighty, is nothing sacred? If it isn't, it's still probably better than this diarrhea. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield).

BELLE DU JOUR-DIARY OF A CHAMBERMAID+++
For Luis Bunuel buffs, a double feature just for you. Belle stars Catherine Denueve, incidentally, in a story about a housewife who looks into prostitution as a means of relieving her boredom. Another intelligently-chosen program from the Amherst Cinema.

THE BUDGET ADVENTURE+
Political thriller about a federal plot to extract money from a large university. Michael Dukakis stars as the Governor, who bravely faces the masses to clarify his intentions. The film suffers, though, because ten per cent of it was cut out to make it "acceptable" to the average peon. (S.U.B. 5-5, 8:00)

CHINATOWN++++
Roman Polanski's latest, a departure from his supernatural tendencies, but still quite unusual. Jack Nicholson plays an eagle-eye detective who sticks his nose into the wrong case and pays for it in the end. Faye Dunaway is great as a millionairess haunted by a turbulent past. This film got royally ripped off at the Academy Awards, but we all know that doesn't mean shit to a tree; works of art cannot and should not be compared. (Campus Cinemas).

CITY LIGHTS++++
A Charlie Chaplin classic from his vintage 1930's period. Come dressed in a derby, fake mustache, and cane and look like a god-damned idiot. (TONIGHT in the S.U.B. at 7, 8:30, 10:00)

THE CONVERSATION++++
An excellent "modern-day horror story" by Francis Ford Coppola about an electronic surveillance man and the paranoia which results from an assignment revolving around a possible murder. Gene Hackman does a fantastic job as the "Best Bugger on the West Coast," as his transition from mild-manners to blatant insanity unsettles us all. With the Age of Watergate, this film is as timely as it is good, even though it has proven too subtle to be well-received in this country. (C.C.A., 5-11, 7 and 9).

DEATH WISH+++
The only good Charles Bronson film ever made. It deals with a wealthy architect who takes the law into his own hands and calmly shoots muggers off the streets after his own wife and daughter are accosted. The idea is cute, but the portrayals of the muggers are too stereotyped and West-Side-Storyish. Still, the acting shines and the New York City photography provides a spellbinding background for the shenanigans. Michael Winner directs his first winner. (Mountain Farms Four)

DOCTOR ZHIVAGO++++
Epic saga of a striving Russian medical man torn between two women during the heart of the Revolution. David Lean's direction takes us from Moscow to the Eastern Grasslands and smack through a blistering Siberian snowstorm. Omar Sharif stars as Zhivago, with Julie Christie, Alec Guiness, Rod Steiger, Tom Courtenay and others smoothing out the cast. Excellent script, art direction, and haunting music. (Mountain Farms Four).

ESCAPE TO WITCH MOUNTAIN+++
I knew I'd find myself covering a Disney film if the campus schedule got really sparse. This one stars Ray Milland in a "scary" departure from their usual invisible cars and neurotic animals. Walt even cameos as one of the ghosts. (Showcase Cinemas).

FUNNY LADY++
Yuk, yuk, Barbra Streisand plays herself because she can't help it, and the results are only entertaining if you're middle-aged. Most of us up here are not. (Showcase Cinemas).

THE GODFATHER++++
The Italian classic. Brando, Pacino, Caan, and the horse's head. (C.C.A., 5-9, 7 and 10:15).

THE GREAT WALDO PEPPER++
Robert Redford's blue eyes and America's blue skies collide in this tale about World War I flying aces and their aviation feats which follow the end of the War. All the action you'll see is in the coming attractions, so it might be wise to take in a movie where you know this one hasn't arrived yet. Directed by George Roy Hill.

THE LONGEST YARD+++
Burt Reynolds in a funny prison camp movie involving a football game against the guards. Not filmed in Attica. Also stars Eddie Albert, everyone's favorite leading man. Wear a jockstrap over your head and get thrown out of the theatre. (Mountain Farms)

MURDER ON THE ORIENT EXPRESS+++
Albert Finney as detective Hercule Poirot in this sparkling adaptation of Agatha Christie's mystery. An all-star international cast and outrageous costumes decorate the lens, which is already vaseline-coated. Directed by Sidney Lumet ("Serpico"). Campus Cinemas and Academy of Music).

SHAMPOO++
The first film about a hairdresser features Warren Beatty as the scissors-stud who keeps his customers after shop hours. Julie Christie, Goldie Hawn, and Lee Grant play his girlfriends in this tight, nicely photographed, but incredibly overrated saga of adultery, sex before marriage (yegads), and other assorted hot combs. (Showcase Cinemas).

THREE STOOGES AND THE LITTLE RASCALS+++
Watch Moe, Larry, Curley Joe and-or Shemp as they beat the shit out of each other with sledge hammers and pliers for an hour and a half. The Marx Brothers are three times more clever, but these pretzel-benders still manage to grind out laughter. Teamed with some ancient shorts of the Little Rascals, the original hippies. (TONIGHT in the C.C.A. at 7 and 9).

TOMMY++++(keep going!)
The Who's rock opera, transformed into a first-class mind-fucker by Ken Russell. Elton John, Eric Clapton, Tina Turner, Jack Nicholson, Oliver Reed, and Ann-Margret help Ken and Peter out with a little acting. (Still at the Showcase Cinemas).

A VERY NATURAL THING—SON OF THE SHEIK
A gay film which I can't say I've seen, but if you're gay it might be worth your while to see the subject handled tastefully for a change. With Son of the Sheik, a Rudolph Valentino oldie. (S.U.B., 5-11, Natural Thing at 7, Sheik at 8:30 and 9:45).

WHITE LIGHTNING+?+?
Just one look at the crotch-itching advertisement showing Burt Reynolds with his shirt open (what else is new?) should be enough to make all you banana-molesters run to the theatre. If not, then you're making a wise move. Burt takes craps just like anyone else. (Mountain Farms).

Profs claim budget cut reason for tenure denials

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
Staff Reporter

Two faculty members were notified this week that they have been denied tenure and the action appears to be directly related to the impending budgetary crisis at UMass.

Randall Current and Paul Jenkins, both assistant professors in the English department, had tenure denied to them after having been unanimously approved by the personnel committee of that department last semester.

Joseph Frank, chairman of the English department, ruled against Current, while Jeremiah Allen, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, made an unfavorable recommendation for tenure.

Current and Jenkins claim they were denied tenure recommendations because of "institutional needs," and not on the basis of the traditional criteria of teaching, publishing and service to the community.

"It makes mincemeat out of (Gov. Michael S.) Dukakis' promise that any budget cuts wouldn't affect out education," said Jenkins.

He added that the test of institutional need is "clearly a way of disguising that people must be cut," and that in a "normal year" tenure would be approved.

When asked why he denied a recommendation of tenure for Current, Frank said he made the "very reluctant" decision on the basis of "mostly scholarship."

Allen remained silent on his decision, saying it would be "grossly inappropriate" to comment on personnel decisions.

However, Current said, "I'd put publishing last (on a list of priorities), only because I think we have a different mission than we had 10 years ago."

He explained the English department, especially since UMass is a state university, is not going to place its students into graduate school.

"We first have to radicalize students' feelings about humanities, literature and life," Current added.

Because of the budget cuts which are expected, Current and Jenkins, as assistant professors, felt they were "vulnerable" to not achieving tenure. Both are in their sixth year of teaching at UMass.

Town accepts JFK library campus site

By CINDY ROGERS
MDC Staff

The Amherst Town Meeting last night voted to endorse a proposed John F. Kennedy library site on campus, provided that plans conform to federal and state regulations and traffic and visitor studies continue to show minimal impact. The vote went 180 to 28.

The JFK Library motion approved was a substitute of the original article. The original article petitioned by Floyd Bailey, coordinator of the Progressive Candidates Pool (PCP) asked that Town Meeting members reserve opinion on locating the JFK Library at UMass until an "exhausted environmental impact study is prepared and a public hearing is held."

In the three-hour session, the Town Meeting failed to reach a two-thirds majority in passing the proposed Zoning by-law, article on the warrant.

Doug Stanley, Town Meeting member who read the article said the JFK library-museum complex would burden Amherst and increase the flow of traffic in addition, he said, "tourists attractions are going to attract more tourist attractions."

Chairperson of the selectmen Nancy Eddy substituted the motion because of the wording of the article clarifying some of Stanley's points. She said although the Environmental Impact Study compiled by the JFK corporation did predict 800 cars would come to Amherst daily, if divided by the number of highways in Amherst, "the impact is not as great." Eddy also said that as far as the town becoming a "tourist industry", the Town Meeting would have control over this development.

Eddy said the board of selectmen saw the Amherst location as an "education advantage" for the town.

Wood fears service cut implications

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

"Support services is the place where we're going to get hurt and hurt badly," said UMass President Robert C. Wood last night to 50 faculty and deans of the social behavioral sciences.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery added that 80 per cent of the professional non-teaching "administration" staff are in the admissions office and counselling programs. If this staff is cut, it is an automatic cut in support services, he said.

Secretary of Education Paul Parks has said that a 10 per cent budget cut would not affect academics or support services.

"Probably the hardest thing we face is graduate education," said Wood, "Not whether it will exist or not, but in what size, what duration, and what can be the expectations of the faculty."

Wood's speech, which was followed by questions from the faculty, was unannounced beforehand and held in a lower level campus center room.

Mentioning specifically library acquisitions, health services and counselors, Wood said, "We made a great leap forward in the 60's in the area of academics, but fell behind on services. Now services have been increased and I feel they are closely interrelated to academics.

"The really hard thing is to judge how much of the critical mass do our programs constitute. There is a disagreement among ourselves about what we are really teaching."

Wood said he was fearful of leaving the budget situation the way it is now and then coming back in the fall to a "take it or leave it" crisis.

"It is not enough to sign off on a budget this year under high pressure without some sense of what this will do from now until the 1980's."

The president explained that in consequence he has been working on an "Amherst Document" all spring which is still incomplete. The document includes a committment to graduate school and lists" what kinds of things must be maintained at all costs."

Wood said he was "insulted and disturbed" when the Senate Ways and Means Committee made comparisons of faculty salaries and contact hours with students. The study was conducted by committee chairman Senator James A. Kelley (D-Oxford).

"In the past, we have had a highly stable political system which has been good for institutions," said Wood. "The speaker and president of the senate were knowledge about and committed to public education. We were able to make our cases in a procedure context.

"Now there is an instability in leadership, the speaker and president have announced other interests. There are 60 to 70 new members in the general court. In effect the governor did not submit a budget in January, there were no hearings or legal things to which we could respond," he said.

Tartaglia says

Recent TOC election showed desire for change

By SANDY CARLIN
Staff Reporter

Newly elected President of the Top of the Campus Club (TOC) Tony Tartaglia said yesterday, "The significance of the election was that when you lose faith in the people running an organization it is time for a change. The election indicated this."

Tartaglia, who was elected president of the club at a meeting on Wednesday night, replaces UMass Atty. Sidney Myers who has been the president since the formation of the TOC club five years ago.

"I didn't elect myself," said Tartaglia, "In fact, I didn't even know half the people in the room." Regarding the election Tartaglia also said, "The Campus Center management had as much opportunity to elect their candidates and form their own slate." Referring to an episode at the meeting where Myers ordered the door to be locked at 6:00 p.m. Tartaglia said, "The fact that they tried to close the meeting was indicative of their own intentions to vote in their own candidates."

In response to the fact that eleven students were elected to the TOC Board of Directors Tartaglia said, "Since students make up the largest majority of the TOC club, then why shouldn't they have the largest amount of seats on the Board of Directors." He also said, "We do support cooperation with the Campus Center management, but it is gratuitous to think that students will not be able to run a Campus Center organization."

Tartaglia said that the new Board of Directors were not looking to make a great many changes and were not planning to "over use their power."

Commenting on the idea of Hotel and Restaurant management students running the TOC Tartaglia said, "Anything in the nature of hotel and restaurant management must still be discussed with Dr. Cournoyer." Norman Cournoyer is the only non-student on the Board. Tartaglia further added, "We are open to any suggestions dealing with running the TOC, but we are not committed to any one idea right now."

The by-laws of the TOC now stipulate that there must be at least one open meeting of the club each year, but Tartaglia said that he planned to have all of the TOC meetings open next year. He said, "The power of the club is in the shareholders, not the president."

Tartaglia also commented, "I think Sid Myers did a really fine job and has been an excellent person in the president's role." He also said, "One of the main reasons we decided to vote someone in his place was because he (Myers) had publicly announced that he was stepping down from the office."

The TOC club constitution orders that the President preside at all the meetings of the general membership and along with the treasurer should handle "the general care and direction of the shares of the corporation."

★ Profs claim budget reason for denial

They suspected that the English department had made a rating system for the professors being considered for tenure this year.

"We sure think there was a ranking," said Current, adding "When budget cuts come, they rely on the old system, that of rating people."

Jenkins sympathized with Allen and former Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern, who also has a voice in recommending tenure, by recognizing they are caught between serving the university and living within a budget. "It puts them in a terribly compromised situation," he said.

However, Jenkins said he expected the faculty to be defended.

"You would hope they (Allen and Gluckstern) would stand up to budget pressures and fight them," he said. "I think it is wrong for them to go on compromising."

Current and Jenkins are seeking to gain support from students and faculty members of the English department, but they do not expect to be given tenure in the future. They said 10 or 11 faculty members of the English department will be up for tenure next year, and the addition of their two names would only increase the "dogfight" for approval.

"I'd like to see support from all the faculty," said Current.

Jenkins said the denial of tenure is "inhumane, and in the end destructive" because "it hurts morale terribly."

He added that he and Current may work through grievance procedures to protect their jobs.
